JOHN W. MOORE.

The bill (H. R. 9821) granting a pension to John W. Moore was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Moore, late of Company K, Eightieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month and such higher rate or rates of pension as he may hereafter show himself to be entitled to under existing pension laws, the same to be paid to him without any deduction or rebate on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. DEBOE March 26, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9821) granting a pension to John W. Moore, have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives is as follows:

"The records of the War Department show that the beneficiary named in this bill, now 68 years of age, served as a private in Company K, Eightieth Ohio Infantry, from January 3, 1862, to January 11, 1865, when honorably discharged, and that he again served as second lieutenant in Company A, One hundred and ninety-seventh Ohio Infantry, from April 12, 1865, to July 31, 1865, when honorably mustered out; that these records further show that while a member of the Eightieth Ohio he was on sick leave in Ohio in September and October, 1863.

"He first applied for pension in March, 1887, alleging that he contracted chronic diarrhea and resulting piles while a second lieutenant in the One hundred and ninety-seventh Ohio Volunteers in May, 1865, and upon due proof he was pensioned for said disabilities as a second lieutenant in the One hundred and ninety-seventh Ohio Infantry at one-half of total of his rank, namely, $8, from March 9, 1887, and this rating was increased to $12 from April 15, 1891.

"In 1892 he filed a claim on account of additional disabilities, namely, catarrh of the head and throat, and deafness. During the special examination of that claim it appeared from evidence adduced on said examination, including the pensioner's own sworn statement, that he incurred the chronic diarrhea for which he was pensioned while serving as a private in the Eightieth Ohio in 1863 and not while serving as second lieutenant in 1865 in the One hundred and ninety-seventh Ohio, and consequently the Pension Office held that the allowance of his pension based upon rank of second lieutenant had been erroneous and contrary to law and made a reissue of his pension certificate, allowing him, instead of the pension of $8 per month which he had received from March 9, 1887, a pension of $4 per month from that date, and instead of $12 per month from April 15, 1891, a rating of $6 from the last-named date, and the Government has withheld this pension until a sum accrues sufficient to reimburse the Government for the amount erroneously paid and based upon the rank of second lieutenant.

"On October 17, 1900, the Pension Bureau again increased his pension to $8 per month from August 1, 1900, on account of the pensioned causes.

"It will thus be seen that the soldier has not been drawing any pension since September, 1899, and that it will still take about seven years before he will have reimbursed the Government in the amount held to have been erroneously drawn.

"The soldier testified in 1899 that he believed his statement that his disability arose while he was a private was strictly true, and that it was also true that he remained in the service until 1865, and that it seemed to him that the mere fact that his disability which arose in the former part of his service, and which was greatly exaggerated by the latter part of his service, should not deprive him from the lieutenant's pension, inasmuch as it made his recovery to health impossible.

"The claim on account of the new disabilities named above—namely, catarrh of the head and throat and deafness—was rejected by the Pension Bureau in March, 1899, upon the ground of no record evidence of the existence of the alleged disabilities in the service, no medical evidence in the service or at discharge, and the best obtainable testimony, aided by a special examination, having failed to establish origin in the service of said disabilities.

"An examination of the testimony obtained by the special examiner as to the new disabilities shows that the action of the Pension Bureau rejecting said claim was proper, some of the witnesses who testified ex parte having repudiated their affidavits as to the existence of these new disabilities in the service, and others testified merely from hearsay.

"As stated above, the Pension Bureau held, October 17, 1900, that this soldier was entitled to a pension of $8 per month for chronic diarrhea, piles, and resulting disease of the rectum, and this action was based upon the certificate of medical examination made August 1, 1900, which examination, aside from the disability arising from diarrhea and disease of the rectum, rated him $8 for rheumatism, $6 for catarrh, $6 for disease of the heart, and $6 for severe deafness of the right ear.

"Under the law the action of the Pension Bureau in reducing this soldier's pension and pensioning him according to the rank he held at the time of the incurrance of the disability for which he is on the rolls was undoubtedly correct, but the soldier committed no fraud, believing, and perhaps correctly so, that his subsequent services as a commissioned officer aggravated the disabilities which he contracted as an enlisted man.

"Under these circumstances your committee believes that the Government should not hereafter reimburse itself out of the pension to which this soldier is now entitled, or to which he may hereafter show himself to be entitled, for the money erroneously drawn as of the rank of lieutenant, and that hence relief by Congress is warranted to that extent, and the bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass."

Your committee adopt the foregoing report and recommend the passage of the bill when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Moore, late of Company K, Eightieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month and such higher rate or rates of pension as he may hereafter show himself to be entitled to under existing pension laws, the same to be paid to him without any deduction or rebate on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension."

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. ROBINSON.

The bill (S. 4381) granting an increase of pension to John S. Robinson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John S. Robinson, late of Company G, First Regiment Colorado Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in the case be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. PATTERSON March 31, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4381) granting an increase of pension to John S. Robinson, have examined the same and report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $12 to $30 per month the pension of John S. Robinson, late of Company G, First Regiment Colorado Volunteer Cavalry.

Mr. Robinson served from September 25, 1861, to March 17, 1863. He was discharged for disability due to chronic rheumatism and scurvy. He is 74 years of age, and is now resident at East Livermore, Me.

Mr. Robinson is receiving a pension of $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, for disease of mouth, injury to left hand, and debility. He made claim under the general law August 31, 1891, alleging that he contracted scurvy at Fort Craig, N. Mex., in August, 1862, and that the same had resulted in disease of stomach. This claim was allowed June 11, 1898, for disease of mouth, result of scurvy, at the rate of $6 per month, but no certificate for this pension was issued for the reason that the claimant was already in receipt of $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. Robinson is a complete mental and physical wreck. He is suffering from senile dementia and requires constant care and attention. He has not been out of the house for a year. He has been of unsound mind for the last ten years. While his wife was alive she cared for him as if he were a child, but she died about four years ago, and since then he has become completely broken down, both mentally and physically. For a while he was confined in an insane asylum at Pueblo, Colo., for his better protection, and remained there until some relatives took him under their charge. He has no income except his pension and is entirely dependent.

These facts are all substantiated by evidence filed with the bill. Considering his great age, his faithful service, his poverty, and his almost helpless condition, your committee are of the opinion that an increase of his pension would be eminently just and proper.

The bill is reported back favorably with a recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John S. Robinson, late of Company G, First Regiment Colorado Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

That in the case of the death of the helpless child, Robert McDonald, on whose account the pension of Barbara McDonald is increased, the pension of said Barbara McDonald shall continue only at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said helpless child;

And insert:

That in the event of the death of Robert McDonald, helpless and dependent son of said soldier, Robert McDonald, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine;

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Barbara McDonald, widow of Robert McDonald, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, however, That in the event of the death of Robert McDonald, helpless and dependent son of said soldier, Robert McDonald, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the words "Robert McDonald," after the words "said soldier," in line 3, page 2, be stricken out.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

LA MYRA V. KENDIG.

The bill (H. R. 1278) granting an increase of pension to La Myra V. Kendig was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of La Myra V. Kendig, widow of Harry S. Kendig, late of Company A, One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DEBOE March 31, 1902:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1278) granting an increase of pension to La Myra V. Kendig, have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto appended, is adopted and the passage of the bill is recommended.

The House report is as follows:

"Harry S. Kendig, the soldier named in this bill, served as a private and corporal in Company A, One hundred and sixty-fourth Ohio Infantry, from May 2 to August 27, 1864, when mustered out with his company.

He never applied for pension under the general law, but was pensioned in 1894 under the act of June 27, 1890, at $6 per month from December 13, 1893, and at $8 from April 30, 1894, for partial inability to earn a support by manual labor by reason of senile debility and disease of heart. This rating was subsequently increased to $12 per month from September 18, 1895.

"He died October 30, 1896.

"The beneficiary named in the bill, now 68 years of age, who married the soldier on May 13, 1866, is now and has been since December 14, 1896, pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, at $8 per month, and such pension was allowed upon proof of her marriage to the soldier, his death, that she was his legal widow, and that she was dependent upon her own labor, etc.

"The beneficiary never applied for pension under the general law.

"There has been filed with your committee the affidavit of the beneficiary to the effect that while single, her father having been a man of considerable means, she was supplied with all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life; that after her marriage to the soldier she was supported by him in the manner to which she had been accustomed; that later on she inherited from her father a considerable sum of money, which her husband invested in what seemed to be a good paying mercantile business, which, however, proved to be a failure, and that thereby she lost all her inheritance with all of her husband's capital; that at his death she was left absolutely without any means except the pension of $8 per month, which she is now receiving; that during the last three years of his life he was a helpless invalid, and such health as she possessed was completely destroyed in nursing and caring for him, she having no means with which to employ assistance; that she is now without help and unable to help herself and has no one upon whom she can depend for assistance.

"A statement from the auditor for Seneca County, Ohio, has also been filed, showing that the name of the beneficiary does not appear on the records for assessments of real and personal property lists for taxation in said county.

"Your committee are of the opinion that the beneficiary, who is now helpless herself and in destitute circumstances, and who destroyed her health in nursing and caring for her invalid husband during many years prior to his death, should receive at the hands of the Government the pension provided under the general law for widows of enlisted men, namely, $12 per month, in order that she may be enabled to procure for herself the necessities of life; hence the bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Jethro M. Getman, alias James M. Getman."

JOHN BROWN.

The bill (S. 4335) granting an increase of pension to John Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions, with amendments, in line 7, before the word "Volunteer," to insert "Maryland," and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Brown, late of Company I, Thirtieth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALICE BOZEMAN.

The bill (H. R. 5712) granting a pension to Alice Bozeman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Alice Bozeman, the helpless and dependent daughter of Phineas L. Bozeman, late of Captain Lawler's company, Illinois Mounted Volunteers, war with Mexico, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE M'DANIEL.

The bill (H. R. 2287) granting an increase of pension to George McDaniel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George McDaniel, late of Company H, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID C. MAPLES.

The bill (H. R. 10692) granting an increase of pension to David C. Maples was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of David C. Maples, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREEMAN R. E. CHANABERRY.

The bill (H. R. 6713) granting an increase of pension to Freeman R. E. Chanaberry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "First," to strike out "Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Freeman R. E. Chanaberry, late of Company K, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CLARA W. McNAIR.

The bill (S. 1225) granting a pension to Clara W. McNair was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Clara W. McNair, widow of Frederick V. McNair, late rear-admiral, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Clara W. McNair."

SARAH M. SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 10415) granting a pension to Sarah M. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Sarah M. Smith, widow of Andrew J. Smith, late of Captain Smith's company, Hays' regiment, Texas Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and to pay her a pension of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9602) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

Mr. HALE. What has become of the Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock arrived and the unfinished business was laid before the Senate. Agreement was asked that that might be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of pension bills, which has been concluded so far as the agreement extended, and the unfinished business was again laid before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. It will take only a few moments to go on and complete the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will allow me one moment, the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who was to continue his remarks, is not here. I have sent for him. In the meanwhile we might go on with the Calendar until he comes in.

Mr. HALE. We might go on with the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I would have no objection to that course except that the cases now reached were reported only yesterday, and we have not the reports and the bills on our desks.

Mr. BAILEY entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is now here.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have disposed of all the cases reported on March 31, except one.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Texas is ready to proceed—

Mr. BAILEY. I am not anxious, however, and if the Senate has any other matter it desires to complete, I will yield for it.

Mr. HALE. It is just as well for the Senator to go on.

Mr. MONEY. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the pending bill. I ask that it be printed, and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill now under consideration in order that it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, when I yielded the floor yesterday afternoon I had reached that point in the argument where, after admitting as a matter of law the contention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that if oleomargarine is a deleterious food product, it falls within the power of Congress to control it as an article of interstate and foreign commerce, I was considering whether as a matter of fact oleomargarine is deleterious. I had read to the Senate the opinions of three distinguished scientific experts, all asserting that oleomargarine is a wholesome, palatable, and a digestible article of food; and I now desire to supplement those statements by one somewhat more extended and, if possible, more convincing than those which I read on yesterday.

Prof. Charles Harrington, who is the assistant professor of hygiene in the medical school of Harvard University, has published an excellent work entitled "Practical Hygiene," in which he discusses this very question of oleomargarine, and as a matter of saving my voice I will ask the Secretary to read that part which I have indicated by pencil marks, beginning on page 112.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Oleomargarine has been misrepresented to the public to a greater extent probably than any other article of food. From the time of its first appearance in the market as a competitor of butter, there has been a constant attempt to create and foster a prejudice against it as an unwholesome article, made from unclean refuse of various kinds, a vehicle for diseased germs, and a disseminator of tapeworms and other unwelcome parasites. It has been said to be made from soap grease, from the carcasses of animals dead of disease, from grease extracted from sewer sludge, and from a variety of other articles equally unadapted to its manufacture.

The most absurd statement which the author has seen appeared in the annual report of the board of health of a community large enough and rich enough to be enabled to afford better service; this was that a large part of the annual output was made from the grease of dogs shot while suffering from rabies by the police in the streets of large cities.

The publication of a great mass of untruth can not fail to have its desired effect, not solely on the minds of the ignorant, but even of some of those of over average intelligence. So it is that a prejudice was created against this valuable food product, but it is gradually becoming less and less pronounced.

The truth concerning oleomargarine is that it is made only from the cleanest materials in the cleanest possible manner, that it is quite as wholesome as butter, and that when sold for what it is and at its proper price it brings into the dietary of those who can not afford the better grades of butter an important fat food much superior in flavor and keeping property to the cheaper grades of butter which bring a better price. Oleomargarine can not be made from rancid fat, and in its manufacture great care must be exercised to exclude any material, however slightly tainted.

It is not and can not be made from fats having a marked or distinctive taste, and its flavor is derived wholly from the milk or genuine butter employed in its manufacture. It contains, as a rule, less water than does genuine butter, and consequently any difference in food value is in its favor. It undergoes decomposition much more slowly, and, indeed, may be kept many months without becoming rancid. Much has been said concerning its digestibility, and alarmists have gone so far as to claim that it is quite indigestible and likely to prove a prolific cause of dyspepsia, quite forgetting that the materials from which it is made have held a place in the dietaries of all civilized peoples since long before butter was promoted from its position as an ointment to that of an article of food. Many comparative studies have been made on this point, and results in general have shown that there is little if any difference. H. Lührig has proved by careful experiment that the two are to all intents and purposes exactly alike in point of digestibility.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. President, I will add to these scientific opinions an extract from a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. Quoting from a New York case this highest judicial tribunal of the land says:

It appears from the opinion that on the trial of that action "it was proved on the part of the defendant by distinguished chemists that oleomargarine was composed of the same elements as dairy butter. That the only difference between them was that it contained a smaller proportion of fatty substance known as butterine. That this butterine exists in dairy butter only in a small proportion, from 3 to 6 per cent.

"That it exists in no other substance than butter made from milk, and it is introduced to oleomargarine butter by adding to oleomargarine stock some milk, cream, or butter, and churning, and when this is done it has all the elements of natural butter; but there must always be a smaller percentage of butterine in the manufactured product than in the butter made from milk. The only effect of the butterine is to give flavor to the butter, having nothing to do with its wholesomeness. That the oleaginous substances in the oleomargarine are substantially identical with those produced from milk or cream. Professor Chandler testified that the only difference between the two articles was that dairy butter had more butterine; that oleomargarine contained not over 1 per cent of that substance, while dairy butter might contain 4 or 5 per cent, and that if 4 or 5 per cent of butterine were added to the oleomargarine there would be no difference. It would be butter, irrespective of the sources; they would be the same substances."

And so, Mr. President, the almost unbroken authority of every disinterested witness who has considered the question is that oleomargarine is a wholesome, palatable, and a digestible food product, and they fully dispose of so much of the argument of both the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Wisconsin as predicated the power of Congress over this article upon the theory that it is deleterious to health.

THE TAXING POWER.

Besides the right based upon the deleterious character of the article, the only other ground, according to both the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Massachusetts, upon which this bill can be defended as a constitutional exercise of power on the part of Congress is that we have a right to tax uncolored oleomargarine for the purpose of raising revenue, and, resulting from that, we have a right to tax colored oleomargarine as a means of preventing the evasion of the tax upon the uncolored article. I prefer, however, that the Senator from Massachusetts should state his own position, and consequently I shall read his words from the printed RECORD. After maintaining, as I have stated above, the right of Congress over oleomargarine upon the theory that it is deleterious, he then proceeds:

We have another right which is well settled, and that is in selecting objects upon which we shall put the tax in raising revenue. We have the right to select objects the burdening of which is not a public injury, and to omit or pass by objects which are a clear benefit, and every burden, or load, or condition placed upon which is a public disadvantage.

We might, I suppose, for the mere purpose of raising a revenue, tax the production of wheat, or of milk, or of honest and wholesome butter as an excise, but we do not do that because we do not want to put any burden upon such products, which are absolutely and unquestionably beneficial. So we take brandy, whisky, tobacco, beer, and articles which, while they yield us a revenue, we do not mean to prohibit their sale if we could. Still nobody claims that if the sale or use of beer, or tobacco, or brandy, or whisky be burdened the public has suffered any disadvantage.

Now, that being true, and it being a sound Constitutional principle and a sound principle in the exercise of legislative discretion, we have undertaken to tax oleomargarine under the use of our taxing power on the same principles and for a like reason, and moderately, just as we have undertaken to tax beer and whisky and brandy.

This fraudulent and spurious butter is not only, if what the gentlemen who have spoken are right, as I suppose they are, an injury to the farmers' butter, but it is an escape by fraud or forgery from exhibiting and laying open for purposes of taxation a genuine product of oleomargarine which we have a right to tax. Just as we had the right to tax out of existence the State-bank currency because it interfered with our national currency, which we had a right to provide, to establish, and to regulate, we have a right to tax out of existence spurious oleomargarine, because it interferes with the genuine oleomargarine, which is a genuine and legitimate object of taxation.

To all of this I readily assent as a matter of law. Nobody doubts the power of Congress to select such articles as its wisdom may dictate from which to raise the money necessary to support the Government; nor do I doubt that in the selection of the articles upon which to levy a tax Congress may be governed by considerations of expediency, and may levy the impost upon oleomargarine rather than upon butter, because it may believe that the oleomargarine manufacturers can better afford to pay it than the butter makers. I also assent to what appears to be the subordinate, but what, here, is really the principal statement, that when Congress lays a tax on a given article it has the perfect right to lay a tax upon another article for the purpose of more effectively collecting the tax first levied. In other words, and applying the rule to the case at bar, if the tax on uncolored oleomargarine is intended to raise revenue for the Government, and if the greater tax on colored oleomargarine is intended to better insure the collection of the tax on uncolored oleomargarine, then that ends the argument with me, and must end it with every sensible man.

But, Mr. President, does any Senator here believe that this bill lays a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound on uncolored oleomargarine for the sake of the revenue it will bring into the Treasury? Or, if there be one so blind as to believe in that, is there one who is blinder still and believes that the tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleomargarine is levied in order to more effectively collect the tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound upon the uncolored article? I will not hazard giving offense to my associates by declaring that no man can believe either statement to be true, and as two distinguished Senators have advanced these legal propositions in justification of the bill I shall assume that, as to them, at least, there must appear some facts to which they can apply their law. Granting that they must believe that the bill carries such a purpose, I desire to show them, as well as all other members of this body, that such a purpose is not even pretended by the originators and promoters of this legislation. I will go further, and from the lips of the most eminent and influential advocates of this measure, I will show that they have admitted that the taxation is a subterfuge and a false pretense.

Ex-Governor Hoard, in a hearing before a committee of the House of Representatives, declared in answer to a question:

The Government taxed State banks out of existence. Federal legislation can proceed only along that line. We unfortunately have not a form of government in that respect like Canada. In Canada they can put a fraud or a cheat out of existence; but we have to proceed along the lines we can.

In another place, and in reply to practically the same question in a different form, ex-Governor Hoard again replied:

I have to do business with the things I have, with the machinery I have. I can not approach it from the Federal standpoint except through taxation.

Governor Hoard was not talking about raising revenue to support the Government when he says he "can not approach it from a Federal standpoint except through taxation," but he is talking about discouraging the sale of colored oleomargarine. If anything could make his meaning plainer than his testimony before the House committee this year, it would only be necessary to refer to his testimony before the House committee in 1901, when he unequivocally and unhesitatingly stated why a tax was levied by this bill. He was not then under cross-examination; but in his direct and voluntary statement he says:

To give added force to the first section of the bill it is also provided in the second section that a tax of 10 cents a pound shall be imposed on all oleomargarine in the color or semblance of butter. In plain words, this is repressive taxation.

Mr. Hoard's friends and associates in all of this agitation have been more candid than some of the Senators in this discussion, and have not hesitated to declare that the tax was levied not for revenue, but, as they describe it, to destroy a fraud. In his testimony before a committee of the Senate at its last session, Mr. George L. Flanders, the assistant commissioner of agriculture of the State of New York, speaking of this bill, declared:

I hope it will tax fraud out of oleomargarine. That is all I want.

Mr. Flanders made no pretense that he expected or desired the tax to raise revenue, but only that it should tax the fraud out of oleomargarine. Before the same committee and during the same year Mr. H. G. Adams, who is, I believe, the food and dairy commissioner of Wisconsin, declared:

We are here, as Mr. Flanders said, to, if possible, legislate fraud out of oleomargarine.

Mr. Adams, with a candor which some of his Senatorial friends would do well to imitate, declares that the tax is not intended to raise revenue, but purely and only to legislate fraud out of oleomargarine.

We know perfectly well that though the original act of 1886 has contributed to the support of the Government, it was not intended to do so, and in that respect it has proved a great disappointment to its authors. Governor Hoard, who has been more prominent in this whole agitation than any other one man, and who is perfectly familiar with the plans of those who are urging this legislation, made this statement before a committee of the Senate:

This law of 1886 was enacted as the only remedy the General Government could afford to check the enormous frauds being practiced in the sale of oleomargarine at that time. The tax was placed at 2 cents per pound, this being regarded as about the figure needed to raise sufficient revenue to enable the Government to enforce the other provisions of the bill.

In plain words, Governor Hoard avowed before a committee of the Senate that the original act of 1886 was intended to suppress commercial frauds, and that a tax was levied because only in that way could Federal jurisdiction be sustained, and that the rate was fixed not with a view of helping to support the Government, but merely with the view of raising money enough to execute the provisions of a law which Congress confessedly had no power to pass except upon the false pretense that it was a revenue measure. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] declared in his speech:

Everyone knows that this bill is intended to tax oleomargarine out of existence, although it is under the guise of a revenue bill.

I might here again repeat those passages from the speeches of Senators which I have already quoted in discussing another branch of the question; but it will be sufficient for me to remark that in quoting those Senators to show that they, like Governor Hoard, were supporting this bill in order to correct certain trade abuses, they in effect, of course, admitted that they were not supporting it for the purpose of raising revenue. It is, however, Mr. President, a waste of time for me to pursue this line any further. It is an affront to the intelligence of the Senate for me to stand in its presence and argue that this bill is not a revenue measure. Everybody knows that it is not; and nobody supports it because it is believed to be.

Does any Senator here believe that this tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound on uncolored oleomargarine is levied for the sake of revenue? Does any Senator further believe that the tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleomargarine is levied for the purpose of better insuring the collection of the tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound on uncolored oleomargarine? And yet, sir, the Senator who does not believe both propositions can not conscientiously vote for this bill under the taxing clause of the Constitution. The courts will not, I grant you, declare it unconstitutional, because our theory of government wisely forbids the judiciary to examine the motives of the legislative department, and though the judge might be convinced as a man that our object was different from what the law professes, he dare not as a judge declare it so. But while the court can not look into our hearts and minds and determine the motive which controlled our votes, the rule is different with the Senator himself. He knows the motive which controls him, and he ought not to be governed by one which he dares not avow before the world. Mr. President, it is extremely disagreeable to question the candor of men, but I will venture to say that if you will put the question not in the usual form of "Shall this bill pass?" but state it, "As many Senators as believe this bill is intended to raise revenue vote 'aye,'" it would not receive a single vote in the Senate.

But, Mr. President, turning from these questions as to the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce and to levy taxes, we find in section 3 a more palpable and, if possible, a grosser violation of the Constitution than the others to which I have already called attention. One of the few questions concerning the law or the Constitution of this country upon which men of every shade of political opinion have agreed is that the Federal Government is entirely powerless to regulate the manufacture and sale of articles within a State. Indeed, the Supreme Court in the case of The United States v. Knight has expressly decided that manufacture is not commerce, and that the Federal Government can pass no law regulating it. There was in that case one dissenting opinion, based upon reasons which it is not necessary to consider in this connection; but there has never been, either in the courts or in the Senate, any lawyer of respectable attainments who has asserted the power of Congress over the domestic commerce of any State in this Union. Keeping that universally recognized rule of law in our minds, let us examine this third section for a moment, and see how utterly indefensible it is.

The friends of this bill, of course, do not pretend that it makes any exception in favor of an article that may be sold and consumed entirely within the State where it was manufactured. Indeed, sir, they boldly declare that it is their purpose to subject colored oleomargarine to the prohibitory laws of States which prohibit its manufacture and sale, and to burden it with onerous taxation with the intention of suppressing its manufacture where its manufacture and sale are permitted. That a law purely regulatory in its provisions would be unconstitutional and void no Senator in this body will deny; and it was because this is true that these gentlemen have summoned to their aid the subterfuge of taxation. I subscribe to the doctrine of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that when the Federal Government has a right to regulate or prohibit any given thing it may do so by means of a tax as well as by a direct and specific regulation or prohibition. But, sir, the converse of this proposition must be just as correct as the proposition itself; and I am sure that the Senator from Massachusetts will agree with me that when the Government has no right to regulate or prohibit a given thing it can not constitutionally levy a tax for the purpose of regulating or prohibiting it.

And so, Mr. President, we are again brought back to our old question of fact: Is this tax on oleomargarine laid for revenue?

That it is not must be apparent to all who have heard this debate; and if any doubt remains in the mind of any Senator it must be dispelled when he recalls the statement of ex-Governor Hoard, who declared before a committee of the House of Representatives that if colored oleomargarine continues to be sold after the passage of this bill the same as now, he will "come before Congress and demand a still higher tax." Here, Mr. President, the atmosphere is somewhat clearer than it was in dealing with this question from the standpoint of interstate commerce, and a Senator who votes for this bill, knowing that its purpose is to regulate the manufacture and sale of an article wholly within a State, can not acquit himself to his conscience by allowing his mind to be confused by the somewhat contradictory decisions in respect to the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce.

ECONOMIC FALLACY OF THE BILL.

Mr. President, I have not by any means presented all that can be said against this bill from a constitutional point of view; and I have condensed what I have said as much as possible, because I do not desire to detain the Senate too long, and I do desire to consider the bill in another aspect. I therefore dismiss its ill-concealed and dangerous violation of sound legal principles to consider briefly the economic fallacies which it embodies; and I maintain, sir, that if the founders of this Government had been so unwise as to permit such a perversion of its powers, and even if we had a perfect and constitutional right to pass this bill, it would neither be just nor wise for us to do so. It is not necessary, in looking at this bill as a practical or economic measure, to misrepresent or to ignore its real purpose. Here Senators are not embarrassed by their oath to support the Constitution, for having laid that question aside for the time to consider this other question, or rather having conceded for the purpose of this particular branch of the argument that Congress has the power to pass such a law as this, and the only question being as to its justice and its wisdom, surely there will be no further attempt either to conceal the object or to deny the effect of this legislation.

I have stated it as my opinion that the purpose of this bill is to destroy the oleomargarine industry in order to relieve butter of its competition; and I call as my witness for this statement Mr. H. G. Adams, the food and dairy commissioner of Wisconsin. Before a committee of the House which was considering this very bill Mr. Adams declared in the usual, but rather inelegant, phrase:

There is no use beating about the bush in this matter. We want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business.

It is true that this bold and candid avowal as to the real purpose of this legislation alarmed its advocates, and Mr. Adams afterwards declared that his testimony had been misunderstood; but the chairman of the House committee declares unequivocally that Mr. Adams did make the statement just as I have quoted it, and other members of the committee are equally as positive that he did. I do not desire to be understood as saying that this law will accomplish what its authors and promoters desire and expect; because my judgment is that it will not, and that it will result somewhat the same as the act of 1886. Those financially interested in this legislation have calculated that the difference in the cost of producing oleomargarine and butter is about 10 cents per pound, and they think that by taxing the substitute—I prefer to call it a substitute rather than an imitation, because it was devised originally as a substitute and not as an imitation—until they bring its price to a level with the price of the principal article, everybody will purchase butter, and oleomargarine will be driven out of the market.

Undoubtedly it is true that if by legislation you force the price of the substitute up to the price of the principal article, consumers will all take the principal article, although it may not be one whit better than the substitute. But the vice in the calculation of these gentlemen is that under this bill the price of butter will advance somewhat when relieved from the competition of oleomargarine, and as the price of butter advances oleomargarine will still be cheaper with the tax of 10 cents per pound than creamery butter. Or, if that does not happen, then, sir, the oleomargarine and butterine manufacturers by taking something from the price which they now pay for their raw material and by adding something to the price which they charge for the finished product will be able to preserve their trade. But, sir, if this bill fails to accomplish its object of suppression, we will be confronted in the next Congress by another which will not fail.

Perhaps, Mr. President, in considering the morality in this proposition, we ought to treat it as if it will accomplish the object of its promoters, and consequently we ought to deal with it upon the supposition that it will destroy every oleomargarine factory in this country. For whose benefit shall this be done? The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] and all others who have followed him in this discussion on that side would lead us to believe that it is for the benefit of the farmer; but, sir, any man who has given the slightest attention to this subject knows that it will be the creameries, and not the farmers, of this country who will enjoy the benefit of this legislation. These gentlemen have spoken as if the farmers and the creameries are one and the same; but the proprietor of a creamery is no more a farmer because he manufactures butter out of the farmer's milk than a pork packer is a farmer because he makes pork out of a farmer's hog. He is no more a farmer than the manufacturer of cotton goods because he manufactures goods out of the farmer's cotton. Conducting a creamery is as separate and distinct from the farmer's vocation as is the manufacture of any other article out of the raw produce of the farm.

The creamery business has been one of the most profitable in the United States during the last ten years. I have here an advance bulletin from the Census Office, and it shows that in the year 1900 upon an investment of $36,000,000 the creameries and cheese factories of the United States, after paying their wages and paying for their raw material, netted a profit of over $16,000,000. And still they are not satisfied. With a profit of 40 per cent, as now operated, they are organizing a trust for more, and still not satisfied with a combination among themselves to protect each from the competition of the other they seek to destroy their oleomargarine competitors with a law of Congress.

For the benefit of the farmer? Gentlemen, you forget that the ingredients of oleomargarine and butterine come from the farm just as well as the ingredients of creamery butter. And they come from farmers who do not realize a profit of 40 per cent on their investment. Senators appeal to the dairymen; but the dairymen will not be benefited by this law. Listen to what Consul Roosevelt says about the effect of oleomargarine factories upon dairy interest and upon cattle raising:

Some time since France sent a delegation to Holland for the purpose of studying the methods employed there for the suppression of frauds in butter making, and also to ascertain if the manufacture of margarin has been favorable to agricultural interests. The report contains the attestation of seven mayors of communes in southern Holland, showing that since the introduction of the margarin industry in that country not only has the price of milk increased, but also the number of cattle, which plainly shows that the industry in question has become a source of profit to the farmers.

That is the disinterested report of an American consul; and it is entirely reasonable to suppose that, as the oleomargarine manufacturers are purchasers of milk for the purpose of making their product, their demand will increase the price of milk. The oleomargarine manufacturers become competitors against the creameries for the dairymen's milk, and it is small wonder that this American consul should report that the establishment and extension of an enterprise which consumes milk to the extent of 25 per cent of its entire product should enlarge the demand and therefore increase the price of milk.

If you drive the oleomargarine industry out of existence and then organize the creameries into a trust, the dairyman who sells his milk to be manufactured into butter has but one customer where otherwise he would have many.

But, Mr. President, I beg the Senate's pardon for descending in the discussion of a question like this to the mere consideration of private interests. It would signify nothing to me whether this bill was for or against the material interests of the people who have honored me with a seat in this Chamber. The question is, Is it right or wrong? If it is right it ought to pass no matter who suffers or who profits by it. If it is wrong it ought not to pass, and no appeal of a special class ought to influence the Senate in its favor. My constituents can have my seat in this body, but they can not drive me to vote for a measure as pernicious as this.

I have been somewhat amused at the helpless bewilderment of our friends on the other side. They complain that oleomargarine is sold for butter, and insist that the purchaser can not distinguish it from butter either by looking at it or by eating it. If this be true—and undoubtedly it is true, as it is also true that its effect upon the human system is precisely the same as butter—then they bring the case within that class which the law would call an innocent fraud, or a damage without an injury. I believe that every man is entitled to get exactly what he buys, and I do not believe that a trader has any right to give his customer an article different from that for which he pays, even though the different article might be equally as good as the other. But surely, Mr. President, the evil to be remedied here is not so great as to justify what even the moderate and conservative Senator from Wisconsin admits to be a kind of pious fraud upon the taxing power of Congress.

If we are to believe the advocates of this bill, they entertain no very great prejudice against oleomargarine; but they pour out the vials of their wrath upon the practice of coloring it. If uncolored oleomargarine is pure and wholesome, and the ingredients used to color it are entirely harmless, then certainly the men who color oleomargarine perpetrate no greater fraud than that committed by the butter makers when they color their product. Why is butter colored? The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in the House of Representatives, an upright and honorable man of great ability, has a large experience in this business, and I will first let him answer that question. He says:

I am a manufacturer of butter. I color every pound of butter because I get from 5 to 10 cents more for the butter by reason of its being colored.

Immediately following this statement by the chairman, which was made at a meeting of his committee, ex-Governor Hoard said:

I am a manufacturer of butter myself. I do this because, as I have said, I have to do all of the things necessary to make the butter attractive to the customer, make it palatable and healthful, and sweet and wholesome—all of the things that belong to it in the technique of the business.

Thus, according to Governor Hoard, they color butter to make it attractive to the buyer, and he calls it the "technique of the business." But when the oleomargarine manufacturer colors his product with precisely the same ingredients we must understand that this is done with a fraudulent design. If it requires coloring to make creamery butter attractive to the customer, palatable and wholesome, then what violence to logic is there in concluding that the oleomargarine manufacturers color their product for the same reason? I confess, Mr. President, that I have no prejudice against making anything attractive as long as it is not made harmful. I do not believe that because our wives and daughters array themselves in the most attractive dress that they are practicing a fraud upon us, or that because they sometimes touch their cheeks with a deeper glow than nature gave that they are trying to deceive us to our harm.

Mr. President, is it not a matter of common knowledge that there is nothing upon our tables more prolific of disease than butter? It sometimes communicates tuberculosis, and it has been demonstrated by more than one experiment that it conveys typhoid fever.

Mr. STEWART. I have the report here.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly; that fact is uncontested. But while the advocates of this bill acknowledge that the least desirable quality of butter can be colored until it is attractive to the customer, still they exclaim with indignant vehemence because the cleaner and more wholesome oleomargarine is colored.

Mr. President, not only do these special advocates of the creamery greatly misrepresent the character of oleomargarine as a food product, but they also greatly misrepresent the extent to which it is sold and consumed. If we were to believe what they say, the retail butter dealers of this country are the most consummate set of rascals unhung, for we are told that almost every man who tries to purchase butter is cheated by being given oleomargarine. According to their exaggerated statements, genuine butter has practically disappeared from our market places and a spurious imitation has taken its place.

As an American citizen somewhat acquainted with the retail merchants of my country I was not prepared to believe them as a rule dishonest. I, therefore, set myself at work to ascertain as nearly as possible how extensive are the frauds of which they stand accused; and I was amazed to find that while the overzealous friends on the other side have talked as if everybody who wanted butter was deceived into taking oleomargarine, the truth is that the butter sold and consumed in the United States is more than eighteen times greater than the entire output of the oleomargarine factories; and, consequently, there can be no good foundation for this wholesale charge of fraud against the retail merchants of this land.

The present Secretary of Agriculture, who is an ardent advocate of this legislation, and whose large experience with this and kindred subjects has been so strongly vouched for by the Senator from Iowa, has testified before a committee of the Senate that the consumption of butter in the United States amounts to 18½ pounds per capita, while only a pound per capita of oleomargarine is consumed. This testimony will be found on page 424 of the hearings before the committee in 1901. Testifying as to the consumption of butter, he said:

Secretary WILSON. * * * My statement was 18½ pounds per capita.

That is the consumption of butter.

Mr. SPRINGER. You stated, however, that the consumption of oleomargarine amounted to but a little over 1 pound per capita.

Secretary WILSON. A little over 1 pound per capita in the United States; yes.

Mr. BATE. Was that before the House or the Senate committee?

Mr. BAILEY. Before the Senate committee. Governor Hoard in his testimony, when trying to minimize the importance of the oleomargarine industry to our cattle growers and cotton-seed producers, declared that during 1899 there were but 83,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine manufactured in the United States. Our people then numbered 75,000,000, and if every ounce of it was consumed here and not a pound exported, it would have been but a fraction more than a pound per capita. But as a matter of fact we know that for years the United States has been largely engaged in exporting this article. Mr. Roosevelt, the American consul to Belgium, in a special report on butter and oleomargarine, states:

Very little oleomargarine is manufactured in this country—

Meaning Belgium—

Large quantities are produced in Austria and France, but nearly the entire continent of Europe receives its supply from New York and Chicago. Importation is almost exclusively via the port of Rotterdam, which received, in 1893, 72,651,800 pounds.

And as is suggested by my distinguished friend, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], Mr. Roosevelt has been our consul there for sixteen years.

Mr. HARRIS. Was that oleo oil or oleomargarine?

Mr. BAILEY. Oleomargarine. But I think what it means is not that the 72,000,000 pounds came from this country alone, but that 72,000,000 pounds were received at the port of Rotterdam from all countries.

Mr. HARRIS. We exported in 1900, 140,720,000 pounds of oleo oil.

Mr. BAILEY. But this says:

Very little oleomargarine is manufactured in this country. Large quantities are produced in Austria and France, but nearly the entire continent of Europe receives its supply from New York and Chicago.

He is not talking about oleo oil. He is talking about oleomargarine, and he adds:

Importation is almost exclusively via the port of Rotterdam, which received—

Not necessarily from the United States—in 1893, 72,651,800 pounds.

And if it is true, as Consul Roosevelt says, that New York and Chicago enjoyed a profitable export trade in oleomargarine, then we had much less than 1 pound per capita for home consumption.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. QUARLES in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BAILEY. With great pleasure.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that according to his statement the butter men and creamery men have made a tremendous profit on their business. Statistics show that the production of butter in the United States last year amounted to about fifteen hundred million pounds. The Senator states that their profits amounted to about $16,000,000. The statistics also show that the amount of oleomargarine manufactured last year was 104,000,000 pounds; that the cost of production was about 9 cents a pound and it was sold at an average price of 22 cents a pound—sold as butter. These figures would give the oleomargarine men a profit of about $13,000,000 on a total product of 104,000,000 pounds as against $16,000,000 profit for the butter men on a total product of fifteen hundred million pounds. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there is a wide disparity between the two profits.

Mr. BAILEY. And the purpose of this 10-cent tax per pound is to diminish the profits of the oleomargarine manufacturers?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Oh, not at all.

Mr. BAILEY. Governor Hoard says it is intended to take the enormous profit of the oleomargarine business and put it into the Treasury, and that is practically what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] argued in his speech which I hold in my hand.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The question of profits and the constitutional question which the Senator so ably discusses are two different propositions altogether.

Mr. BAILEY. I had left one, and the Senator from North Dakota was not attending closely to what I was saying or else he would remember that I called attention to the enormous profit of the creameries merely to show that these were not the farmers; or at least not that ideal farmer of whom the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] drew such an entrancing picture. Nor did I call attention to the fact that the creameries in the country are making such profits in the way of complaining about their prosperity. I rather like to see them as I like to see everybody else prosper, and I never try to lay a tax simply to subtract from anybody's proper prosperity. I think that all men and every enterprise ought to be compelled to contribute out of what they make their fair proportion toward supporting the Government, but not one penny more.

NEW AND DANGEROUS DOCTRINE.

I can understand the Republican theory that in order to build up great and useful industries among us everybody shall be compelled by the necessities of the case to pay a little more for a particular article when they buy it, by reason of a law which keeps the foreign article out of our markets and leaving the domestic one free from outside competition allows it to command a higher price. I can understand how great and wise men have believed that to be a proper policy, but I can not understand this new departure, alike undemocratic and unrepugnant, that asks us to lay a tax intended to destroy an industry that produces a clean and wholesome article of food for the toiling millions. When this bill goes upon the statute book it will invite a train of other and similar ones; and if some of us are spared, as I hope we will be, to serve as long as my distinguished friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has served, we will see a hundred measures akin to this coming here for recognition and indorsement.

Oleomargarine is not the only thing that is pressing established industries by competition; others are pressing, and pressing hard, and they are entitled to their day in Congress the same as the creameries have. Now is the time to shut the door in the face of all this impudent class who in order to successfully compete with their competitors are crying out for help from Congress. Deny these people this, and there will be no more trouble; grant this, and next year, and the next, and in all the years to come, others will demand like treatment at your hands.

I have heard it proclaimed in this debate that the people of all classes demand the enactment of this bill into a law. I do not believe it; but even if it were true the bill ought not to pass. I do not mean to say that a Senator ought to ignore the public sentiment of his State; far from it. Indeed, I am one of those old-fashioned Democrats who believe in the doctrine of obedience or resignation. But all the people of my State could not instruct me to vote for a bill that I believed against the Constitution of my country. All the people of every State have no right to make such a demand upon a single Senator in this body. Even if this demand came from an enlightened public opinion, you have no right to heed it, because, when you pass this bill upon the theory that you intend it to raise revenue, you incorporate a falsehood in the records of this Congress.

FARMERS ASK NO SPECIAL FAVORS.

Those of us who can not support this bill have been assailed with the reproach that we are unfriendly to the American farm, and the Senator from Iowa portrayed, with exquisite pathos, the early scenes of rural life; but, sir, he profanes the memories of those earlier and better days when he invokes them in a cause like this. I know the farmers of this country, and in my association with them I have found them our equal in everything except, perhaps, in opportunity. They love their country, they cherish its institutions, they pay its taxes in times of peace, and fight its battles in times of war. But they ask for no laws except just, equal ones, and they will resent the demand made in their name for unjust and repressive legislation.

I am myself as enthusiastic in my love of agricultural pursuits as the Senator from Iowa can possibly be. I spend all of my spare time and money in raising horses and cattle, and it is one of my peculiar ideas that every American citizen with money enough to buy it ought to own a farm and ought to live on it a part of every year. A contact with the soil renews our strength, confirms our purposes if they be high, and elevates them if they be low. Among its fields and meadows lofty ideals and noble thoughts find entertainment, and the virtues which make statesmen as well as heroes are developed and cultivated.

From the strife and the tumult of our great cities, where the violence of anarchy and the avarice of corporate power are holding high carnival, we must turn to the rural homesteads of this land for the simple faith and habits that shall yet enable this Republic to fulfill the high and sacred mission to which our fathers dedicated it; and, sir, I repel the suggestion that these sturdy and unselfish patriots are clamoring for a law that shall destroy an industry which consumes the products of their farms in providing a cheap and wholesome article of food for the millions who earn subsistence in workshops and in factories.

Will Senators follow the logic of this legislation? If in the providence of God the drought should come, and with failing crops in this country, there should still be abundant crops in other lands to depress the price of agricultural products again below the cost of production, will you tell the farmers that, as Congress has already made the precedent, they should come here and clamor at our doors until we pass a law to abolish these electrical vehicles that have so greatly curtailed the demand for horses. To abolish the use of electricity in operating the street-car systems of our great cities and return again to the horse, would almost double the demand for as well as the price of horses; and in this way you can not only increase the demand for horses, but you will vastly increase the demand for the farmers' hay and grain to feed them. When that proposition comes before us, as come it may if this character of legislation is to be encouraged, will the Senator from Iowa draw glowing pictures of the horse and plead for him against the use of electricity? It will be so easy to describe these new motor carriages as fit only for millionaires and dudes to ride in.

The farmers and their friends would have a stronger argument considered only with reference to its selfishness in that case than they have in this, because electrical appliances not only first destroy the demand for the horses the farmers raise, but subsequently destroy the demand for the grain and hay to feed those horses. Tell him it is wrong, he will point you to the law of Congress. Tell him two wrongs never made one right, he will tell you that it is not a question of right or wrong that controls you, but a question of votes and influence.

If this kind of legislation is safe, prudent, and wise, then no man in this country will dare to invest his capital in a new enterprise, because in doing so he takes the chance that an old and established one will come to Congress for a law taxing his new enterprise to death.

PROGRESS V. REPRESSION.

Mr. President, I believe that the material progress of the world finds its highest and most beneficent achievement in bringing to the toiling millions, whose hard lot is work and want, better food and better raiment; but if we are to accept the new philosophy, which finds expression in this bill, then it is a crime, to be punished by imprisonment, for any man to devise a cheaper but healthful substitute for an article now in use. If men shall not have oleomargarine because it looks like butter, then we may extend the principle, and next week declare they shall not wear cloth that looks like wool, and that every manufacturer in this country who strives by improved processes to make better cloth from cotton until it is almost as good as wool, shall be a criminal; and then follow that with another statute, every man who makes from the farmer's fleece a higher quality of woolen goods until it almost resembles silk, shall likewise be sent to jail to keep company with the man who is said to have counterfeited the product of his woolen mill.

Once enter upon this kind of legislation and where will it end? It will end only after the Congress of the United States has become a kind of board to settle the rivalries between competing manufacturers, and it will settle them, not according to their justice, but according to the power and influence of the rivals. The weak, though they have the better product, must fall, and the strong, though their product be higher in its price and lower in its quality, will survive.

I believe in the philosophy of my childhood, when I was taught that competition is the life of trade. I believe in leaving every man—merchant, manufacturer, or trader—out in the open market with his wares, and if he have more sagacity or better merchandise than his competitor, let him prosper and with his profits he will establish new industries to employ more men and bring new blessings to mankind. Let us not drive him from his pursuits with penal statutes; let us not stifle genius and deny enterprise its just reward; but rather let us offer premiums for it, until every heart and brain in all the land shall be quickened with an impulse to do something for his kind and country.

But, Mr. President, I waste my time and I waste the time of the Senate in prolonging this discussion. I did not hope in the beginning that anything I could say would change a single vote, for I fear very much that we have reached that lamentable condition which was described by a Scotch member of the British Parliament, who declared that he had heard many speeches that had changed his mind, but never a single speech that had changed his vote. [Laughter.] The vote, when it shall be taken to-morrow, will probably be the same as it would have been if it had been taken the day the bill was first reported. Nor have I detained the Senate in any hope that I could contribute anything to its knowledge on this subject any more than I have detained it in the hope that I could change its vote. I simply desired to record my protest against a species of legislation that is without warrant in the Constitution and without justification in the natural laws of trade.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I desire to say that I shall be compelled to be absent to-morrow, and therefore shall not have an opportunity to record my vote on this measure. If here, however, I should vote for the bill of the committee with the amendments which they have proposed.

I say this notwithstanding the very eloquent and entrancing speech which has just been made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. In my brief experience as a Senator I certainly never have heard any effort in this Chamber which has so affected my imagination, has so fired my fancy, and has had so little influence upon my judgment. [Laughter.] Unlike the Scotch member of Parliament, whom the Senator mentioned, in stating how I should vote if present here to-morrow, I am stating both how I would talk, think, and act if called upon to answer the roll call.

I have been a student and somewhat of a practitioner all my life of that kind of oratory, which appeals to my imagination as much as it does to anyone, of the progress of our country and the opportunities of its citizens; but the speech of the Senator from Texas was the finest tribute to which I have listened in many a day to the opportunities which will exist if this bill does not pass, but which will be forever destroyed if it becomes a law. If I understand aright the Senator from Texas, this bill will defeat the opportunities for progress of the young man of the future, because the growth of our country is built upon oleomargarine [laughter]; the growth of our country is built upon some kind of a misrepresentation, and all success is due to fraud.

I am a thorough believer in the doctrine, which the Senator advanced, that competition is the life of trade and that the growth of business, the perfection of our machinery, and the creation of communities which have become the happy homes of artisans and the places where prosperity dwells, have been due to that principle that competition is the life of trade, but I have been taught, also, that competition must be honest. Where an honest merchant is selling honest flour and the man on the next block is saying that his flour is just as good when it is half plaster of paris, that is not honest competition; and if the man who sells flour which is half plaster of paris or ground earth, or what not, is to be commended because he drives the honest merchant out of business, then I say that the honest merchant should be protected by law and that the dishonest merchant should be punished for fraud.

A friend of mine, who knows the secret test by which oleomargarine can be detected, was in a fashionable restaurant recently, and when a beautiful pat of butter was placed before him, he subjected it to his test, and then he said to the waiter, "How do you pronounce, sir, o-l-e-o-m-a-r-g-a-r-i-n-e?" And that intelligent servitor of that magnificent place of pleasure responded, "I pronounce it, sir, butter; else I lose my job." [Laughter.] This legislation is to protect the conscience of that waiter; it is to prevent his being driven out of employment, reduced to poverty, and his family reduced to great distress unless he lies.

This waiter probably came to us from a foreign land. He probably never learned our language until he arrived upon our shores, and then, in order to earn an honest living, he applied himself diligently, as all our adopted citizens do, to learn the only language in the world in which God's truth can be clearly and perfectly expressed, and then he discovers that in this great and glorious country, where he has come for the enjoyment of every privilege and every liberty, upon the principle which my eloquent friend from Texas advocates, he has got to pronounce a word in the English language entirely different from anything that he has been taught in the books or learned in his family, or what it means, in order to retain a position where he is earning an honest living.

My friend from Texas says that he has talked with the farmer, and that the farmer never has expressed a desire for this measure. The farmer says, "Let me alone; I want to let everybody else alone." My impression is that my eloquent friend has been talking with the agriculturist, and not with the farmer. The agriculturist does not raise butter, unless it be the bull butter which my friend is so anxious to have presented to the public. I have received thousands of appeals for this measure from the farmers of New York.

We have no objection to oleomargarine sold as such; we have no objection to filled cheese sold as such; we have no objection to flour which has in it a substance that will never digest, if people want to put in their stomachs things which will constitute monuments over their graves after they are dead. But what we do object to is that the citizen who pays a dollar for a good article, an honest and reputable article, to take home to his wife and children, should be deluded by getting something else.

The cow does not complain of oleomargarine. The cow complains that oleomargarine, which she does not produce and can not produce unless she is killed and carved and then put into a pot and boiled, should be called that delightful substance which comes out of the wonderful chemistry which God has given the cow for the delight of the world and for the sustenance of children.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the line comes very clear on this class of legislation, not only on this article, but on all others. There is no legislature in the United States which has not had before it at one time or another, and which has not passed at one time or another, bills which have been enacted into law for the purpose of protecting the public against these chemical horrors which the ordinary household has not the means of detecting.

Nobody objects to competition when it is free from fraud. Nobody objects to competition when it is free from deceit. On the contrary, under such circumstances and conditions, let the best brain, the best energy, the best industry, the best grasp of the situation win. But there is no ability, no capacity for business, no energy, and no industry which can successfully compete with a good article against a fraudulent article where the public and the customers are deceived and where they can not detect the fraud.

I believe that if this legislation becomes a law there will be no diminution in the sales of oleomargarine or in the profits of its manufacture. I believe that it has been so long before the public that it can be sold upon its merits and that there will be a growing constituency who would prefer it to a poor article of butter, if their circumstances are such that they can buy nothing but a poor article of butter.

It is a strong point which my eloquent friend made that butter is colored, and therefore why not color oleomargarine? But colored butter is still butter, and colored oleomargarine is not still oleomargarine, according to what its seller says. To color butter does not destroy its taste, does not destroy its chemical properties, does not destroy its wholesomeness. It is still butter, with that particular color given to it which the customer wants in his butter. But when the oleomargarine is colored, it is colored not to sell it as oleomargarine, but in order to follow butter as butter through all the grades of the article.

There was one part of my eloquent friend's speech which shocked me—absolutely shocked me. It would not seem possible that a gentleman who has such a command of the English language, who is so chivalrous, who talks and thinks and acts upon such a high plane as does my eloquent friend, the Senator from Texas, could shock me. But he did. When he compared the color of oleomargarine to the art by which a young lady wins the heart of her lover, I felt that the American girl had been put in a wrong position before the American people. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I forgot for the moment a recent occurrence in the life of the Senator from New York or I should not have said it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DEPEW. And but for that occurrence I should have left it for a younger man to come to the defense of the American girl. It was the Senator's youth and beauty which astonished me when he made that remark. [Laughter.] If he had been sour and acrid, if he had been disappointed in love, if the sex had treated him in any way which would lead him to speak of them in that way and remark about them in that way, then I could understand it. But no one can meet the Senator, no one can meet him socially or in his grave and dignified position as a Senator in this Chamber, no one can see his photograph on Pennsylvania avenue, no one can come in that contact with him which is always a pleasure without knowing that his geniality, his happiness, his eloquence have come because the American girl has loved and has admired him. [Laughter.] And he never ought, so soon after she appeared so entrancing in her Easter hat and gown in the churches and on the avenues of Washington, to have gone back on her to-day by saying that she is a fraudulent specimen of living oleomargarine. [Laughter.] With all her finery, flowers, and ribbons and colors, she was still the incomparable American girl.

Mr. President, I did not rise to make a speech, but I have been betrayed into it because of the peculiar, as well as eloquent way in which my distinguished friend, the Senator from Texas, presented in most attractive form the proposition that fraud and misrepresentation stand on the same plane with truth, and honesty, and open-mindedness; that fraud and misrepresentation are the honest competitors of truth and virtue. Up in Peekskill, where I was born, that was not taught in the old-school Presbyterian Church in which I was reared. It may be that in the wilds of Texas that is the way the people think, but along the Hudson River we people of Dutch ancestry learned to call a spade a spade.

We learned to call butter butter and milk milk, and we do not learn to call anything else, made in some other way, by the wonders of chemistry, whether it is better or worse, by an honest name; but we learned to call an article just what it is, and then we take it or reject it upon a full understanding of what we are buying. We are not brought up in the belief that one of the enterprising citizens of the metropolis who discovers an honest yeoman from Texas—not an agriculturist, but a farmer—in New York, and then, appealing to his cupidity, sells him a gold brick, is an honest competitor with the jeweler across the way. On the contrary, in the State of New York we have laws by which this active, energetic, and enterprising business man of our State, who, accepting the Senator's views of competition, captures this innocent agriculturist from Texas and sells him a gold brick, is seized and punished, not for selling the gold brick, but because he sold it as gold. If he had sold it as a gold brick, as amounting to nothing but brass outside and sand in, and got a gold price for it from a farmer from Texas, then the laws of New York say that that is honest competition. It is the deceit which we punish; not the art.

Mr. President, this debate has gone into many fields, and especially this evening. It is fortunate for modern eloquence that it has led on the one side and the other to two of the most attractive speeches I have ever heard in a legislative body—the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] on the cow, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] on competition. The cow and competition will live in the annals of American oratory as presented under the forms of rhetoric, of eloquence, of fancy, and of flights of imagination which place these two Senators along with the Miltons and the Byrons of the English language. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] did not happen to honor me with his attention in the early part of what I had to say, or else he would have known that I reprobated the fraudulent practice of selling oleomargarine for butter as much as he can possibly do.

Mr. SPOONER. Intellectually.

Mr. BAILEY. My distinguished and brilliant friend the Senator from Wisconsin interposes the suggestion that I reprobate it intellectually.

The Senator from New York would have learned, had he then attended to what I said, that my contention is that the mere fraudulent practice in the sale of this article is not within the power of Congress to correct, but is a matter entirely for the States; and in that opinion I am supported by so profound a lawyer as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

I did not rise, however, merely to call the Senator's attention to that fact, because I believe I should have left that simply to the RECORD. But after the Senator has talked about this fraud and about this fraudulent competition I simply wish to call his attention to the fact that section 3 of this bill practically legalizes the fraud at the rate of 10 cents a pound. According to section 3, if a man will pay 10 cents a pound, he can sell oleomargarine exactly as the State allows it to be sold, and it is a curious kind—

Mr. SPOONER. Which 32 States do not allow to be sold at all.

Mr. BAILEY. There are not 32 States which do not allow it to be sold at all.

Mr. SPOONER. Colored as butter.

Mr. BAILEY. Some of them went so far as to say that it must be colored pink. The State of New Hampshire went that far, and Vermont went quite as far. Of course, those laws were held unconstitutional. The State of Pennsylvania said that it should not be sold, colored or uncolored.

Mr. SPOONER. That will not do.

Mr. BAILEY. That will not do. The Senator and I agree. But my contention is this, and this is the whole of it, that if any State in this Union desires to compel this or any other product to be sold for what it is, not only do I approve that legislation, but as a member of a State legislature I should cordially support it. But when any State in this Union determines that it is immaterial whether substances exactly alike are sold either in one way or the other, then Congress, I contend, has no power to interfere, and I am sure that upon that question the Senator from Wisconsin and I agree.

Mr. SPOONER. No. If the Senator will permit me—

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Congress should levy a tax of one-quarter of 1 cent a pound on oleomargarine in its natural color and 10 cents a pound upon oleomargarine colored in the similitude of butter, and should permit, as the provision placed in this bill by the House is construed by the oleomargarine manufacturers to permit, a State to authorize the sale of oleomargarine colored in the similitude of butter without tax, that would invalidate, from my standpoint, the Federal legislation altogether, because it would break the rule of uniformity. It would tax the colored oleomargarine in all the States except where some States otherwise provide, and that provision, which came in this bill from the House and which the committee of the Senate excluded from it by amendment, would render unconstitutional the Federal legislation, if there should be a State which would permit it to be sold in the similitude of butter; and if that would exempt it from the Federal tax, I say now, and I think I can prove it before this debate is ended if it is denied, that that was the object of the provision.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me ask the Senator from Wisconsin this question. Assuming that the State of Texas, we will say, would permit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, will the Senator from Wisconsin assert that Congress has any power to regulate, either by tax or otherwise, the manufacture and sale of any article manufactured and sold entirely within a State?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator asks me a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I deny that the State of Texas, the State of Wisconsin, or any other State has the right to say what shall be taxed.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh!

Mr. SPOONER. Wait a minute.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator does not understand me.

Mr. SPOONER. Wait a minute. I do understand you. I hope in a moment I shall be able to satisfy myself that the Senator understands me, which I think now he does not. Neither the State of Texas nor any other State can be permitted to say what Congress shall tax.

Mr. BAILEY. I consent to that.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator agrees to that?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, if the Congress passes a law—

Mr. BAILEY. I will agree with this modification, that Congress can not tax the facilities of a State.

Mr. SPOONER. I agree to that.

Mr. BAILEY. With that exception, I agree.

Mr. SPOONER. The instrumentalities necessary to carry on the State government.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, if Congress passes a law that oleomargarine in its natural color shall be taxed one-quarter of a cent a pound, and that oleomargarine colored in the similitude of butter—I am not following the language of this bill—shall be taxed 10 cents a pound, I do deny that the State of Texas can pass a valid law authorizing oleomargarine colored in the similitude of butter to be sold without any tax. Does the Senator deny that?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Wisconsin is so good a lawyer that he knows when he is coming up against a hard proposition, and he goes around it.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I did not go around it.

Mr. BAILEY. I will show—

Mr. SPOONER. I may have gone around the Senator, but I did not go around the proposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I am ready to concede that the Senator from Wisconsin can easily get around me, small as he is.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I did not mean that.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well; but I will show the Senator that he did go around my proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. The man who can go around the Senator can go around anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator continually places me under new obligations to him for his kindness and his compliments. But to make it plain that he did, the Senator overlooks my qualification in my question—if it can lay a tax for the purpose of regulation. Therefore I will pretermitt the question of tax, and I will put the question in this way to the Senator from Wisconsin: Can the Federal Government regulate the manufacture and sale of an article which is manufactured and sold entirely within a State of the Union?

Mr. SPOONER. That begs the whole question.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me see if I can make it applicable. Will the Senator—

Mr. SPOONER. I will not put it in that way, but I will put it in this way.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. That the Congress of the United States can tax an article—

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, I am not talking about the question of taxation.

Mr. SPOONER. That is where the little joker is.

Mr. BAILEY. Exactly, and the Senator sees it.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, of course I see it.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator admits that Congress has no power to regulate or prohibit the manufacture or sale of an article in a State which is manufactured and sold there, then I ask him next if it has a right to lay a tax purely intended to regulate the manufacture and the sale?

Mr. SPOONER. I say yes.

Mr. BAILEY. In other words, the Senator will contend that Congress can do by a tax not intended to raise revenue what it can not do directly?

Mr. SPOONER. No; I do not say that. I do not have to.

Mr. BAILEY. You do have to say it to meet that proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Massachusetts did meet the question boldly in the case of the State bank tax. He said frankly "we have the power to exclude State bank circulation because it competes with our national currency, and having the right to exclude it by direct prohibition, we have a right to exclude it by taxation."

Mr. SPOONER. I met it in the same way, did I not?

Mr. BAILEY. No; because the purpose here is not to collect revenue; the purpose here is not to exclude something within the Federal jurisdiction; but the purpose here is boldly to say that Congress can regulate, by a direct prohibition, the manufacture and sale of an article entirely within a State. The Senator from Wisconsin will agree with me that the Supreme Court has distinctly held that Congress can not regulate manufacture in a State, has it not?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. It has distinctly held it?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; in the Knight case.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. Then has it not distinctly held that over purely domestic commerce, articles bought and sold entirely within a State, the Federal Government is without jurisdiction?

Mr. SPOONER. I will grant that for the sake of the argument.

Mr. BAILEY. Then it follows that the Federal Government is absolutely without power to regulate either manufacture or commerce that is entirely within a State. Now, I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin if it is not true that the third section of this bill does tax the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, though manufactured in a State and sold within the same State?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but does the Senator—

Mr. BAILEY. Therefore—

Mr. SPOONER. Wait.

Mr. BAILEY. Therefore—

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no—

Mr. BAILEY. All right; I will yield.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no. Congress has the power to regulate interstate commerce, has it not?

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. But, of course, under the power to regulate commerce among the States, Congress has not the power to regulate, or rather interfere with, commerce in the States. But does the Senator infer from that that Congress has no power to tax—

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh!

Mr. BAILEY. I insist that Congress when it lays a tax for the purpose of revenue can go into the State and tax any object it pleases, provided it taxes the same object at the same rate all over the country; but I say it has no right to go into a State with a tax intended to be purely regulatory—

Mr. SPOONER. Well?

Mr. BAILEY. And the Senator agrees to that.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. BAILEY. Then why does the Senator say that Congress has not the power to regulate directly, but can regulate with a tax that is intended only to regulate it?

Mr. SPOONER. Congress has power to tax oleomargarine, has it not?

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly, for the purpose of revenue.

Mr. SPOONER. For the purpose of revenue? This bill taxes it for the purpose of revenue.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator believes that, then this bill is a perfectly constitutional one to him.

Mr. SPOONER. I believe it.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, of course, the Senator will vote for it. The Senator says that as a lawyer, but as an economist the bill is going to prove a great failure, in my judgment.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not now in the economist business. If my friend, who is a very able lawyer and for whom I have great admiration, will permit me, does he challenge the constitutionality of the tax of one-quarter of a cent a pound upon oleomargarine?

Mr. BAILEY. I do upon one condition—that it is intended to be regulatory and not for revenue.

Mr. SPOONER. That hardly answers my question. Does the Senator think he could successfully impeach the validity of this tax in court?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, I know I could not, because the court, as I said in the course of my speech, can not assume to look into my heart and my mind to say whether I voted for it as a regulatory or as a revenue measure. But when a Senator comes to cast his vote he knows the motive with which he casts it. Undoubtedly a Senator who votes for it upon the idea that it is a revenue measure is giving an entirely constitutional vote. My whole contention is that a Senator who votes for it as a regulatory measure, taxing manufacture and sale entirely within a State, gives an unconstitutional vote.

Mr. SPOONER. Then it follows from that that my friend will vote against it.

Mr. BAILEY. Because I believe it regulatory.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I will put it better than my friend does. He will vote against it because he thinks it is not a tax for revenue. I will vote for it because I know it is a tax which will produce revenue. [Laughter.] And it originated in that branch of Congress in which alone can a revenue bill originate. I would not for one moment impeach the integrity of the House of Representatives. Would the Senator? He came from there.

Mr. BAILEY. But I am not wanting to go back there.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not want the Senator to go back there. I think he is an acquisition to the Senate. I am glad he is here.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin, whose language was very guarded—

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. BAILEY. That it will raise revenue, I have no doubt. How much revenue above the expense of executing it could be told by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance, whose committee was never allowed to consider this revenue bill. It came neither from the revenue committee of the House nor of the Senate, but from that committee of distinguished agriculturists like the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SPOONER. There is a clause in the Constitution which my friend knows about—for no one knows the Constitution better—which provides that bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, where this bill originated. I do not know myself, and perhaps that is because I come from the interior, any provision in the Constitution which requires a revenue bill sent to us by the House of Representatives in order to its validity to be referred to the Committee on Finance. Does the Senator?

Mr. BAILEY. No; there is none.

Mr. SPOONER. I thought not. So the question whether this is or is not a revenue bill does not depend upon its reference. What does my friend the Senator from Colorado say?

Mr. TELLER. I was saying—not intending it for the Senator—that there is a rule of the Senate which requires revenue bills to go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but we may disregard it, of course. We did disregard it.

Mr. TELLER. We did in this case.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; and we have done so in other cases. My friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], one of the best men I know of anywhere, makes a suggestion which I think is not borne out absolutely by the record. When the present law, which imposes a tax of 2 cents a pound on oleomargarine, a revenue measure, came from the House of Representatives it was not referred to the Committee on Finance. That was sixteen years ago. It was referred to the Committee on Agriculture. It never has been contended since then that it was an invalid law because it had not been referred to the Committee on Finance, although I am disposed to doubt the validity of almost any law which relates to revenue which has not the imprimatur of my distinguished friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. TELLER. Having been referred to another committee makes it none the less a revenue measure.

Mr. SPOONER. That is true, and that is the whole matter. That is an answer to the suggestion. It comes from the House as a revenue bill. It originates where under the Constitution it is required to originate, and, no matter what committee it is referred to in this body, if it produces revenue it is a revenue bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may be passed without a reference.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; if it is passed without a reference, as my friend from New Hampshire suggests, it is a valid law; and does my friend from Texas challenge that?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I would not challenge it, if the Senator from Wisconsin will say that this bill is intended to raise revenue.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that is a challenge, and while I suppose that according to the modern code no man, especially if he comes from the South, has any right to challenge another, I accept good-humoredly the challenge.

Mr. BAILEY. And the Senator from Wisconsin does assert that the object of this bill is to raise revenue?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I say the object of this bill is to raise revenue.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I would say—

Mr. SPOONER. In other words, if my friend will pardon me, I say that we, in the exercise of the discretion which the Constitution gives us in selecting the objects of taxation, propose to select this as an object of taxation, and that it will raise and is intended to raise revenue, which will go into the Treasury of the United States to pay the debts of the United States and to provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare.

Mr. STEWART. May I ask a question? Is that the paramount object?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; that is the primary object?

Mr. STEWART. Is it the paramount object, not the primary?

Mr. SPOONER. What is the difference between primary and paramount?

Mr. STEWART. Primary is first and paramount is above others. The paramount object, the main object, has been stated here forty times. It is to destroy a fraud.

Mr. SPOONER. You have stated it?

Mr. STEWART. I have not stated it. You destroy only a part of the fraud. The principal fraud is the coloring of butter.

Mr. SPOONER. We are going to try and destroy most of the fraud. I do not fully understand the distinction which my friend suggests between primary and paramount in this connection.

Mr. STEWART. You first want to get revenue and next you want to destroy a million industries, and the striking down of industries is much bigger than the raising of a little revenue.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is running away.

Mr. STEWART. I never run away.

Mr. SPOONER. I am talking about the difference between the primary object and the paramount object.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. I beg the Senator to allow me to continue this discussion with the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I can understand very well how the Senator from Wisconsin can not distinguish between paramount and primary. The first thing is to raise revenue. It is not very much revenue, and I do not think we would be engaged in this business if revenue was the principal object. But the paramount object, the great object, and every argument made for it, has reference to the destruction of an industry.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEWART. For a question. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask what is the distinction between the primary object and the paramount object.

Mr. STEWART. The primary object is first, but the paramount object is the main consideration. The main consideration is to destroy an industry. That is the big object. The other is the little object.

Mr. SPOONER. I supposed, until otherwise informed by the Senator from Nevada, that the first consideration was the paramount consideration.

Mr. STEWART. Not always. You do not get the principal object first. You have covered that up.

Mr. SPOONER. They may not in Nevada, but they do everywhere else. [Laughter.] The paramount object of the bill is the fundamental and primary object of the bill.

Mr. STEWART. The primary object is a different thing altogether. [Laughter.] The primary object of this bill is to pretend to raise revenue. The paramount object is to destroy an industry. One is great big and the other is very small.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). The Chair takes this opportunity to say that there should be less of disturbance.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois, holding the floor on this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the Senator from Illinois going to move an executive session?

Mr. CULLOM. I am.

Mr. BAILEY. I wanted to continue the discussion with the Senator from Wisconsin for a moment.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw the motion.

Mr. CULLOM. I will withdraw it for a moment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I freely conceded in the beginning that as to any Senator who believed this bill was intended to raise revenue it was a perfectly constitutional measure. I contended that as to any Senator who did not believe that it was a clearly unconstitutional measure.

My distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] practically agrees with me in both propositions, because when pressed to the point he declared that the purpose of the bill is to raise revenue. The Senate will readily understand how the Senator from Wisconsin, adroit as he is, was trying to waive that question off.

Now, I want to read the Senator from Wisconsin, in reply to his statement, what one of the principal advocates of this bill said was the object of it, whether primary or not, aye, even if it were the object without any qualification or any adjective, it is no concern to me. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] said:

Everyone knows that this bill is intended to tax colored oleomargarine out of existence, although it is under the guise of a revenue bill which has never been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Now, without intending to ask the Senator from Wisconsin to pass upon the constitutional opinion of another Senator, I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he believes that the primary object of this bill was to tax colored oleomargarine out of existence and they had merely used the taxing power as a disguise for their object, would he regard it as constitutional?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is asking me to pass upon the opinion of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. BAILEY. I expressly disclaimed any intention—

Mr. SPOONER. And also upon his own.

Mr. BAILEY. To ask for an expression of opinion on the statement of the Senator from North Dakota, who, of course, would settle that question for himself, because he has his view of the Constitution. The fact of it is, Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. I will answer the Senator's question. The question whether this tax is a revenue tax or a tax levied for the purpose of eliminating from commerce an industry is really here an abstract question. I think the tax of one-fourth of 1 cent, a reduction of 1½ cents on oleomargarine as a natural product, or as it is, is a legitimate exercise for revenue purposes of the constitutional power of taxation. Does the Senator deny that?

Mr. BAILEY. As a matter of fact I deny that that is the purpose. As a matter of law I concede that if that is the purpose the bill is entirely constitutional.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, does the Senator conceive it possible that the constitutionality of such a bill can depend upon a question of fact?

Mr. BAILEY. Indeed, it would depend on that in this kind of a case entirely. In other words—

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think that in a court he could overturn an act of Congress taxing oleomargarine colored in the similitude of butter 10 cents a pound, or 25 cents a pound, upon proof that it was not intended or needed for revenue purposes, but was intended to tax an industry out of existence?

Mr. BAILEY. When you say 25 cents a pound you raise a question. The Supreme Court—

Mr. SPOONER. Call it 10 cents a pound.

Mr. BAILEY. As long as it is not absolutely prohibitory undoubtedly I could not assail the validity of the law successfully.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—

Mr. BAILEY. One moment, if you please. In the New Hampshire case, where it required oleomargarine to be colored pink, the court held that that State regulation was tantamount to a prohibition, and that the law was therefore invalid. Now, if the court would follow that up—

Mr. SPOONER. I think that was right.

Mr. BAILEY. I think so. If the court were to follow that analogy and Congress were to levy a tax equal to what was clearly a prohibition, then it is a question open in that court yet whether they would sustain that tax.

In the old case of the tax upon the notes of State banks the dissenting judges, the Senator from Wisconsin will recall, laid great stress upon the fact that the tax of 10 per cent was prohibitory, but the majority of the court asserted that Congress possessed the power to destroy the State banks absolutely and by a direct prohibition upon the ground that they were an interference with the currency which the Federal Government might establish and regulate. Therefore, they held that a prohibitory tax could be sustained when a direct prohibition could be sustained, and that, in my opinion, is about as far as they have gone. I would hesitate, however, to say that positively without examining the cases. I do say undoubtedly that you could not attack successfully any bill that purported to raise revenue in a court of the country upon the ground that that was not its object, for the reason the court has so often stated that it can not inquire into the motives of the political department of the Government.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, if the discussion between the Senators is over, I should like to renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 3, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 2, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS LITTLE TENNESSEE RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 3231, there having been a House bill of similar purport reported favorably to the House.

The bill (S. 3231) to legalize and maintain a new steel bridge erected in place of the old wooden structure across the Little Tennessee River at Niles Ferry, Tenn., by the Atlanta, Knoxville and Northern Railroad, was read.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Senate bill just read be put on its passage. A House bill similar in its provisions has been favorably reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I made that report by direction of the chairman of the committee. The only difference between the two bills is that in this Senate bill there are certain amendments which seem to make it more satisfactory to such members of the Tennessee delegation as are interested in the subject. They all assent to it. This bill passed the Senate unanimously, and the corresponding bill of the House has been unanimously reported by the committee. I ask, therefore, that this Senate bill may be put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. Are the bills now substantially the same?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the corresponding House bill, No. 9964, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For the improvement of the Yellowstone National Park, in accordance with the approved project, including the maintenance of existing improvements, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, $250,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such labor and materials as may be necessary for the completion of the project, including annual maintenance and repairs, or the work may be done and the materials purchased otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in any one year $250,000, and not to exceed in the aggregate $500,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: And provided further, That of the amounts so appropriated not to exceed $50,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in the Yellowstone Forest Reserve east of the park, and not to exceed $25,000 may be expended in the Yellowstone and Teton Forest Reserves south of the park.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of much personal gratification to me to find in this sundry civil bill a liberal appropriation for the proper care and the immediate and continued improvement of our great national park. The people familiar with this subject will approve this provision now, and posterity, which will realize more fully its benefits, will commend us for our foresight and judgment in a spirit of eternal gratitude. This money will be well and wisely spent, and its expenditure will create lasting results that will please, instruct, and benefit humanity for ages yet to come.

Mr. Chairman, Yellowstone Park is the world's wonderland. It beggars description. The most eloquent tongue fails to describe its surpassing wonders, and the gifted pen of the most imaginative poet can not adequately picture the infinite variety of its sublime realities. After you have read and heard all that mortal man can say, you must see it yourself to fully appreciate all its glories and startling revelations. It never palls; the eye never tires. From the time you leave Livingston until you return, the scenery is an inspiration and simply indescribable. It is one grand panorama of loveliness beyond comparison, a symphony of colors, a combination of architectural miracles.

Take it all in all, Yellowstone Park is the greatest, the grandest, the most picturesque, and the most marvelous picture in nature's art gallery—painted in all the radiant colors of the rainbow by the unerring, heroic hand of the Infinite—sculptured by the Supreme Creator of the universe—a testifying demonstration that the Great Jehovah liveth.

The establishment of this magnificent park, to be forever safe from the destroying vandal, and sacred for all time from the devastating hand of greedy commercialism, does great credit to the farseeing statesmanship of the men who conceived it, and to those who are now faithfully executing a great trust for the benefit of millions yet unborn.

This national park was dedicated to humanity. It belongs to the people. It is sacred to nature. No vandal must ever be permitted to desecrate it. Every citizen of the Republic should behold its glories and witness the beauties of nature's most perfect picture. I hope more people every year will visit this inspiring park, and I know they will go away benefited in mind and body. As the years come and go it will become more and more a sanitarium for the afflicted, an art gallery for the lovers of the beautiful, a Bohemia for the lotus-eating dreamers of the Better Day, and a great national playground, the recreation place of millions of the citizens of the Republic, where the rich and the poor, the great and the small shall have an equal right to enjoy and commune with nature in her primeval wonders and in all her pristine glories.

The provisions in this bill for Yellowstone Park are made, I am informed, in accordance with the recommendations of Capt. Hiram N. Chittenden, a distinguished officer in the Engineer Corps of the Army, now detailed to the park and in charge of the improvements. He is beyond all question the right man in the right place. He has done and is doing a great work, not sufficiently appreciated, perhaps, by the unthinking and the casual observer, but the work itself will be his lasting monument, and the consciousness of duty well done for duty's sake will be his greatest reward.

I visited the park last summer, saw for myself, and speak from personal knowledge. Every member of Congress should uphold the hands of Captain Chittenden, and all his commendable efforts should be encouragingly sustained by the Government. I am and ever will be a friendly advocate of Yellowstone Park, and in or out of Congress I will always do all in my power for its best interests; and I am glad in this connection to pay a just and merited tribute to the genius of gallant Captain Chittenden.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just a few words more. In my opinion the western boundary of the park should be extended to include Jackson Lake, the Teton Mountains, and the domain sometimes called the Hole in the Wall. Every disinterested person with whom I have talked concerning this matter has concurred in this conclusion. Aside from the beauties of the natural scenery of this adjoining land to the park, it is of great importance that it should be incorporated into the park for the reason that the wild animals, especially the deer, the elk, and the buffalo, roam there from the park during certain seasons of the year, and hunters lying in wait slaughter them remorselessly.

This is a shame and should be stopped, and the best way to do it is by an extension of the park's boundary. It will cost little to do this now, and in my judgment Yellowstone Park will ere long become the last place in this country where the wild game—the big game—can live out their natural lives unmolested by the barbarian pot-hunter and the semicivilized sportsman. Every loyal friend of the national park and every true friend of our wild animals should favor this extension of the boundary of Yellowstone Park. It should be acted on now. No time should be lost.

This additional territory can be obtained to-day by the United States Government very cheaply, and it ought to be taken in before its value increases.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I trust the provision in this bill for Yellowstone Park will be passed without modification. It is truly in the interest of the people, and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in my judgment, is entitled to much commendation and the thanks of the American people for his broadminded statesmanship in the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to corroborate all that has been said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], and I think the committee in increasing this appropriation has met a want which has been felt for many years, and that is the improvement along broad and generous lines so necessary in this park. The extension of the boundaries of the park is also an important matter which should be looked after by Congress. The committee, however, in its judgment, has seen fit to increase the appropriation for the improvement of the roads upon a basis which will inure to the benefit of the traveling public in particular, and to the country at large. I hope sincerely that the appropriation will be passed as proposed by the committee, and that no objection will be presented.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], in speaking in favor of this appropriation, has said he visited this park recently. It was my good fortune to be on the first expedition of 1871 under the auspices of the United States Geological Survey and under the immediate charge of Prof. F. V. Hayden, the first party which ever explored the Yellowstone Park. Never shall I forget, as the wonders of that region burst upon our view in almost every mile that we covered after we entered the Fire Hole Basin and the region surrounding the Yellowstone Park, the impression it made upon me. It seemed almost as if we had entered into a combination of fairylands and infernal regions. The first impression on one hearing the rumbling and the thunder of the land before the eruption of Old Faithful, as we first viewed it, is an impression made upon a man in his youth, which can never be obliterated. It will be an everlasting monument to the memory of Professor Hayden and his able assistant, James Stevenson, that they at once conceived the idea that this region should be preserved forever as a public park for the uses and the pleasure of the American people.

One must visit that region to realize its great attraction. One must be there from year to year over a long course of time to have seen how the large game has gradually been obliterated from our country, until now there are but a few specimens left, and those mainly in the zoological parks of our country. The only hope for the preservation of the bison, commonly known as the buffalo, will be in the regions of this park. It is essential that this appropriation be made, and I wish to assure my colleagues that money expended in the preservation of this region is money well spent for the benefit of the entire American people. It is now under the Government control. It is thrown open to all the American people. The rates of travel and the rates of board are regulated by the Government. There is no imposition on the people. This great natural preserve is kept for their benefit, and I trust that this appropriation which tends to preserve that interesting and wonderful region will not be altered, amended, or changed in any respect. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: For continuing the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park; for the compensation and expenses of two civilian commissioners and the assistant in historical work; maps, surveys, clerical and other assistance, messenger, office expenses, and all other necessary expenses; foundations for State monuments; mowing; historical tablets, iron and bronze; iron gun carriages; and model in relief of the Nashville and of the Atlanta battlefields; for roads and their maintenance, and for the purchase of land already authorized by law; in all, $50,000.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a few questions in regard to this matter. I would like to know what are the fixed charges in this sum appropriated for the park; that is, how much is paid out for salaries, etc.

Mr. CANNON. They are as follows:

Amount estimated for.....	$50,000
ESTABLISHMENT.
Salaries.....	$22,140
Mileage, contingencies, etc.....	1,000
Lodges.....	3,000
New York monument foundation.....	3,000
Monument foundations other than New York.....	1,000
Gun carriages.....	1,920
Wall or iron fence, Point Park, 900 feet.....	2,800
Road and paths in Point Park.....	1,000
Guttering and betterment of roads.....	2,000
	38,400
MAINTENANCE.
Maintenance and repair.....	9,540
Regular supplies.....	2,000
	11,540
Total.....	50,000

Mr. MADDOX. So that of this sum of $50,000 appropriated for Chickamauga Park there is practically half, or $25,000, for salaries and mileage.

Mr. CANNON. Almost.

Mr. MADDOX. One dollar, in other words, is paid for the expense of some salaried official or mileage for every dollar that is put upon the park. Now, there is one thing I am glad to see that the Appropriation Committee has incorporated in this bill, and I desire to call the attention of the House to it in the few minutes that I have. I refer to the section beginning at the bottom of page 98, that the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to prepare and submit in the annual estimate at the next session of Congress a proposition providing for the consolidation of the existing commissions having charge of the several national military parks, etc. Now, we have these parks scattered all over the country, and we have, I think, about three park commissioners appointed for every park, paying them probably $3,500 a year salary. It is my judgment, and I am satisfied that the committee will agree with me on this subject, that all we need of these park commissioners are three, and those three should be located in the city of Washington, and then have a superintendent for each one of these parks. In that way when we appropriate $50,000 for the improvement of these battlefields we can get some benefit of this money; but as it is now here is an appropriation of $50,000 for Chickamauga, and yet absolutely $25,000 of it is paid as mere sinecures—that is, for salaries—for somebody.

Why, if you go back to the beginning, there has been money enough spent here for the survey of Chickamauga Park, from the start to the finish, to have surveyed the greatest railroad in the United States. There is not a doubt about that. These positions are mere sinecures, and I am glad to see that the Committee on Appropriations have started out to call the attention of the country to the matter, as I wish to do now. You see there is an appropriation of $50,000 here in this bill, and $25,000 of it goes merely for salaries to somebody to do nothing.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman who has preceded me have made it necessary that I should say what I have to say a little earlier than I expected to. The Committee on Military Affairs and their subcommittee on parks have already taken up this question. One of the members of that committee on the 4th of March introduced a bill (H. R. 12092) relating to that matter and providing for the appointment either of certain officers in the War Department or else a single central commission to work with the aid of such officers, in order to have a central scheme for the management of these military parks. How soon that can be put into full operation we do not know; but the matter is already before the War Department for a report to the Military Committee, with whom the subject properly resides. We expect that report in a day or two, and this very morning we have had a hearing and have had before us a prominent general in that Department, who was formerly in charge of the rebellion records of the Union and Confederate armies. At this hearing the committee went over the possibilities with reference to this matter, in order that it may be put on a proper basis.

Mr. MADDOX rose.

Mr. PARKER. I prefer that the gentleman should wait a moment, but I will yield for an interruption.

Mr. MADDOX. I was simply going to remark that I did not know that bill was pending before your committee or the House, and I wanted to indorse what the other committee had done in this direction.

Mr. PARKER. We do not wish to postpone until the next session of Congress the report of the Secretary of War on this subject, and therefore I shall make the point of order against the proviso contained in this bill, not because it is not right that such a system should be adopted, but because we want it to be investigated now. Propositions are pressing upon our committee for military parks at Stone River, at Perryville, at Appomattox, at Petersburg, at Fredericksburg, and at Atlanta, and in each case the acquisition of land and the appointment of an expensive commission are urged.

In one or two of these places the parks can not be established unless options now before us are taken advantage of, and at the same time we feel that the country will not endure the establishment of one commission after another, involving the appointment of a new commission in each case, with positions which have been referred to here as sinecures. We have before us, however, an example of one park which has not been carried on in this way. As will be seen by this bill, Antietam carries an expense of but $1,500 a year, while the others involve an expenditure of $45,000, $50,000, and $75,000 a year. The reason for this is that at Antietam, in order to preserve the appearance of the ground as the battle was fought, in order to make it a real place of patriotic memories instead of an artificial picnic ground, the War Department followed the plan not of purchasing the ground, but of obtaining narrow lanes along the battle lines of the various armies and the intrenchments and of putting upon these lanes simple and expensive monuments, showing the directions in which the lanes were crossed by the lines of battle and indicating the points of vantage from which a survey of the field could be obtained.

The whole expense of laying out that field, including an observation tower and all those routes to which I have referred and the wire fences along them, involve an expenditure of only a few tens of thousands of dollars. Now the work is complete and the annual expense is but $1,500 a year for the maintenance and repair of those roads, and yet everything is indicated just as it was. On some of the other famous battlefields the disposition of every commission to enlarge its own work and the loving enthusiasm of the people who want monuments there have resulted in the employment of landscape gardeners and artists, who in some cases, I dare say, have so improved these fields that they do not look like the old battle grounds in any respect whatever.

In conclusion, this question is now before our committee, and without repeating what I have just said to the House, I shall make the point of order to the clause on page 99, when it is reached, that it is new legislation and not within the purview of an appropriation bill.

Mr. MAHON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. Have you visited the battlefield of Antietam?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. Do you think the roads are in good condition?

Mr. PARKER. They were when I was there a few years ago.

Mr. MAHON. You had better go and look at them now, and then you will revise your speech.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman makes his point of order, I will try and meet it as best I can. Touching the query of my friend, this legislation for Chickamauga Park, Gettysburg, Shiloh, Vicksburg, was legislation that was enacted under the lead of the Committee on Military Affairs. I trust I have the gentleman's attention. It authorizes commissioners' salaries, as I recollect, of about $3,500 a year. They have a regular full outfit. The Antietam improvement was not made by virtue of any general legislation. It was picked up on a general appropriation bill when the present junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] was a member of the Committee on Appropriations. It was in his district, and I suppose was subject to a point of order. But it was entered upon. The improvement was made, and I think quite deserves the approval of my friend. Now, for this improvement there is $1,500 a year for a superintendent that looks after it. That is all that is needed. In other words, it is a battlefield that is marked.

Now, I want to say to my friend from New Jersey, that of all these Commissions, so far as I know and believe, the Chickamauga Commission has done its work most promptly; and I was gratified when General Boynton, one of these commissioners, in the examination hearings before the subcommittee, stated that after this year there was no further use for that commission; that he was satisfied that one commissioner could do the work, or it could be done without a commission. That is a little extraordinary, when somebody that belongs to a commission should suggest that at some time it may be dispensed with.

I have no doubt that some time ago most of these commissions might have been profitably dispensed with. Here was a general law. The Committee on Appropriations is restricted under the rules to appropriate in pursuance of existing law. The Committee on Military Affairs, having legislative jurisdiction, did not move last year, the year before last, and the year before that. I do not see any signs of its moving. On our examination we thought something ought to be done, and without attempting to usurp jurisdiction of any other committee, we put a provision in a little further on that, in my opinion, is not subject to the point of order; but I will meet that when the point of order comes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Shiloh National Military Park: For continuing the work of establishing a national military park on the battlefield of Shiloh, Tennessee; for the compensation of 3 civilian commissioners and the secretary, clerical, and other services, labor, land, iron gun carriages and historical tablets, maps and surveys, roads, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials, office and other necessary expenses, $400,000.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he can inform us how much has been expended up to date on the Shiloh National Park?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. The appropriations—and I take it that the appropriations fairly measure the expenditures—for 1896 were $75,000; for 1898, $60,000; for 1899, $55,000; for 1900, $55,000; for 1901, $55,000; for 1902, $50,000, and this bill recommends $400,000, making altogether about $375,000 or $380,000, and this $400,000 makes over $400,000.

Mr. CANDLER. Over $400,000?

Now, why I asked this question was simply to say this: This Shiloh National Park is situated, as all very well remember, upon the banks of the Tennessee River, some 21 miles from the city of Corinth, in which I reside. There has been expended, in accordance with the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, including the appropriation in this bill, something over $400,000 for the establishment and beautifying of this park. There is no way by which this park is accessible. By actual measurement from the park to the center of the city of Corinth it is 21 miles. The park commissioners have constructed, in the direction of the city of Corinth, a macadamized avenue or road 5 miles in length. At the city of Corinth there is a national cemetery, and also one located at Pittsburg Landing, where this park is also located.

There is a Government macadamized road extending from the national cemetery at Corinth to the center of the town. It has been taken up by the city at its terminus and extended a mile in the direction of this park by the construction of a macadamized street. The park commissioners have constructed 5 miles of road, the city of Corinth has constructed 1 mile of road, which leaves a gap of 15 miles, which, if covered by the construction thereon of a macadamized road, would make a complete roadway from the railroad point, at Corinth, to the national park at Shiloh. Every year people gather at Corinth from one end of the country to the other who desire to visit this battlefield. During every week almost in the year there are people who come to Corinth for the purpose of going to the battlefield; but, during the winter months especially, the roads are bad, and the consequence is that they have great difficulty in getting to this park, and a great many who would otherwise go do not go at all, because of the inaccessibility of the park.

Early in this session of Congress I introduced a bill providing for the construction of a road to fill this gap between the city of Corinth and Shiloh National Park. I introduced this bill at the request of the Gray and the Blue, indorsed at one of their annual reunions by a formal resolution in a meeting which they held upon the battlefield. In this month there will be another meeting of the Blue and the Gray there, as occurs each and every year. They are greatly interested in the construction of this road; and while some members here contend that it is not good policy for the Government of the United States to go into the business of constructing roads over the country, I say that this is an exceptional situation, and, in my judgment, upon proper investigation this road will commend itself not only to the people at large, but, in my judgment, it will recommend itself to the Congress of the United States, especially in view of the fact that it is desired by both the Blue and the Gray in order to make this park accessible to people who desire from time to time to go there and inspect it and look over the battlefield.

The bill I introduced has not yet been reported. I trust later we may have a report on it and a favorable report. I believe if a favorable report is made on this bill, it will commend itself to every member of the House, because of the fact that if the bill should pass and become law the road would be built along a way where every single inch of the ground is historic territory. From the city of Corinth to the Shiloh Park this road would pass all the way through a battlefield, and to anyone who desires to see that battlefield, which is one of the most historic, it would be of great benefit, and especially so in view of the construction of this park on the Shiloh battlefield, which has cost already about $400,000.

I also desire to say that in the battlefield at the city of Corinth the breastworks can still be seen in a reasonable state of preservation just as they were when the two contending foes met upon that "field of carnage." These breastworks still stand as silent but glorious monuments of the bravery and dash of the Blue, and the chivalry and undaunted courage of the Gray, now a "common heritage" of the greatest, the bravest, the noblest, and most chivalrous people on earth. It was upon this battlefield that Col. W. P. Rodgers, one of the bravest of the brave Confederates, fell leading a Texas brigade and carrying the colors, and his great courage and soldierly bearing so attracted the admiration of the contending foe that he was buried by the order of the Federal general commanding with the honors of war [applause], the second instance of the kind, as I recollect, in all the history of the world. On this battlefield he was laid to sleep wrapped in the colors of the South by the hands of the North, and in that glorious grave he rests to-day awaiting the great resurrection morn, covered with the halo and glory of both armies. Though dead, he will ever live in the hearts of his countrymen.

I am proud of the fact that he was a native Mississippian, and in one of the principal streets of my home city there is an imposing monument erected to his memory, and around his grave there is a beautiful little park, established by the city and cared for by loving hands and warm hearts of sweet women and noble men from their own free contributions. [Applause.] Now, it is these two great battlefields of Corinth and Shiloh which my proposed road will connect and make accessible to the people of the United States who desire to visit these historic spots which commemorate American manhood and this Republic's glory. [Applause.] People traveling from one of these points to the other over this road, in case it should be constructed, would have an opportunity to view every part of the historic ground intervening between the two great battlefields—one at Shiloh and the other at Corinth.

I call attention to the matter at this time in order that you may consider it and in order that it may receive at least proper and full investigation. The bill which I introduced—I wish to impress this fact upon the attention of the House—was introduced by the direct request of "the Blue and the Gray," expressed in a formal resolution passed at a meeting held by them at this battlefield, at which time they appointed a committee, by which this bill was drafted and sent to me with the request that I introduce it. I have done so in pursuance of that request. I ask that the question may be considered and investigated. What practical benefit is there in the Government expending these hundreds of thousands of dollars on this park—and I am not opposing the park—when it is inaccessible? That is the question I want you to consider, and which I desire to leave with you. Consider it and help me to get this bill favorably reported and then passed, and let us construct this road and thereby connect these two great battlefields, these two national cemeteries, and make this park accessible. [Great applause.]

Mr. CANNON. No amendment has been offered, I believe, to the paragraph last read; and I shall be content with a single sentence. I have nothing but the best feeling toward the gentleman and his constituents; but I hope if there should come up any legislative provision that the United States should acquire from the State of Tennessee a public road for the purpose of improving it, the measure will not meet with favorable consideration in this House.

Mr. CANDLER. Suppose the people should donate the ground on which the road is to be constructed?

Mr. CANNON. That would not make any difference. I would not want the Government to take it as a gift. I have no doubt that the people there would be glad to donate it; and I have no doubt that all my people in Illinois would be glad to donate all the public roads there to the General Government. Such would no doubt be the disposition in many other localities throughout the United States, for the Government when it takes charge of a road makes very good road improvements.

But, Mr. Chairman, the best way to secure the improvement of those 15 miles of road down there in Tennessee, so that travelers will not suffer inconvenience in the muddy season, is for our good friends there to come up shoulder to shoulder, as the people do in similar cases in Illinois and elsewhere, and make such improvements on that road as will make it what it ought to be.

The subject is not here for consideration, and that is all I have to say about it. I ask that the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vicksburg National Military Park: For continuing the work of establishing the Vicksburg National Military Park; for the compensation of three civilian commissioners, the secretary and historian; for clerical and other services, labor, iron gun carriages, the mounting of siege guns, monuments, markers, and tablets giving historical facts, compiled without praise and without censure; maps and surveys; roads, bridges, restoration of earthworks, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials; office and other necessary expenses, $100,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by inserting before the word "tablets," in line 20, the word "historical."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to prepare and submit, in the annual estimates, at the next session of Congress a proposition providing for the consolidation of the existing commissions having charge of the several national military parks, or substituting therefor a commission consisting of one or more members to have charge and direction, under the War Department, of the future improvement, care, and maintenance of all of said military parks. The Secretary of War shall also submit estimates for each of said parks in accordance with the proposition herein required to be submitted.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, on the paragraph just read I desire to make a point of order, for two reasons. This paragraph authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to submit estimates and a proposition for new legislation—

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will yield a moment, I wish to ask the Chair whether points of order were reserved on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that when the bill was reported all points of order were reserved.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, this section authorizes and directs a Government officer to do a certain thing. That, in my judgment, is legislation. That is the first point that I make against the paragraph. The second is that legislation with reference to military parks—and I do not speak of appropriations for them, but of legislation as to the constitution of the commissions having charge of such parks and for the abolition of such commissions—that whole subject belongs to another committee, the Committee on Military Affairs.

The responsibility for initiating such legislation is upon that committee, who have now before them at least 10 bills for the establishment of new parks and new commissions. They have also under consideration the question whether the management and control of the older parks can be more efficient and economical. The question of national cemeteries is also before that committee. It has the responsibility of these matters, and it is not in accordance with the rules of the House that an appropriation bill, reported by the Appropriations Committee, should trench upon the rights of the Military Committee. I think the gentleman in charge of this bill will recognize the desire for the public service which prompts my objection.

This appropriation bill was reported on the 28th day of March, and the bill to which I have just referred, introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], providing for a single commission, was introduced on the 4th of March, so that we are already in charge of this subject, investigating it, and expect to have a report from the Secretary long before the next session.

I submit to the Chair my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph is not subject to a point of order. I do not think this is new legislation within the meaning of the rules. It directs the Secretary of War to submit an estimate covering a proposition for the consolidation of the commissions having charge of these parks, etc. That is all. It does not change the law. It is in the form of a resolution of inquiry—

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman allow me to ask whether the paragraph does not propose a change of law by providing that with the estimates the Secretary of War shall submit proposed legislation? Is not that a change of law?

Mr. CANNON. Well, it seems to me that within the meaning of the rules it is not. In other words, it does not affect the expenditure of a dollar; it does not change the law touching these parks. It is in the nature of a resolution of inquiry. And the gentleman who makes the point must admit it is apt and appropriate. That is all I care to say.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it would help to clear thinking upon this point of order which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] interposes by recurring to the language of the rule. That rule, which is the second paragraph of Rule 21, provides as follows:

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

That part of the rule clearly has no relevancy to the pending point of order, because the paragraph under consideration makes no appropriation whatever, and if that paragraph is not in order it is because it is obnoxious to the part of the rule which I will now read:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

I submit, respectfully, that there is nothing in this paragraph which changes any existing law. If this act becomes a law there will be no change in any existing statute law of the United States. There has been no law pointed out which this would change, and it is simply—as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has said, and exhausted the question in so saying—a resolution of inquiry. Now, what is the subject-matter? The subject-matter is national parks. They are established by various statutes which have been enacted by Congress, not one line of which is disturbed by this paragraph. After those parks are established it becomes the duty, not of the Committee on Military Affairs, but of the Committee on Appropriations, to provide the funds for their maintenance. The Committee on Appropriations has the right to obtain information upon the subject. The Committee on Appropriations, although authorized to appropriate for every official that is named and prescribed in those several acts, is not obliged to do so if in the judgment of that committee those officials are unnecessary.

It is therefore entirely within the right of the Committee on Appropriations to acquire information upon which they can intelligently exercise that judgment and discussion which under the rules of the House is vested in them, and all that it is proposed to do by this paragraph is to acquire that information. It is quite true that if this paragraph proposed to amend the various park acts by abolishing the commissions attached to them, then it would be subject to a point of order. It would be subject to a point of order in the first place, because the committee has no jurisdiction over this subject; and in the second place, because it would be a change of existing law; but the Committee on Appropriations, having jurisdiction to give or withhold the support to the various commissions that are behind these various parks, has the right to have the information upon which that discretion can be intelligently exercised, and as this paragraph proposes nothing further than the acquisition of information for that purpose, I respectfully submit that it is in order in this bill.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the construction of the paragraph seems to me hardly to bear out the contention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. I will read the paragraph submitted:

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to prepare and submit, in the annual estimates, at the next session of Congress, a proposition providing for the consolidation of the existing commissions having charge of the several national military parks, etc.

He is directed to prepare and submit a proposition providing for the consolidation of existing commissions in his next Book of Estimates. Now, as I have read the existing law providing for the submission of estimates, it provides for the submission of certain amounts for certain specified objects. If those amounts be changed, the Secretary is directed to note what the changes shall be, and note the reasons for those changes.

Now, that is the existing law, as I understand. Now, in addition to that this paragraph provides that in addition to the changes, in addition to the appropriations, he shall submit, further, a proposition for legislation for the consolidation of existing commissions. That is not an inquiry. It is not a change of amount, nor is it a notation for a change. He is directed to submit proposed legislation. Now, it is true that the Committee on Appropriations has full authority any time they see fit to withhold appropriations from any one of these commissions. They have authority to cut down the expenditures for any of these commissions; they have authority to practically abolish them; but they have no authority to provide that one commission shall have jurisdiction over the territory of any other of the commissions. They have no authority and can get no authority within the rules to provide that the Gettysburg commission shall have authority over Shiloh or Vicksburg or Chickamauga, but that is what this proposed legislation for consolidation would do. It seems to me clear, therefore, that the proposed legislation would be an addition to the work now prescribed for the submission of estimates to Congress by the Secretary of War and that the proposed consolidation would be additional legislation contrary to the rule.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for just a few moments, perhaps not strictly to the point of order. I would say that if I were in the chair I should hesitate a long time before I should overrule a point of order. But here are some gentlemen on the Military Affairs Committee and on the Committee on Appropriations who admit legislation of this character is absolutely necessary. Now, if it be allowed to remain upon this bill it will become a law. If we are to depend upon the Military Affairs Committee to satisfy, if you please, a jealousy that they may have, it is a command to one that it can not become a law at this session of Congress.

Now, I ask the gentleman here representing the Military Affairs Committee to waive the point of order. Enact your legislation if you desire and if you can. It can do no harm to have it here and in your bill, too, but when you consider the danger of the defeat of legislation of this kind I hope the gentleman will look at the good of the service and withdraw the point of order and permit this legislation to remain in the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the implied question that he has put to me?

Mr. LOUD. Why, certainly; if it was an implied question.

Mr. PARKER. You asked me to waive the point of order, or to wait.

Mr. LOUD. I did, yes; in the interest of the public service, which you yourself admit this to be.

Mr. PARKER. It is in the interest of the public service that I ought not to waive or to wait. If this bill passes, what is the Secretary of War to say to the inquiry we have already addressed to him relative to this very subject?

Mr. CANNON. It does not affect it in the slightest.

Mr. PARKER. I beg your pardon, I will answer.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. PARKER. He will say he is "authorized and directed" to give this information at the next session, and that he is not asked for an immediate answer.

Mr. LOUD. That would not prevent him from sending the information to you upon your demand at once.

Mr. PARKER. It is a direction of Congress that he shall take the time to wait and investigate the subject until the next session before he furnishes the information. Meanwhile we are inquiring, and if the gentleman knew the position of affairs in the Military Committee he would feel my responsibility. I will say to him frankly that he will find a minority report in the files of this House with reference to one of these parks, the very best proposition possibly that was before the committee, which was reported in spite of the protest of the minority, establishing a new commission. Yet we have the greatest sympathy with the marking of battlefields and with the preservation for the people of the country of the memory of these battle grounds. But we have no sympathy with expenses which are wastefully incurred. At the same time we can not stop these propositions, we can not say to the gentleman from Mississippi, or the gentleman from Virginia, or the gentlemen from other States where there are battlefields, that they must wait, and that their propositions are all wrong.

Mr. LOUD. What has that got to do with this question?

Mr. PARKER. Why, in order to justify our stand, we must provide a system which will enable the marking of these battlefields to go on in an economical and proper way, instead of going on as it goes on now; we must have a system to propose to these gentlemen, and we must have it now.

Mr. LOUD. This will not prevent you.

Mr. PARKER. It prevents our getting an answer from the Secretary of War.

Mr. LOUD. Why, no. The gentleman says the request is already before the Secretary of War.

Mr. PARKER. And the Secretary of War—

Mr. LOUD. One moment. This bill can not become legislation for at least a month or six weeks, and perhaps two months.

Mr. PARKER. Is not this a revocation of our request?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. LOUD. Not at all.

Mr. PARKER. Does it not direct the Secretary to prepare and submit the information in his next annual estimate at the next session of Congress?

Mr. LOUD. That is just what he will do if you prepare legislation along the line you suggest. But if I can not touch the gentleman's heart, then I have talked in vain, and I will quit.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, just a word more in reply to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS]. I agree with him entirely that it would not be in order for the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill, or a section or paragraph of a bill, withholding any authority from the existing commissions in charge of the several battlefield parks, but I say again that the proposition is simply for the acquisition of information. It is the constant practice of the various committees of the House to report specific resolutions of inquiry which are in substance the same as this paragraph. This paragraph simply provides that the Committee on Appropriations, having the responsibility for the expenditure of the public moneys in respect to this service, ask the Secretary of War what it would cost to do this in some other way. There is nothing more to it. It in no way interferes with the Committee on Military Affairs, which has complete charge of this subject-matter. The question is, simply, tell us at the next session of Congress what it would cost to do this work, which is now extravagantly done—what it would cost to do it in another way, and I submit that it is within the authority of any committee in the House to make that inquiry. Now, this is constantly done, and inquiries are constantly answered by the various heads of the departments.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say, but simply want to submit a reference to that part of the rules which refers to change of existing law. On page 344 of the Manual I find the following:

A provision for compiling the record of tests of dairy cows at the Columbian Exposition was held to be legislation and subject to the point of order, although the law gives the Secretary of Agriculture certain general authority to acquire and diffuse information.

It is precisely in point. A provision specially authorizing the acquiring of certain information was held improper, although there was general authority already to acquire that information.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from New Jersey to insist upon his point of order?

Mr. PARKER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending paragraph authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to do certain things which in the opinion of the Chair he is not now authorized and directed to do by existing law. In other words, it is an effort to enact law where no law now exists, and is thus a change of existing law and obnoxious to the rules, that—no provision changing existing law shall be in order on any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

While the Chair has a great deal of sympathy with the spirit and purpose of the paragraph, he feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On page 98, after line 24, insert:

"No part of the foregoing sums for national military parks shall be used during the fiscal year 1903 for the payment of more than one commissioner for service in connection with each of said parks under the direction of the Secretary of War, nor shall more than 10 per centum of the sums for either of said parks be expended for salaries of clerks or other employees."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Garfield Memorial Hospital: For maintenance, to enable it to provide medical and surgical treatment to persons unable to pay therefor, $19,000, one-half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 100, line 20, after the word "therefor," insert "under contract to be made with the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Harbor of New York: For prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City. For pay of inspectors and deputy inspectors, office force, and expenses of office, $10,200.

Mr. PALMER. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if the Government of the United States is paying $70,260 every year to keep the people of New York from throwing ashes into their own harbor?

Mr. CANNON. I will say, in answer to that, there is a general law that establishes this service, and this appropriation is in pursuance of that general law; and my understanding is that it has been upon the theory that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and that it is practically a service for dealing with deposits of offal which accumulate in the city of New York, to see that it goes out to deep water. The act was passed in 1888.

Mr. PALMER. Would it not be a better plan to enforce the penal laws on the subject, that make it an offense to throw anything into the harbor of New York, and put a few of these people in the penitentiary, and save this $70,000 that is spent by the Government?

Mr. CANNON. Still answering, that, I suppose, would cover some, but the fact is that nevertheless the law provides for this service; and I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that New York Harbor is quite an extended harbor; that New Jersey has jurisdiction in part and New York in part, and that there is a large aggregation of people in Brooklyn, New York, Jersey City, and there is a very large commerce. I recollect when the legislation was enacted that it was urged, and I think truly, that the harbor of New York was very seriously impaired from filling up, because the police authorities were not able to enforce the carrying out of this refuse to deep water to be unloaded. Of course, the penal laws might meet it in part, if they could be enforced, and I am inclined to think that Congress did wisely in enacting the legislation; but let that be as it may, the legislation is upon the statute books.

Mr. PALMER. So that you can not do anything but appropriate the money?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; it is in our power to withhold the appropriation for this service; but it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to report the appropriations with or without recommendations. We report it with a favorable recommendation. It is in the power of the Committee of the Whole to decrease it or to practically nullify it all so far as this service is concerned for next year by absolutely striking out all of the appropriation.

Mr. PALMER. Do not you think it would be a good plan to put the burden on the people of the city of New York of keeping that harbor clear, and not taxing the people of the United States for this purpose?

Mr. CANNON. The State of New Jersey is near by and you would put it on both of them. I have long been of the opinion that mankind ought to perform their duties, individually and collectively; but unfortunately they do not. The truth is, here is a great harbor, necessary to the commerce in which my friend is as much interested for his constituency as I am, further west; and all of us, perhaps, as much interested as the average citizen of New York. We spend a great many millions of dollars in deepening the channels and in improving the harbors and in having them policed.

Mr. PALMER. And you let them do it; you do not enforce the penal laws, but make us poor taxpayers pay $75,000 a year to keep those pirates from throwing ashes into their own harbor.

Mr. CANNON. I have long believed that if I had supreme power I could go over to New York and straighten things out. [Laughter.] It would be a pretty big job, I know, with Tammany right in front of me; but I think if I had supreme power I could "turn the rascals out," and if necessary hire others in their places.

A MEMBER. At cheaper wages.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have never, I never shall, oppose an appropriation for the establishment or beautifying national military parks to commemorate the deeds of our heroic dead.

A pressing necessity compels us now to provide for the unfortunate and insane soldiers who come from the Philippines. In our memory of the dead let us not forget the unfortunate living.

Harrowing tales have been told by tongue and by press of the unfortunates who, coming to San Francisco by boat from the Philippine Islands, have been transported thence, diseased in mind and body, over the long, tortuous, and tiresome journey across the continent to the Government hospital for the insane, across the Potomac River from Washington.

We should be most merciful to these soldiers who enlisted and fought and went insane in the service of their country. Already 280 have come to St. Elizabeth Asylum. At least 100 a year will continue to come, according to the estimate of an expert authority. No human heart, no patriotic man desires that these insane soldiers, who voluntarily, for country, faced the dangers and vicissitudes that drove them mad, should have their malady enhanced by the exposures, perils, and troubles incident to a railroad transportation from California to Washington. Troubled minds need rest. Within a week or two a large body of soldiers—unfortunate, insane soldiers—landed at San Francisco and were hurried on their week's travel to the District of Columbia. The newspapers, the chroniclers of events, tell the story of these travels as each new group of insane are hurried away from the most salubrious climate in the world 3,000 miles to the hospital here.

It is not pleasant to see one bereft of reason in the garb of a soldier, and every reason exists why this Government should take the earliest and best means in its power to cure the ills from which they suffer, and especially when this may have come from the unhealthy conditions that prevail in the tropical climate in which they served.

The Government asylum in Washington is crowded. A personal inquiry this morning brought me the information that there are 2,200 insane patients there, many of them huddled together in cramped and temporary quarters awaiting the building and completion of the addition to the present asylum which Congress so generously provided for in its appropriation of a million dollars two years ago. I am informed that the work is progressing satisfactorily, but that, when completed, it will only accommodate comfortably 2,600 inmates.

According to the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, it is shown that at the beginning of the year there were 2,076 inmates, and that there were admitted during the year in addition 655, making a total of 2,731 under treatment.

During the year there were 226 deaths, 235 were discharged recovered, 77 improved, 17 unimproved, leaving on the records at the close of the year 2,177, divided as follows: Army, 847; Navy, 123; Marine-Hospital Service, 31; from civil life, 1,175.

As this institution cares for the District insane and transient insane at Washington, which constitute more than one-half of the total number, and as the population of the institution is constantly increasing, it seems apparent that there is not sufficient room for the Philippine soldiers there at the present time nor will there be on its completion.

The natural increment will, by the time the improvements are completed, tax its full capacity.

Unfortunately this asylum is near the Potomac Flats. The death rate at the institution is about 10 per cent per annum.

The vital statistics of the census of 1900 show the following mortality in the respective localities per thousand of population: District of Columbia, 23.65; Baltimore, 23; Cincinnati, 21; Chicago, 19; Buffalo, 18; Allegheny, 18; Los Angeles, 20; Oakland, 18.80; Stockton, 10.12. The last three points in California are those to which invalids go to recuperate and prolong their lives, and in consequence a higher mortality is shown. In point of climate and salubrity no argument is needed for California. The per capita cost of maintenance of a patient per annum in the asylum here is $220; in California it is about $150. It costs $70 in railroad fare to bring an insane soldier from California to the asylum here, not counting the cost of the guard accompanying. Fifty-three per cent recover their faculties in four months. In such a case it will be seen that the cost of railroad fare is $70 and the cost of cure $72. This of course leaves out of consideration the cost of the guard who brings the patient to Washington. My information is that 75 per cent or thereabouts get permanently well.

Public duty, it seems to me, calls upon us to care for and cure these soldiers in California, not at the per capita cost at Washington of $220, but at the per capita of $150.

Every consideration that appeals to heart and mind calls upon us to do it.

In the last Congress the junior Senator from Maine, Senator HALE, introduced a bill, which was favorably reported by the senior Senator from California, Senator PERKINS, for the Naval Committee, and which passed that body, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to care for the insane of the Navy and the Marine Corps in the asylums of California. Why has it not been done? It is right.

Every consideration, every reason, patriotic, financial, economic, appeals to the hearts and the minds of the American people not to permit a poor, unfortunate, insane soldier to be dragged across the continent 3,000 miles, from our most salubrious climate, and that man wearing the uniform of an American soldier.

I hope the chairman of the committee, I hope the members of his committee, I hope Congress, will see that those 100 insane from the Philippine Islands each year are cared for in that beautiful and salubrious climate of California. That great State stands ready with her institutions to care for the insane and unfortunate of our Army. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, there was a law enacted at the last session of Congress—I am so informed, though I have no recollection of it—permitting the treatment of insane soldiers at any State or other institution. Is that correct?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The bill to which the gentleman refers was Senate bill 5238. It gave the Secretary of the Navy authority to contract for the care, maintenance, and treatment of the insane of the Navy and Marine Corps on the Pacific coast at any asylum in the State of California. That bill passed the Senate, but did not pass this House.

Mr. CANNON. I was under the impression that such legislation had been enacted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am sorry that the bill did not become a law. I think there would be no objection to it if it were brought up here. I simply rose to call the attention of the gentleman and his committee to the condition that prevails, and if the gentleman will allow me to trespass a moment further on his courtesy I will say that I believe it will be ascertained on inquiry at the insane asylum here that there is no objection to that measure whatever.

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment, whether the law passed or not, it is quite in the power of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War to have the soldiers or sailors treated by contract. If that is not the law, it ought to be, and I am informed by one who is much more familiar with the legislation that has been enacted than I am that such a provision passed, probably on the Army and Navy bill. If it is not the law, the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction. If it is the law, then the Army and Navy appropriation bill would carry the appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I simply wanted to emphasize the condition that prevailed where these soldiers are brought clear across our country, with all their misfortunes, adding to their ailments as it must, and that the asylum people here and the authorities say they are so crowded that they would gladly welcome that kind of legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have no objection to my friend's emphasizing what he desires to say in the premises. I quite sympathize with him, but, after all, a little bit of action, if any is needed, is worth a good deal of emphasis.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pumping station, pipe, etc., $11,000.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 104 strike out the lines 7 and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For increase and betterment of the water supply, $6,000."

Mr. CANNON. I offer this at the request of the board of managers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $584,500.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to correct the total, and I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 104, in line 19, strike out "eighty-four" and insert "seventy-nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For new boilers, $3,500.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 105, after line 15, insert "for guard barrack, $7,000."

Mr. CANNON. I will state that the Board of Managers desire the appropriation.

Mr. STEELE. It was estimated for, and the Board earnestly urged it. It was overlooked in the printing of the bill, I suppose. It is very desirable that in that climate we should have this barrack, because they have no convenience of the kind whatever, and it is very hard for as old soldiers as they are to get from their barracks at all times to a headquarters where the guard must be distributed or assigned to stations.

Mr. CANNON. The committee left it out. It is estimated for, it is true. The committee left out an additional barrack that was estimated for at Leavenworth, for the reason that your committee was satisfied with the construction of the Home in Tennessee, that all parties that are entitled to be cared for would in the future be properly cared for; but I will not antagonize the amendment as the Board of Managers are of the opinion that the service at this point requires the barrack.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I would state about the barrack that it is believed that the Home now building at Johnson City, Tenn., and additional barracks at Togus, Me., and one at Leavenworth, they really ought to have, we will be able to take care for the next two years, provided the increase does not largely exceed what it has been in the last two years, of all soldiers coming to us, but this is more in reply to propositions for the building of new Homes than it is in reply to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; but the barracks suggested are really needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extension of electric-light plant, $7,500.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 16, page 108, the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eleven."

Mr. CURTIS. This is recommended by the Board of Managers. They say they can not erect a plant for $7,500.

Mr. STEELE. We have attempted to make contracts within the amount, but could not do it. It is absolutely necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 108, line 17, after the word "dollars," insert "for extension of boiler house, to be immediately available, $7,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I also offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 108, after the last amendment, insert "for additional boiler, $6,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one combined barrack, $40,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I understand the Board of Managers are of opinion that this barrack ought to be constructed.

Mr. STEELE. The Leavenworth Home is in the center of a very large soldier population—taking them from New Mexico and Colorado and other points in the far West and Southwest—and I think it is in all respects desirable that we should have additional accommodations there. It is on about the same footing with Togus, Me.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to state further that the Home has been overcrowded for the last five or six years. The officers of the Home all claim that this additional barrack is needed.

Mr. STEELE. I will say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that there is an additional reason why this kind of a barrack should be constructed. It is for the purpose of caring for the older men, who are unable to go to the dining room. It is practically an addition to the hospital, but at the same time it will make room in the barracks for newcomers to the Home.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to just say a single word touching this appropriation, recommended, as it is, by the Board and also by the gentleman from Kansas. I shall not antagonize by my vote the appropriation for the construction of this additional barrack at Leavenworth. I want to say, however, that after much inquiry I am thoroughly satisfied that with the construction of this barrack and the completion of the Home in Tennessee, that the accommodations will be ample for all the soldier population in the future. I was of opinion, and your committee were of opinion, that this barrack should not be constructed at the Leavenworth Home. I will not go into the condition at other places, but I do say that to my knowledge there is ample room for many hundreds of soldiers in quarters already constructed and not occupied; but I defer in my judgment about it to the judgment of the Board and the gentleman from Indiana, a member of it, and withdraw any opposition to the construction of this additional barrack, expressing again the belief, that amounts to a conviction, that all who are entitled to relief under the law are and will be fully provided for in the construction of the Home in Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For household, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, and for necessary expenses for the procurement, piping, and preservation of natural gas, $25,000.

Mr. STEELE. I move to insert after the word "gas," in line 18, the words "oil, and water."

Under the present law we may procure natural gas by purchase, or drill gas wells, but we are also digging artesian wells in our country from which artesian water is sometimes obtained, and in some of the wells which are drilling for gas the gas is followed by oil, and we want this proviso in order to take care of those commodities as we find them in our own wells in desirable qualities and quantities.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, and for necessary expenses for the procurement, piping, and preservation of natural gas, $25,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriations for repairs for any of the Branch Homes shall be used for the construction of any new building.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, after the word "gas," at the end of line 2, I desire to offer the same amendment that I offered a moment ago, to insert the words "oil, and water."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 111, after the word "gas," in line 2, insert "oil, and water."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For farm, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $10,000.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add, after the words "Central Branch," in line 9, an amendment, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 111, after the words "Central Branch," in line 9, insert: "And for necessary expenses for the procurement, piping, and preservation of natural gas, oil, and water."

Mr. STEELE. I offer that for the same reason that I offered the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the Danville Branch, Danville, Ill.: For current expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $31,750.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 111, lines 14 and 15, strike out "thirty-one thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert "thirty-three thousand three hundred and fifty."

Mr. STEELE. That is in order to increase the appropriation $1,600 to provide for a commissary who has not been appointed at that post yet, where one is needed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For hospital, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $33,100.

Mr. STEELE. I move to strike out the word "one," the last word in line 23, and to insert the word "eight."

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 111, line 23, strike out the word "one" and insert "eight," so that it will read, "$33,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clothing for all of the Branches, namely: Expenditures for clothing, underclothing, hats, caps, boots, shoes, socks, and overalls; also all sums expended for labor, materials, machines, tools, and appliances employed, and for use in the tailor shops, knitting shops, and shoe shops, or other Home shops in which any kind of clothing is made or repaired, $300,000.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I did not get to speak to the chairman of the committee, but there is a call for $310,000 for clothing, instead of what is provided in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. We gave the estimates.

Mr. STEELE. You are $10,000 less than their estimates.

Mr. CANNON. It may be that you did not submit their estimates. If this estimate is submitted—

Mr. STEELE. The treasurer of the Home called my attention to it a very short time ago, and said an additional amount would be necessary, because provision had not been made for the probable number of men taken into the Danville Home during the next fiscal year.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will see. Three hundred thousand was estimated; but if the gentleman says that for clothing, etc., $300,000 is not sufficient and that the board desires an additional $10,000—

Mr. STEELE. Suppose you make it $305,000?

Mr. CANNON. It is a question of what is needed.

Mr. STEELE. I am told that they would absolutely need $310,000.

Mr. CANNON. Are you satisfied that $310,000 would be required?

Mr. STEELE. That would be my judgment, on his estimates.

Mr. CANNON. Offer your amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 113, line 3, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and ten."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For president of the Board of Managers, $4,000; secretary of the Board of Managers, $2,000; general treasurer, who shall not be a member of the Board of Managers, $4,000; inspector-general, $2,500; assistant general treasurer and assistant inspector-general, $2,000; two assistant inspectors-general, at $2,000 each; clerical services for the offices of the president and general treasurer, $10,000; messenger service for president's office, $144; clerical services for managers, $3,400; agents, $1,800; for traveling expenses of the Board of Managers, their officers and employees, $15,000; for outdoor relief, $1,000; for rent, medical examinations, stationery, telegrams, and other incidental expenses, $6,000; in all, $55,844.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to a few changes that have been requested and recommended by the Board of Managers. I talked with the subcommittee about it, but for some reason or other the matter was overlooked. I am in hopes it was an oversight on the part of the Board. It is desired to increase the salaries of the inspector-general and the assistant treasurer by $500. They asked for $1,000. This would be just the same as the other officers are paid. They do not only inspect the National Homes and keep the accounts of the National Homes, but they inspect and keep account of the various State Homes, some 26 in number, and this involves a great deal of work. Living as they must at headquarters, it is very expensive. So that I do not believe that they have enough pay. I think they ought to have more, and I have asked for this amendment, and I hope there will be no objection to increasing the pay of these gentlemen to the extent suggested.

Mr. VANDIVER. How many are there?

Mr. STEELE. There is the inspector-general. His pay is $2,500, and it is proposed to make it $3,000. There are the assistant general treasurer and two assistant inspectors-general. Their salaries are each $2,000, and it is proposed to make them $2,500. I move that amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman if these salaries are now fixed by law?

Mr. STEELE. The salaries are fixed, or may be fixed, by the board of managers. The appropriations are made by Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask if the law does not prescribe the amount of the salary.

Mr. CANNON. It only dwells in appropriation bills, as I understand.

Mr. STEELE. That is all.

Mr. BARTLETT. You say the law does not fix the salary of these officers?

Mr. STEELE. Congress only makes the appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Only as they are appropriated for. The gentleman from Indiana, I understand, now proposes to increase the salary of the inspector-general from $2,500 to $3,000.

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. And the assistant general's treasurer and assistant inspector-general from $2,000 to $2,500?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Two assistant inspectors-general from $2,000 to $2,500?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Do you offer this amendment?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir; I will offer this amendment. This was presented to the committee by the board.

Mr. CANNON. The matter was presented to the Committee on Appropriations and heard, and your committee did not follow your recommendation to increase the salaries, although I will confess that the recommendations made by the Board of Managers touching the administration of this fund have very great influence with me. We have not followed the policy in this bill of increasing salaries. In fact, it is not a salary bill. We did not report the recommendation; and still I want to be entirely fair with the Committee of the Whole, and if the gentleman for the board insists on this increase with the statement of fact I have said all I desire to say about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 113, line 11, strike out "two" and insert the word "three;" and, after the word "thousand," strike out the words "five hundred," so that it will read "$3,000." In line 12, after the word "thousand," insert the words "five hundred;" and, in line 13, after the word "thousand," insert "five hundred."

Mr. STEELE. And, in line 15, after the word "thousand," insert "five hundred."

The Clerk read as follows:

And, in line 15, after the word "thousand," insert the words "five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the officers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and of the Board of Managers thereof, shall be appointed, so far as may be practicable, from persons whose military or naval service would render them eligible, if disabled and not otherwise provided for, for admission to the Home, and they may be appointed, removed, and transferred from time to time, as the interests of the institution may require, by the Board of Managers.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on this paragraph so that the matter may be explained. I do not quite understand it.

Mr. STEELE. We now admit to the National Home soldiers of the Mexican war, volunteer soldiers of the civil war, soldiers of the Regular Army who were disabled during the war or who became disabled after the war, and lately, by the action of Congress, we admit soldiers of the Spanish war. Now the object of this legislation is to enable the board, if it so desires, to make officers out of soldiers of the Spanish war as we now do out of soldiers of the other wars. On account of the age of some of the present incumbents, the necessity for this legislation must become more apparent every day.

Mr. PARKER. May I ask whether this matter was brought up by the board at the meeting of the Appropriations Committee. I can not find any proceedings on the subject in the report of the hearing.

Mr. STEELE. It certainly was.

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect whether the hearings were reported or not, but this subject was certainly considered. We had an extended hearing on the subject.

Mr. PARKER. Then, as I understand, the object of this provision is to enable the board of managers to appoint as officers veterans of the Spanish war.

Mr. STEELE. If so desired.

Mr. PARKER. To enable the board of managers to appoint, if so desired, veterans of the Spanish war as officers, instead of being confined, as now, to veterans of the civil war?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PARKER. May I ask also whether the provision for transfer from one Home to another is not entirely new?

Mr. STEELE. No; it is not new.

Mr. PARKER. I have not found that word in the old statute.

Mr. STEELE. For instance, we may now send soldiers to the asylum here—

Mr. PARKER. I am speaking of officers. The language of the bill is that—

Hereafter officers may be appointed, removed, and transferred, from time to time.

Mr. STEELE. That is to provide for a case of this kind: Suppose we have an officer who is well qualified and is doing duty in a certain Home and we establish a new Home, we may wish to transfer him to that new Home.

Mr. PARKER. But this word "transfer" is new in the statute?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PARKER. I am only endeavoring to bring out an explanation for the benefit of the House. Although this matter may not have been brought up before the Committee on Military Affairs as it should strictly have been as a general provision with reference to Soldiers' Homes, I have no desire to obstruct by a point of order any legislation that may be desired by the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes. Therefore, in view of the explanation which has been made, I withdraw the point of order.

The clerk read as follows:

Defense of suits before Spanish Treaty Claims Commission: For salaries and expenses in defense of claims before the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, including salaries of Assistant Attorney-General in charge as fixed by law, and of assistant attorneys and necessary employees in Washington or elsewhere, to be selected and their compensation fixed by the Attorney-General, to be expended under his direction, so much of the provisions of the act of March 2, 1901, providing for the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission as are in conflict herewith notwithstanding, $80,000.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, on page 117, strike out "60" and insert "112," so as to read $112,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the necessity for this amendment is fully set out in a letter from the Attorney-General, which I will ask to have inserted in my remarks, not taking time to have it read, unless some member desires that it should be.

The letter referred to by Mr. CANNON is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., March, 29, 1902.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I send you a copy of a letter I wrote to-day to the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate for an increase in the amount originally estimated as necessary for the defense of suits before the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission for the fiscal year 1903 from $80,000 to $112,000, and have the honor to request that the sundry civil bill, in which this appropriation of $80,000 is included as reported to the House, be amended so as to appropriate $112,000. I will be glad to give you additional information as to the reasons for this increase in the appropriation if you think it necessary.

Respectfully,

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., March 29, 1902.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: I have the honor to request that a proper estimate be submitted to Congress for an increase in the amount to be provided for the defense of suits before the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission for the fiscal year 1903 from $30,000, as requested by my letter to you of December 9, 1901, and as now provided in the sundry civil bill as reported to the House of Representatives, to $112,000.

When the original estimate of December 9, 1901, was made the matter of the defense of suits had not progressed far enough, nor had work enough been done, nor the character of that work sufficiently developed to give the Department proper data upon which to base a correct estimate, that of $80,000 being tentative.

To enable the Department to do the work anticipated during the coming year will probably require several additional assistant attorneys in Cuba and possibly one in Spain. The amount needed for obtaining testimony, paying witnesses, traveling expenses, and commissioners' fees in the United States, Spain, and Cuba can not be estimated with accuracy, but it is evident that the taking of testimony in Spain and in Cuba, with 400 cases on the docket for trial, will be large. I think it preferable to have a proper appropriation made at the outset rather than to have to call for a deficiency early in the session.

Respectfully,

Attorney-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the Clerk may correct the totals in accordance with the amendments that have been made.

There was no objection.

Mr. PEARRE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, page 117, after the word "dollars," add the following new paragraph:

"To enable the Secretary of War to reimburse George W. Dant for such expenses incurred by him in legal proceedings growing out of the Ford's Theater disaster on the 9th day of June, 1893, as the Secretary of War may decide to have been necessary, proper, and reasonable, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve a point of order on that proposition.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I am not distinctly clear whether this is the proper place in the bill at which this amendment should be offered, except on the general theory that the Government of the United States is presumed to be continually pursuing the general public work or object of doing justice to its citizens. If, however, this appears not to be the appropriate place, I will, after the bill has been read, ask unanimous consent to turn back to the items under the head of the War Department, in order that—

Mr. CANNON. I make no point of order as to the place at which it is proposed to insert the proposition. If the Committee of the Whole should adopt the amendment, it can be inserted in the appropriate place. The point I make has reference to the merits.

Mr. PEARRE. Now, Mr. Chairman, as is well known, this whole community was shocked on the 9th of June, 1893, by a singularly fatal accident in connection with the collapse of Ford's old theater in this city, located on Tenth street between E and F streets NW. It had become necessary, it appears, in order to improve the electric lighting apparatus of that building, which was at that time used by the Government of the United States for the office of the Record and Pension Division of the War Department, to make certain excavations under or near the outer cellar wall, in order that the new electric lighting apparatus might be accommodated.

The Government asked for proposals for bids, bids were offered, and the successful bidder was George W. Dant, of the District of Columbia. The work to be done was a work of excavation, and he then became the general contractor to do the work. He, however, let out by subcontracts a great deal of this work and different portions of this work to other parties, each one of these contractors, under the proposals for the bids, being not under the control of Mr. Dant, the original contractor, but under the absolute control of officers who had charge of the building, namely, General Ainsworth, M. R. Thorp, chief of the supply division, and Mr. Sasse.

General Ainsworth had general charge of the building and of the work as Chief of the Record and Pension Division of the War Department. Mr. Thorp had charge of the building and was in the building itself, being a subordinate officer to General Ainsworth. Mr. Sasse was another subordinate officer to General Ainsworth, and was connected with the personal supervision of the excavations made by the subcontractors under their subcontracts with Mr. Dant, the general contractor. A clause in the proposals reads as follows:

All earth excavated must be removed at once and no accumulation of dirt allowed in or about the building. All excavation must be done at such times and in such manner as the officer in charge of the building may direct, in order that the work of underpinning and building walls may be safely and properly done.

It will appear from that section of the proposal for bids (which of course became a part of the contract and was written into the contract between the Government and George W. Dant, general contractor) that the supervision and control of the whole work was placed in the hands of the officer having charge of the building and took it out of the hands of Mr. Dant, the general contractor, for the reason, as given in this section of the proposal, that the work might be "safely and properly done." Now, sir, in this excavation, which was made by a gentleman named Pullman, who was the subcontractor to do the excavating, the walls, it seems, were improperly taken out and the building collapsed and fell. There were 500 Government clerks in the building at the time and the loss of life and injury to limb was very great. The disaster was appalling. That the blame rested upon the Government was absolutely palpable and provable beyond question, and Congress very shortly began to make provision for the injured and the dead.

By the sundry civil bill of March 2, 1895, a commission was appointed to investigate the injuries and deaths caused by the collapse of this building, the Government thereby recognizing its liability, which of course was beyond contradiction. On the 11th day of May, 1896, a Senate committee, with Senator Faulkner as chairman of that committee, reported and recommended the payment of sums of money ranging from small amounts of $500, in case of injury, up to $5,000, in cases of death, the total recommendation of appropriations being over $75,000. Indictments were prepared, in response to what appeared to be a general public demand, against General Ainsworth, Mr. Thorp, Mr. Sasse, and Mr. Dant. Those indictments were demurred to by the attorneys for General Ainsworth and Mr. Dant, and the demurrers were overruled by the supreme bench of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PEARRE. I would like to ask the gentleman [Mr. CANNON] to give me time to complete this short statement. I will confine myself to the facts.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection. It is quite within the discretion of the Chair. It is on a point of order. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. PEARRE. Five or six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEARRE. Those demurrers, as I said, were overruled by the supreme bench of the District of Columbia. They were then taken upon appeal to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, where the ruling of the supreme bench was sustained. New indictments were prepared, from which, however, the names of Mr. Thorp and Mr. Sasse were omitted, charging Colonel Ainsworth and Mr. Dant with manslaughter. These indictments were again demurred to and the demurrer sustained by the supreme bench of the District of Columbia, under the ruling of the court of appeals in the previous case, and an appeal was again taken by the district attorney to the court of appeals, and the court of appeals sustained their original ruling and held the demurrers good, thus determining, under correct legal process, that there was no criminal liability upon either Colonel Ainsworth, Mr. Sasse, Mr. Thorp, or Mr. Dant, the beneficiary of this proposed appropriation. The sundry civil bill, which was approved by the President of the United States on March 2, 1895, contains an appropriation for General Ainsworth, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of War to reimburse Col. F. C. Ainsworth, Chief of the Record and Pension Division of the War Department, for such expense incurred by him in legal proceedings growing out of the Ford Theater disaster on the 9th of June, 1893, as the Secretary of War may decide to have been necessary, proper, and reasonable, $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

This clause is contained in the sundry civil bill appropriating $4,000 to reimburse Colonel Ainsworth for all expenses to which he had been subjected on account of these prosecutions, which had been improvidently and incorrectly instituted against Colonel Ainsworth, as the courts decided. Mr. Dant stood upon exactly the same ground, or upon a better ground, than Colonel Ainsworth, because under the very proposal for bids the work of the subcontractor, Pullman, was placed under the supervision, not of Mr. Dant, the general contractor, but under the supervision of Colonel Ainsworth himself, in order that the Government might provide against the very calamity that subsequently happened.

General Ainsworth having been provided for by the appropriation of $4,000, and each one of the victims of this awful disaster or their families having been reimbursed, certainly in part, this amendment proposes nothing but a simple proposition of elementary justice—that the same measure of compensation and reimbursement as has been measured out to others injured either directly or indirectly by the collapse of this building—for which the Government was responsible—should be measured out also to George W. Dant; and I respectfully submit, sir, that the Congress of the United States can not well afford to place itself in the position of making flesh of one and fish of the other and authorizing an appropriation of $4,000 to an official of the United States Army connected with one of the departments of the Government who had absolute control and charge of this work under the very contracts under which it was done and yet fail to reimburse George W. Dant, equally injured, much less responsible, and much less liable in every sense than Colonel Ainsworth.

I submit that the Government of the United States, through its Congress, can not well afford to place itself in the position of sustaining such an injustice, and I confidently submit the matter to the House, believing that this appropriation ought to be and will be made.

Mr. CANNON. I think it is necessary for me only to say that by the gentleman's statement this claim has no legal status and is therefore subject to the point of order. I might go further and say I am inclined to think it has no moral status, but that is a matter that might come up if it should ever be reported from the Committee on Claims for the consideration of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule on the point of order. At the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress it was held that it is not in order to appropriate on an appropriation bill for an unadjudicated claim, even though it be transmitted to the House by an Executive message.

There are several rulings which hold that propositions to pay private claims against the Government are not in order on general appropriation bills. There seems to be a long line of decisions covering the point, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, preliminary to indictment; the investigation of official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks of the United States courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the records and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney-General at any time; the inspection of United States prisoners and prisons; to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, and to include salaries of all necessary agents in Washington, D. C., $45,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago I called to the attention of the committee the bringing across the country of the insane soldiers from the Philippine Islands. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has since called my attention to the fact that an appropriation had been made and warrant given in appropriation bills in the last Congress authorizing the Secretaries of War and the Navy to provide for the care of these insane soldiers on the Pacific coast.

Those who have read the sorrowful tales that were told of these travels of the insane, 100 a year from the Philippine Islands, would scarcely have thought that a law of that kind was already upon the statute books. I did not know it until reminded of it after the former debate. I believe it was placed on the appropriation bills in the Senate, only evidencing again that we sometimes look to the Senate for the wisest legislation.

I gave the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] credit, as I always do, for his generosity of heart, and I knew the Committee on Appropriations would do its duty. I had no information that this had been done a year ago. But what I said with reference to the soldiers a few moments ago should appeal with equal force to the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War, who now have the authority to do this and who may save the expense of $70 for each insane soldier who comes here, that being the amount which the railroads get for transporting him to Washington, and do a grace to not only the soldiers, but to the American people.

I see that the next Secretary of the Navy [Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts] is in the room, participating in this debate, managing in part this bill, one who is esteemed by both sides of the House as but few men have been esteemed, and I know that it will enter his heart to carry out the provisions of the law that I shall have read from the Clerk's desk if it be within his power, if it be compatible with the public interests. I hope that my statement here, calling this matter to his attention, will result in these soldiers being cared for 3,000 miles closer to the scene of their misfortune, and where they will have that treatment, that climate, and that care that they so richly deserve of a generous Government, because of the misfortune that has come to them while fighting under the American flag.

I ask the Clerk to read from the law upon the subject, first from the United States Statutes at Large, volume 31, page 1163, the sundry civil appropriation bill of 1901, approved March 3, 1901.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War may, in his discretion, contract for the care, maintenance, and treatment of the insane of the Army, and inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers on the Pacific coast at any State asylum in California, in all cases which he is now authorized by law to cause to be sent to the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And from the Navy appropriation bill, the same volume 31, page 1123, the Navy appropriation bill approved March 3, 1901.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the care, maintenance, and treatment of the insane of the Navy and Marine Corps on the Pacific coast, and all other necessary contingent expenses, $35,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a single word. How many, under the provisions referred to, insane sailors and soldiers have been cared for at the Soldiers' Home at Santa Monica and the State asylum of California I do not know; nor do I know whether other State insane asylums have the capacity to treat the insane referred to; nor do I know whether it would in all cases be humane to have them treated upon the Pacific coast. Take a soldier of the gentleman's own district, to illustrate, returned from the Philippine Islands insane, treated on the Pacific coast, and, if he recovers, discharged.

I am not sure but what the soldier's relatives would much prefer that he be removed to St. Elizabeth's and treated there. I only refer to this. I think it was wise to grant discretion; but I am not at all prepared to say that that discretion has not been exercised with wisdom. I do not know what the facts are, but I could conceive of many cases where humanity would dictate that they should be brought to St. Elizabeth's rather than treated on the Pacific coast.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If I may interrupt the gentleman, I cordially agree with what the gentleman has stated all along on that subject at this time. I had inquired into this important subject at St. Elizabeth's Insane Asylum in the city of Washington, and I was not aware, and the authorities did not seem to know, that any arrangements had been made or law passed with reference to the Army insane, but on the contrary it was stated that they would have been entirely satisfied with arrangements in line with the suggestion that I made.

In addition to that, since speaking on the floor this morning I have seen the senior Senator from California, who had requested that this law be put in operation, and that the same had been promised, so that I rather think that it was an oversight on the part of the departments, for surely their patriotic hearts would do the best, and if in their opinion it is better to have it provided that the soldiers be cared for in California they will do it cheerfully and promptly.

Mr. CANNON. Read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insular and territorial affairs: For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in the conduct of insular and other territorial matters and affairs within the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice, including the payment of necessary employees at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected and their compensation fixed by the Attorney-General, and to be expended under his direction, $25,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Here is another reminder of the fact that this country has gone into the colonial business. Twenty-five thousand dollars to be expended in the colonies, nobody knows what for, so nothing is said about it. Our possessions abroad bob up in this fashion whenever we have under consideration a general appropriation bill. First came the urgent deficiency bill with an appropriation of $500,000. As one by one the general appropriation bills appear each carries an appropriation of money to be expended in this new venture, and so the total is amounting to many millions. A peculiarity of all these appropriations is that they are vague and indefinite as to what the money is to be expended for. The Committee on Appropriations has no difficulty whatever in prescribing, item by item, the sums to be expended in the various departments of the Government at home. Not so in the colonies.

As showing the impossibility of systematic, decent, orderly administration in our colonial possessions, these appropriations speak volumes. What is to be done with the money nobody knows, so in comes an omnibus provision vesting in somebody power somehow to spend so much money for indefinite purposes. This is only one of the peculiarities of these appropriations. Another is that nobody has told us definitely what the taxpayers may expect in return. I have never heard an answer to the question propounded on this floor repeatedly, How is the country to be compensated for this great outlay? How are we to receive a return upon the investment? Who is being benefited by the outlay of so much cash? We are not benefiting the Filipinos. We are killing them by hundreds. We are not benefiting the commerce of the United States.

Every country that trades with the Philippine Islands has made gains greater than the United States since the war began there. Early in the discussion, nearly two years ago, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in an outburst of adulation and praise of his party for the great conquests in the Orient, declared that it was our purpose to hold to these outlying possessions, and that incidentally we were going to make what money could be made out of them—a shock to the intelligence of the country, doubtless, for I believe that no considerable number of our people are willing to go to war for plunder and profit.

But waiving all this, the profits have not been forthcoming and are not in sight. We have been told that the islands are enormously rich. That is true, doubtless. But what does rich mean? The riches of a country consist of its resources, its productiveness; and the Philippines are very productive, but what good does that do us? We refuse to avail ourselves of their productiveness. The Republicans on the Committee on Ways and Means have been wrangling for two months in an effort to shut out of our markets Cuban sugar and tobacco. It is because the Philippines produce these commodities that they are called rich. What of it? You will not allow them to exchange these commodities for American goods. Thus, when the products of our insular possessions are offered to us, we shut the door in the face of our vassal races. If we would trade with them, possibly our vassals might be of some advantage to the country. But we will not allow them access to our markets.

When the little island of Porto Rico came under our dominion, which I was heartily in favor of, it was said that it was the most prolific island in the West Indies; but instantly the Republican party declared that we could not afford to permit the little island to send its products here. So they say concerning Cuba. As to the Philippine Islands, we are told that enough sugar could be grown over there to glut the markets of the world. If that is true, then the Philippine Islands are rich. All we have to do is to open our markets to them, and our people would receive this sugar and give them commodities in exchange for it. But we put up a Chinese wall and avoid this exchange. Tell me, then, how are we to avail ourselves of the riches of which you have boasted?

Is it not a little remarkable that we should possess ourselves of islands of great natural wealth and resources and then put prohibitive tariffs on their productions? What is commerce but reciprocal trade? If we say to the Filipinos, "Thus far and no farther shall you develop your trade with us," we say to the American producer, "Thus far and no farther may you go in developing your trade with the Filipinos."

I can not conceive of anything more ridiculous and absurd than such a position. Send armies abroad to conquer countries because they are productive, violate the Constitution of our country in the manner of their government, trample its provisions under foot, all in the name of expanding commerce, and then, when commerce would expand, manacle the limbs of our traders, build up a wall about the subject peoples we have conquered by violence, and declare that no trade expansion shall take place. Having done this, the Republican majority brings in appropriation bill after appropriation bill, vague and indefinite in their terms, and, in the aggregate, amounting to many millions, and ask the American taxpayers to go down into their pockets and foot the bills—all for the purpose of building up a great trade in the Philippines! [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of regular assistants to United States district attorneys who are appointed by the Attorney-General, at a fixed compensation, $185,000.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to make an inquiry of my colleague [Mr. CANNON] about these items in reference to the pay of assistant district attorneys. I see here is an item of $435,000 for "district attorneys and their regular assistants." Then there is another item "for payment of regular assistants to United States district attorneys" $185,000. What is the difference between the salaries of the regular assistants?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has not read the language of the bill closely. The first clause is:

For salaries of United States district attorneys and expenses of United States district attorneys and their regular assistants, $435,000.

That is, the expenses of those two classes of officers—district attorneys and their assistants. The other paragraph is:

For payment of regular assistants to United States district attorneys, who are appointed by the Attorney-General, at a fixed annual compensation, $185,000.

The gentleman notices the difference in the language?

Mr. MANN. I notice that the language is susceptible of two constructions. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. CANNON. I hardly think that the language admits of two constructions.

Mr. MANN. What I wished to inquire was what the two items were for—whether the first item included salaries of district attorneys.

Mr. CANNON. No, the language is: "Expenses of United States district attorneys and their regular assistants." Now the next item is "for payment of regular assistants to United States district attorneys who are appointed by the Attorney-General at a fixed annual compensation."

Mr. MANN. Are they all appointed by the Attorney-General?

Mr. CANNON. I think all the assistants are so appointed, but the district attorneys are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Of course. While I am on the floor may I ask the gentleman in reference to the item beginning on line 16—"for fees of clerks, $340,000?" Is the gentleman able to inform us exactly in reference to the compensation of these clerks?

Mr. CANNON. Under an amendment made to the law two or three years ago the fees go into the Treasury and appropriations are made for the payment of the salaries, which, according to my recollections, do not exceed $2,500. It is my recollection—I may be mistaken; perhaps I am not as familiar with this matter as I ought to be—that the law was revised under the lead of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Updegraff.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, it was Mr. Updegraff, then a member from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Public Printer is authorized hereafter to procure and supply, on the requisition of the head of any Executive Department or other Government establishment, complete manifold blanks, books, and forms, required in duplicating processes; also complete patented devices with which to file money-order statements, or other uniform official papers, and to charge such supplies to the allotment for printing and binding of the Department or Government establishment requiring the same.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what has happened since 1895 to raise this appropriation for public printing and binding $2,504,000 to $5,297,000, nearly doubling it in five years?

Mr. CANNON. The expenditure for public printing and binding depends purely upon legislation by Congress and the amount of work that is ordered by Congress and the growth of the public service as registered in the Executive Departments. Take the Post-Office Department, for instance. The growth is wonderful. So it is all along the line of the public service. When you come to Congress proper, the growth of printing for the use of the House and all its members individually and collectively and of the Senate has been very extraordinary, and this registers, I will say again, the growth of the country, and, I was going to say, the extravagance of Congress, but I will not say that.

Mr. PALMER. That is what I want you to say.

Mr. CANNON. Then there is something of growth in the increase of wages of Government employees—20 per cent increase, as I recollect, in the Government Printing Office alone, in wages. There has been something of an advance probably in five years in material. Consideration is given, I have no doubt, for all these expenditures, and the only way to cut it down is by the economy of the House and the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think it is pretty near time to call a halt?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have been trying to call a halt, as one member of this committee, in these expenditures for many, many years, but the committee will not halt. I would welcome any effort on the part of my friends. [Laughter.]

Mr. PALMER. I am simply inquiring for the purpose of seeking information. I want to inquire if the gentleman does not think that about three-fourths of all the stuff that is printed is practically unnecessary and useless?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I should hardly say that. I believe there is much of printing of documents that is unnecessary. You have got to print all that are ordered, of course. I think many documents are printed under the law where a less number might well be printed, much of printing that from my standpoint is useless, and if I had my way about it there would not be much of printing I think in connection with the House except that what my friend says and what I say. [Laughter.] But there are about 360 others.

Mr. PALMER. You do not think you and I monopolize all the sense there is here, do you?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I don't know that it would be modest for me to answer that question.

Mr. PALMER. Well, whenever you want to call a halt, you have one recruit, I will say that.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, if I might offer a suggestion, I have been advised by men who are familiar with the workings of the Printing Office that a very large part of the unnecessary expense of that department grows out of inefficient editorial work in the departments, due partly to lack of training on the part of those who prepare the copy, and partly to dilatoriness on their part. Proofs will be sent out and will not be returned for weeks, and there are at times tons of type tied up on the imposing stones of the Printing Office waiting the return of proofs, and if there could be any reform brought about in the matter of the editorial force of the various departments it would save one of the largest leaks in the Printing Office.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there is something of well-founded complaint along that line. There has been a constant contest and always will be, no doubt. I recollect that some years ago that one of the bureaus of the War Department made quite a report on the subject of botany, and we tried to cut that out by the roots, and, I think, succeeded, but every once in a while it crops out. Then, once in a while, we have some zealous Representative or Senator—and I will not speak of a Senator as such—that is wonderfully industrious, and sometimes fills more pages of the RECORD than my friend or I would think wise; but after all it may be wise to remember that the growth of this appropriation in large part shows the growth of the country and the growth of the public service. Let me give the gentleman one instance upon these monographs of the Agricultural Department. I recollect in the name of our good farmer friends—and I am a farmer myself—we doubled, if not trebled, that appropriation, and there you are. We have to act here. The House and the Senate have control of the whole shooting match, so that we can not shift the responsibility onto the shoulders of somebody else touching this expenditure.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will be given permission to correct the totals of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not the Chair will submit them to the House in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 1025, to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] for five minutes. Will that be as much time as the gentleman cares for?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] yields to the gentleman from Georgia five minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I regret that, owing to a deep-seated and very severe cold, I shall be unable to speak with comfort or satisfaction for any considerable length of time. After making one or two observations I shall yield back the remainder of the time which has been so courteously allotted to me.

I have heard very few objections to this bill. It is well known to everyone that before the Navy was created the Revenue-Cutter Service did our fighting in time of war, and that is the only time when the Army and Navy fight now, or ever fought.

In answer to our proposition that the officers of this service should be placed on an equal footing with the officers of the Navy we hear two objections. One is that it is not a fighting body, but a civil establishment, and the other is that the enactment of this legislation would be an entering wedge for a civil pension list. I believe that states the whole case of the opposition.

Now, in the first place, the Revenue-Cutter Service fights, and fights valiantly and gloriously when there is occasion, and has done so in every war. The fact that in times of peace it works in patrolling the coast and attending to the enforcement of our revenue laws is that much to its credit. The officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service do not frolic on land in time of peace, and in time of war they fight as much as anybody else, and more.

Now as to the other point, Is this an entering wedge to a civil pension list? I say no; the line of distinction is clear and marked. Those who bare their breasts to the storm of battle and wage their country's wars are entitled to pensions, and I stop here and now at that.

I yield back the balance of my time, and hope that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] will be afforded as much time as possible. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I am sincerely in favor of this bill to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, because, in my judgment, it is a just, a patriotic, and a meritorious measure. No fair-minded man who will take the trouble to carefully examine the history of the Revenue-Cutter Service of this Government will seriously oppose this bill on its merits. There is no brighter, no grander, no more self-sacrificing page in American history than that written by the heroic achievements and the commendable acts of the men in the Revenue-Cutter Service. They are entitled to all they ask for in this bill, which is nothing more or less than simple justice, and Congress will be false to every sentiment of gratitude if it denies their just demands.

The Revenue-Cutter Service was created by law at the very inception of the Government. It was established before the Department of the Navy, and for that reason it was made a part of the Treasury Department. But it is and always has been more military than civil. Investigation proves beyond question that in its organization, general features, military character, naval discipline, and duties the Revenue-Cutter Service is now and always has been constantly regarded as a part of the military service of the Government for both offensive and defensive operations; that it has taken an active and brilliant part in every war of this nation.

To go no further back than the war of 1898 with Spain, this Service was in that war from Manila to Cuba. To illustrate the conditions under which the Revenue-Cutter Service fought in that war, take the action off Cardenas, fought on May 11, 1898. The active forces engaged on that date on the American side against the shore batteries and gunboats at Cardenas were the gunboat Wilmington, the torpedo boat Winslow, and the revenue cutter Hudson, the latter serving by Executive order in cooperation with the Navy. What happened is best told in the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 15, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant and to forward herewith a copy of the report requested. I regret that inadvertently a copy of this letter was not forwarded to you immediately after it was received.

The rescue of the Winslow by the Hudson was so gallantly done, in the face of a most galling fire, that First Lieut. Frank H. Newcomb, Revenue-Cutter Service, commanding, his officers and men, deserve the warmest commendation.

The Winslow was riddled with shell, disabled, helplessly drifting onto the beach into the hands of the enemy, her captain wounded, her only other officer and half her crew killed, but the Hudson courageously remained by her in the very center of the hottest fire of the action, although in constant danger of going ashore on account of the shallow water, until finally a line was made fast to the Winslow and that vessel towed out of range of the enemy's guns.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG,
Secretary.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The object of this illustration is to prove, if any such proof be necessary, that one service is subject to the same conditions and exposure in war as the other, while the provisions of law thrown around the one are studiously denied the other, and it is the object and purpose of this bill to correct these conditions. Who will say that the commander of the Hudson was not worthy of the emoluments received by the commander of the Winslow, by whose side he steadily fought throughout, and whose life and vessel he saved from destruction?

The history of the service from its organization in 1790, through all the wars of the nation, is replete with instances of heroism both in peace and in war. The first gun of the civil war on the Union side was fired from the deck of a revenue cutter (the Harriet Lane) and the first gun of the war with Spain at Manila Bay was fired from another (the McCulloch).

It is only necessary to read the history of the country to ascertain that the brave and gallant men of the Revenue-Cutter Service did heroic work in the Revolutionary war, in the war of 1812, in the Mexican war, in the Seminole war, in the civil war, and in the war with Spain. How can anyone successfully contend, in the face of these facts, that the Revenue-Cutter Service is more civic than military? The record answers. The Revenue-Cutter Service is as much a part of the military arm of the Government in time of war as the Marine Corps.

And, sir, if the officers of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps are entitled to rank, to longevity pay, and to retirement after long and faithful service, then, in the name of justice and consistency, why should not the officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service be entitled to the same rights and to similar privileges?

Now, Mr. Chairman, what does this bill do? Very briefly, all that this bill does is to give to the men in the Revenue-Cutter Service rank. And how high rank? Only to the degree of a captain. By the terms of this bill no officer in the Revenue-Cutter Service can rise above the rank of captain or get a higher title than that of captain. The largest pay the highest officer in this service can receive is the same pay a lieutenant-commander in the Navy receives. Then this bill gives the Revenue-Cutter officers the right to be retired when they are old and physically incapacitated by wounds, exposure, and long service in all kinds of weather, in stress and in storm, in trial and in triumph, in sunshine and in rain, in peace and in war.

That is all that this bill does. What honest opposition can there be to it? The officers in the Marine Corps have now all these rights. Why make flesh of one set of officers and fowl of the other? Why discriminate against these brave and honorable men of the Revenue-Cutter Service? They ask for nothing in this bill that is not fair and just and right and proper.

There is not a member in this House who can arise in his place and say one derogatory word against the valor of these faithful men and the justice of their demands and claims as embodied in this bill.

There does not appear to be any valid reason why a body of officers who in every other respect serve upon a level with those of the Army and Navy should be denied equal compensation. The following table will show the wide difference which exists in this particular, while it also shows an unjustifiable discrimination against the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service:

Difference in pay of officers, rank for rank, in the Army, Navy, and Revenue-Cutter Service after twenty years of service.

Army.		Navy.		Revenue-Cutter Service.
Rank.	Pay.	Rank.	Pay.	Rank.	Pay.
Majors.....	$3,500	Lieutenant-commanders.....	$3,500	Captains.....	$2,500
Captains.....	2,530	Lieutenants.....	2,520	First lieutenants and chief engineers.....	1,800
First lieutenants.....	2,140	Lieutenants (junior).....	2,140	Second lieutenants and first assistant engineers.....	1,500
Second lieutenants.....	2,000	Ensigns.....	2,000	Third lieutenants and second assistant engineers.....	1,200

It is essential to the morale and efficiency of any service such as this that there should be some reward for length of service. In the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps this is given in the shape of an increase of compensation at the rate of 10 per cent for each five years of service up to twenty years, or 40 per cent. Why should these officers, who are upon the same level in all things else, in life tenure of office, in general duties in peace and war, be denied this consideration?

It must be obvious that an officer who has served a given number of years in a particular grade should be entitled to better compensation than another who has just been promoted to that grade. Under existing conditions an officer who has served twenty years in one grade gets exactly the same compensation as another who has just been promoted to that grade.

But to illustrate further: Suppose that there are 30 officers in a given grade; that the annual salary of each officer of that grade is $1,800, that the first 10 of these have served fifteen years, the next 10 have served ten years, and the remaining 10 five years, then—

The first 10 would receive $1,800 plus 30 per cent.....	$2,340
The next 10 would receive $1,800 plus 20 per cent.....	2,160
The remaining 10 would receive $1,800 plus 10 per cent.....	1,980

But without the percentage of increase the man who has served fifteen years would receive no more than he who has served but five years.

Under date of March 31, 1884, the Hon. Charles J. Folger, then Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives, when recommending the enactment of a bill covering the features of this one (S. 1025), used the following language on the subject of an increase of compensation for length of service:

A third provision, to wit, that providing increase of pay for length of service, commends itself to my judgment as just and advantageous in a public sense. It seems to me based upon correct business principles, it being generally recognized that experience gives value to labor in proportion to the intelligence of the laborer and the importance of the work performed. In a technical service this is peculiarly the case, every year adding to the skill, trustworthiness, and ability of the officers.

There should not be, and there can not be, to my mind, any reason why, if officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps are thus provided for, the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service should not be. The latter perform every duty in peace and war that officers of the Navy do. The Revenue-Cutter Service is not a volunteer service, but is an organized regular service, just as much as the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, and is subject to the orders of the President just as they are.

The necessity for this legislation has been urged upon Congress by every Secretary of the Treasury from 1872 to 1901.

President McKinley, in his message to the Fifty-sixth Congress in December, 1900, used the following language:

Attention is invited to the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury for legislation in behalf of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and favorable action is urged.

It should not be forgotten that the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who will be retired under the age clause of this bill must serve until they reach the evening of life, or 64 years, while the naval officer must retire at 62, and that an officer may be retired in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps after thirty years of service. The Revenue-Cutter Service asks that when old age sets in, after a lifetime spent in service, or when they become incapacitated from disability contracted in the performance of duty, that they may retire from active work and peacefully end their days upon the same terms that are accorded to officers of the other technical services of this Government.

The fact must not be lost sight of that of the 37 captains now upon the active list of the Revenue-Cutter Service, 16 have served from thirty-two to forty years, while the remaining 21 have served thirty years, each as commanding officers, while there is not an officer in the Navy of the grade of lieutenant-commander who has served as a commissioned officer over thirty years.

Now, sir, in regard to the objection of some that this bill will tend to create a civil pension list, I wish to say that it will not create a civil pension list any more than the Navy or the Marine Corps has created a civil pension list. There is no difference. There is not and there can not be any valid distinction. The Revenue-Cutter Service is and always has been essentially military.

Its military character was officially stated by the Treasury Department in the report of the service in 1881, as follows:

The Revenue-Cutter Service, while charged by law with the performance of important civil duties, is essentially military in its character. Each vessel is provided with great guns and furnished with as full a complement of small arms for its crew as any ship of war. Its officers are required to be proficient in military drill and possess a thorough knowledge of the uses of both great and small arms. Its crews are required to be instructed from day to day at the great guns and in the use of small arms.

Commanding officers are required, while boarding vessels arriving in ports of the United States, in case of failure or refusal of any such vessel on being hailed to come to and submit to the proper inspection by an officer of the service, to fire first across her bows as a warning, and in case of persistent refusal to resort to shot or shell to compel obedience. In the performance of this work they are likely at any time to receive injuries and to be subjected to the same dangers in time of peace as the force employed on naval vessels.

By act of March 2, 1799, it is provided that the revenue cutters shall, whenever the President so directs, cooperate with the Navy. It will be observed that the cooperation of the two services prescribed in the act above quoted is not contingent upon a state of war or other particularly perilous conditions. On the contrary, it may take place in time of peace and for specific purposes and when less hazard is involved to the two services than pertains to the discharge of a revenue vessel of its ordinary duties.

But if in legal theory they are civil employees, are they so in fact? Are they less positively a part of the military force in time of war than the Army or Navy? It is true that revenue vessels are not to be ordered into action on purely military service, offensive or defensive, except the President so directs; but neither are the vessels of the Navy.

The status of the Revenue-Cutter Service is therefore that of a coast-guard navy, as the Navy proper is an ocean navy. The one polices the coast and the other the ocean.

There is no duty performed by naval vessels in time of peace that can not be and has not been performed by vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service, while in time of war they have taken part with the sister service.

The seizure of smugglers and the prevention of illicit trade—the only duty of the service that has direct relation with the collection of customs—is precisely similar to the duty of naval officers in seizing vessels engaged in contraband trade in time of war. Other duties of the Revenue-Cutter Service—such as the enforcement of the neutrality laws, the suppression of piracy and of mutinies in merchant vessels—are now actually imposed on and performed by the Navy in common with the Cutter Service.

The Revenue-Cutter Service manages to keep busy year in and year out. Like the Army and the Navy it is on duty all the year round; but unlike them, it has no winter season when its duties are less than at other times. In fact, the winter is the chief season for the revenue cutters, for then its vessels must be on the lookout for wrecks more carefully than ever. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows briefly the operations of the service during the year ending last June, as follows:

Distance covered (nautical miles).....	312,091
Lives saved (actually rescued).....	55
Vessels boarded.....	20,089
Vessels seized and reported for violations.....	309
Fines of vessels so reported.....	$54,800
Vessels assisted.....	77
Value of vessels assisted with cargoes.....	$4,923,095
Persons on board assisted.....	3,520
Persons in distress cared for.....	201

This indicates considerable activity during the year on the part of our oldest military branch of the Government. Splendid record for one year, but it has been the same to a greater or a lesser degree year in and year out for more than a century.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, as an American citizen I take a great pride in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and as a member of Congress I am glad to say I favor this bill because I believe it is just, because these brave fellows have earned this reward and this recognition, and because I know the service the men on the revenue cutters of the United States do. From the icy waters of Alaska to the coral strands of Florida these men are always on deck, always on duty, always earning their pay, always in the service of their country. These men in time of peace do a great work saving lives, enforcing the law, and looking after wrecks and derelicts on the high seas. Their work is never done.

The duties of revenue cutters in times of peace appeal to the public more forcibly than in times of war. At the present time a cordon of cutters is cruising along our Atlantic coast, not to suppress smuggling, as that has been almost entirely stamped out, but in the interest of humanity, to rescue the shipwrecked mariners, to lend aid to vessels in distress, and to destroy those menaces to life and property on the seas, the numerous derelicts, whose specter-like forms are almost daily encountered along the ocean highways.

These are the men who are asking us for relief—who are asking us to pass this bill—men who share equal danger with their more favored brothers in the Army and Navy in times of war, and who, in times of peace, having no sinecure to drop into on shore, are daily performing the most hazardous duties at sea in the interest of humanity. Will you not give to these brave officers the same consideration you give to the Army and the Navy? The Revenue-Cutter Service, coeval with the foundation of our Government, a part of all of our history in war and in peace, is now knocking at the door of the American Congress, asking for just treatment. In every war it has been true to the flag. The record it has made is the priceless heritage and the proud boast of every patriotic American. There is no day in the week, no month of the year, that these men in the Revenue-Cutter employ of the Government do not practically take their lives in their hands when they go to sea.

The Revenue-Cutter Service is not under the civil service, except for the fact that, as a matter of convenience, it is so classified in making the appropriation for its maintenance. No civil employee is compelled to fight for his country except he volunteers; yet every Revenue-Cutter officer is, simply by direction of the President, required to cooperate with the Navy in any duty whatsoever.

Never has a war been fought upon the seas by this country that the Revenue-Cutter Service has not taken an active part, whether it wanted to or not. Can this be said of any other branch of the civil service? When Congress, as a reward to volunteers on sea and land, voted two months' extra pay to each, did the Revenue-Cutter Service receive such extra compensation? The Auditor for the Navy and the Comptroller of the Treasury promptly decided that this service is a part of the regular establishment for the defense of the Government, and as such could in no way come under the classification of volunteers.

This bill passed the Senate without a dissenting vote. It ought to pass this House without division. It is as just a measure for as brave and as gallant a band of men as ever was submitted for consideration to a legislative body, and I hope, I believe, it will soon be a law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] for fifteen minutes.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, I can not expect to add much to the arguments that have already been presented in favor of this measure in the short time allotted to me, but I desire simply to reenforce what has been already said, and to give some additional reasons for the passage of the pending measure. This bill has very unjustly and improperly been stigmatized as a bill to create another civil pension list.

Mr. Chairman, as an original proposition, if a bill was proposed before this body to-day to retire the officers of the Army and Navy, I myself would not give it my sanction. In fact, in this country of ours, I do not as a general rule believe in having a retired list; but it has grown up in our system for the Army and Navy, and in a part of the service—the Revenue-Cutter Department—which is just as effective and which, both in war and in peace, is the equal of the Navy in every respect, if not its superior in some, I think it is an injustice to the men in the Revenue-Marine Service to withhold from them the compensation and emoluments that are extended to the Navy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say that I was much impressed by the arguments of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] in support of this measure. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] gave to this body the course of study that the cadets on a training ship of the Revenue-Marine Service, after being admitted to the service, had to pass, and compared it with that of the Navy, showing conclusively to my mind it was an equally efficient education and made men just as cultured, just as patriotic, just as competent to man the Navy of our Government as does the course at Annapolis. I do not believe that an education at West Point or Annapolis makes an aristocracy of its graduates.

Mr. Chairman, there must be in a man to make him a gentleman something more than a college can give him. There must be moral instincts which come not alone from training, but must be there by nature.

Here and there my lord is lower than his oxen and his swine;
Here and there a cotter's babe is royal born by right divine.

But, sir, let me say that if the members of this body will consult the manual of examinations of the classified civil service they will see there the requisites of admission to the training ship in the Revenue-Marine Service, and will also see the examination required of cadets who apply for admission to the Naval Academy. During the last year the officers in charge of the Naval Academy applied to the Civil Service Commission to have the examination of cadets take place in various parts of the country for the convenience of the applicants; and let me show you how much superior the requisites for admission to the Marine Service are to those for admission to Annapolis.

On the first day of the examination for admission to the Revenue-Cutter Service there are exercises in spelling, geography, history, the Constitution of the United States, and grammar. On the first day of the examination for admission to Annapolis they have punctuation, grammar, geography, history, world's history, reading, and spelling.

On the second day to be admitted to the Revenue-Cutter Service the examination comprises algebra, including quadratics and binomial theorem, geometry, plane and the elements of solid, and trigonometry, plane. What is prescribed for admission to the Naval Academy? Simple arithmetic and algebra.

On the third day for admission to the Naval Academy it is geometry, and in no instance are they examined upon simple trigonometry, or spherical trigonometry, or the higher branches of mathematics.

On the third day of the Revenue-Cutter Service examination they are examined on physics, chemistry, inorganic, and general information. These subjects are not examined on at all for admission to Annapolis. Now, I say, sir, there are very superior and higher requisites for admission to the Revenue-Marine Service over that for admission to Annapolis.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me submit another reason to my brethren here to-day. The remarks of the opponents of this measure have impressed me very much, that the gentlemen who have been antagonizing this bill are thoroughly unacquainted with the methods, practices, and requirements of the Revenue-Marine Service. I believe I am safe in venturing the assertion that there is not a man who has raised his voice against this bill upon this floor who has ever in his life been on the deck of a revenue cutter, not one.

It takes some familiarity with the sea, it takes some acquaintance with the cutter service and the naval service to compare them justly, and no man with equal knowledge of them both can fail to come to the conclusion that the service of the revenue marines is equally effective in time of war and more effective in time of peace than is the naval service of our Government. I do not deny the importance of the naval branch of our Government; they are chivalrous in peace and valorous in war, but not more so than the splendid set of officers who honor the Revenue-Cutter Service. I wish to send to the desk to have read the instructions that were given in November last to Captain Willey, commanding the U. S. S. Algonquin, at the port in which I reside. I desire to show by this what the duties of the Revenue-Cutter Service are from the 1st day of December to the 1st day of April, during the four months of winter. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
DIVISION OF REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE,
Washington, November 26, 1901.

Capt. O. S. WILLEY, R. C. S.,
Commanding U. S. S. Algonquin, Wilmington, N. C.

SIR: The President having designated the revenue steamer Algonquin to cruise under the provisions of section 1536, Revised Statutes, to afford such aid to distressed navigators as the circumstances may require and as may be in your power to render, you are directed to have your command in readiness to enter upon this important duty by the 1st proximo.

In order that you may be able to extend the necessary relief to the crews of such vessels in distress as you may discover or fall in with, the Algonquin should be provided with provisions, water, and fuel, in such quantities as can be stowed conveniently.

Having in all respects prepared your command for the work contemplated by these orders, you are directed to cruise your ship actively from the date named until April 1, 1902, from Wilmington north to Cape Hatteras and south to Charleston, S. C., making a harbor when stress of weather, want of fuel, provisions, or other good reasons may make it necessary, keeping at all times a vigilant lookout for vessels in need of assistance.

You will govern your movements so that as little time as possible shall be spent at Wilmington or at any other port upon the cruising grounds herein assigned you, the purpose being that constant and vigilant activity shall govern the movements of your command.

You are directed to confer with all chief officers of the customs at such ports as you may visit, with a view to obtaining information concerning infractions of law to enable you, as far as may be, to correct the same.

You will make it a point, whenever practicable, to keep within communication by telegraph, advising all collectors of customs at ports visited, before sailing on a cruise, of your next port, in order that they may communicate to you intelligence of disability or distress on the coast or other matters requiring your attention to enable you to proceed without loss of time to execute such duty as may be indicated to you.

Upon your arrival at any port or anchorage having mail communication, you will announce the fact by letter to the Department, giving date of arrival, date of probable departure, and destination, adding reasons for stay in port or anchorage of more than twenty-four hours' duration. As soon as possible after entering a port you will send an officer on shore for the purpose of getting information of vessels stranded or otherwise in distress, and upon gaining such intelligence, if the circumstances of the case require it, you will get under way at once and proceed to the scene, rendering such service as may be possible.

From the first port entered after having rendered assistance of any kind you will submit a report to the Department upon the usual form (No. 2015), giving such particulars as will show fully the services performed.

In all cases of assistance rendered you will elaborate all details, in order that a clear comprehension of the duty performed may be conveyed.

You are to understand that the successful accomplishment of the objects of the duty herein assigned will require constant and energetic direction, and no excuse short of disablement of your ship will be accepted for a lax or perfunctory performance of the winter work.

In carrying out the instructions contained in these orders you will not only attend to such duties as come under your observation in the course of cruising, but you are charged with the duty of seeking work for your command.

You are not restricted in any way, but, on the contrary, are given full latitude to respond in all cases where the duty of aiding distressed vessels, and in the performance of work, you may be useful. There must be no idleness of your command upon any pretense whatever. In short, you are expected to be active and energetic in looking for work for your command, and will not wait for it to "turn up."

You are further informed that you will be held responsible for the lack of strict compliance with the provisions of the Regulations of the Revenue-Cutter Service embodied in paragraphs 133-142, inclusive, and you will therefore carefully inform yourself of the purport of the regulations cited and govern yourself accordingly.

Should you gain information of the presence within your cruising limits of derelicts or strands in the path of commerce, you will not wait for orders in the premises, but will do all in your power to remove or destroy such, and immediately report your action to the Department.

If you find a derelict that can not be removed without "blowing it up," you will at once report the fact by wire to the Department for its action.

The interests of the public service, no less than those of the Revenue-Cutter Service, demand that, as a commander of a public vessel, you should give your time and best energies to the discharge of the onerous trusts imposed by law and regulations in the duty herein assigned to your command, and it is hoped that you will leave no effort untried to make for your command an enviable record of work done and duty performed.

Groping about the coast in fog and thick weather, making runs at night, or cruising in gales of wind (unless caught out), practices heretofore followed for the sole purpose of covering distances, will not be approved. In the cruising of your command you must have in view the performance of effective work only.

Your attention is called to the necessity of boarding and examining vessels fallen in with while under way or in harbor for the enforcement of the customs and navigation laws, and ample boarding lists will furnish one evidence of the energetic performance of duty.

You will inform the officers of your command that no leaves of absence will be granted by the Department from the beginning until the end of winter cruising.

Respectfully,

H. A. TAYLOR, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. MANN. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. BELLAMY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. May I inquire of the gentleman if this is a copy of printed instructions, or was this a letter of instructions to this particular captain?

Mr. BELLAMY. These are instructions to that particular captain, but they are similar to those sent to every other captain on the coast whose vessel is engaged in work similar to the Algonquin.

Mr. MANN. May I inquire what was the necessity of giving the particular instructions of this character in reference to regulations of law to a captain who has been in the service for a great many years?

Mr. BELLAMY. The reason is that during eight months of the year these gentlemen in the Revenue-Cutter Service are not required to cruise along the coast so constantly, but during the months of December, January, February, and March, when gales prevail, when we have much loss of life and property, during the freezing weather, when there is rain, sleet, and snow, and when there is generally great peril to life and property at sea, it is made incumbent upon the chief officer of this service to divide the coast into districts, and direct the cutters to watch certain portions of the coast. The Algonquin is given as her sphere of duty the seaboard from Hatteras to Charleston, another steamer from Charleston down, another steamer from Hatteras up to Delaware Bay, and so on up to the coast of Maine.

Mr. MANN. What I wished to get at was whether this instruction was something new to captains, or whether during Captain Willey's thirty years of service he had ever acted in the same capacity before.

Mr. BELLAMY. Oh, yes; they are annual instructions, but are given at the beginning of every winter season; and I have simply had these instructions read as a part of their duties to show you the nature and character of the service of these men. During the four months I have designated—December, January, February, and March—when it is sleeting and raining and freezing, these people are not even permitted to go into port, except when necessary to make a report or to supply the ship with exhausted provisions or coal. Yet in the meantime, during the corresponding period, where are the officers of the Navy, as a rule, may I ask? They are at Hampton Roads, or at other ports of the country, lying on their easy couches, or socially chatting, smoking fine cigars, and probably some on shore dancing the german or the cotillions.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman submit to another interruption?

Mr. BELLAMY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This same steamer, the Algonquin, was at Wilmington last winter a year ago as well as this last winter, was it not?

Mr. BELLAMY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I suppose engaged in the performance of the same duties.

Mr. BELLAMY. Only after it is ordered by the Secretary to proceed.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform us whether during the winter of 1890 and 1891 this steamer that you have mentioned, the Algonquin, was engaged in cruising up the coast, as the gentleman says, "during the sleet and rain," and not permitted to go into port?

Mr. BELLAMY. This is a general regulation that is issued each year, as I understand it, and the Algonquin was likewise engaged in the season before, and each antecedent season since her construction.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me—

Mr. BELLAMY. You are consuming my time.

Again, Mr. Chairman, let me show another fallacy in the arguments of the opponents of this bill. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] consumed two columns of the RECORD of yesterday to show that this bill, if it becomes a law, will give the Revenue-Cutter officers greater compensation than the officers of a similar rank in the Navy now get. He based his whole argument upon section 1556 of the Revised Statutes, and quotes it, or a part of it, in the RECORD.

The gentleman from Alabama attempted to show that a captain of the Revenue-Cutter Service would get more pay than a lieutenant-commander of the Navy, with whom, under this bill, he would hold equal rank. The gentleman, unintentionally of course, quoted that section of the Revised Statutes for the amount of pay the naval officer now receives. This statute, as he should know, was repealed by the personnel bill, approved March 3, 1899, so that it has no existence now whatever. Lieutenant-commanders now, according to law, receive the same pay as a major in the Army and the same pay which it is proposed to give captains of the Revenue-Cutter Service; the pay is $2,500 a year. A lieutenant-commander in the Navy or a captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service will, by force of circumstances, both have served at least twenty years before reaching either grade. This will entitle them to four increases of 10 per cent each, so that they will both actually receive the same salary—that is, $3,500 per year.

It must be borne in mind that the rank of lieutenant-commander in the Navy is only an intermediate step in promotion, as anyone in that grade is eligible for promotion to a commander, then to captain, and, finally, to the grade of rear-admiral, when he would receive as high as $7,500 a year.

On the other hand, when a Revenue-Cutter officer reaches the grade of captain that is as high as he can ever go. His salary can never be higher than $3,500 a year, or less than one-half the amount the naval officer can reach.

Revenue-Cutter officers very seldom reach the highest grade before they are 52 years old, and some not until they are 60.

Navy officers, on the average, reach the grade of lieutenant-commander and begin to draw $3,500 a year when they are between 40 and 45 years old.

The gentleman from Alabama also says the cutter officers are civil officers. They are not civil officers; they are the coast guard of our nation. In England her navy are assigned to this duty, and they are no more civil officers than are Britain's navy when performing these functions. They are in their very nature essentially both naval and military. The revenue cutters of our country have participated in every war our country has waged. They were prominent and efficient in the war of 1812, the Seminole war, the Mexican war, the unfortunate civil war, and also in the Spanish war.

The men of this service are commissioned and dismissed the same as they are in the Navy. The seamen are enlisted, uniformed, and drilled as in the Navy. The ships are armed as similar ships in the Navy, and in the Spanish war they carried 61 large guns. They have ever cooperated with the Navy in peace as in war. They were prominent in the Bering Sea patrol, and were likewise prominent in preventing filibustering expeditions from being fitted out and sailing from our coast before the war with Spain. Their officers are invited and detailed to lecture before the Naval War College at Newport, and are eagerly sought to become associate members of the Naval Institute at Annapolis. Then why should they be dubbed civilians? To set this matter at rest, I can but quote from some very excellent remarks made by Mr. Scudder, of New York, at the last session of Congress, wherein is shown a potent decision of the Department on this subject:

It seems to have escaped general notice that the officers and men of the regular Revenue-Cutter Service can not volunteer, and therefore they are not volunteers. Second Lieut. Walker W. Joynes, Revenue-Cutter Service, has demonstrated this beyond a question of a doubt, having, in order to make a test case, applied for the two months' extra pay given to volunteers, he having served on the cutter McCulloch at the battle of Manila. His application was denied, and the Auditor for the Treasury Department and the Solicitor of the Treasury decided that—

"A regular officer or a regularly enlisted man of the regular Revenue-Cutter Service is not competent to volunteer in time of war, because it is just as much a part of his duty to serve as it is the duty of a regular officer or regularly enlisted man of the Army or Navy to serve in time of war."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BELLAMY. I am willing to answer any question of the gentleman, because I am of the belief that he is one who was never on the deck of a revenue cutter and knows nothing whatever of the true character of the Cutter Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman from New York will give the gentleman from North Carolina some more time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not yield any more time, as the time is all parceled out, so that I can not yield any gentleman any more.

Mr. BELLAMY. I wish the gentleman would yield me five minutes, so that I may complete one other argument I desire to make.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not. I have made promises so that I can not yield any more time at present, and I am very sorry.

Mr. BELLAMY. Then I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, it seems almost a waste of time for a person to attempt to discuss a measure when there are probably not two men on the floor of the House who have not thoroughly made up their minds as to how they are going to vote on this question. But since I have been a member of this House, on all occasions when measures have been before this body looking either to a civil-pension list or putting gentlemen on the retired list, I have announced my views; and only for that purpose do I rise now.

The gentleman from North Carolina took occasion to criticize those who opposed this bill as being wholly unfamiliar with the Revenue-Cutter Service. I supposed he referred to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], and such other gentlemen as advocate this measure as gentlemen who have seen many years of hard and arduous service on the plains of their resident country. The gentleman before he took his seat said that he had never been on the deck of a revenue cutter—

Mr. BELLAMY. Oh, no. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. BELLAMY. I did not say that I had never been on the deck of a revenue cutter. I said that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. LOUD. Well, then, I misunderstood the gentleman. But, however that may be, Mr. Chairman, I will venture to assert that there are as many barnacles on the backs of the gentlemen who oppose this measure as there are on those who advocate it. I am opposed to this measure, and should have opposed the retirement provision for the Army and should have opposed the retirement provision for the Navy if I had been a member of this body at the time such legislation was up. A pension provision or a retirement provision for those who work for the United States Government is absolutely wrong in principle. If a retirement law have any equity whatever, then that law must first be made to apply to those who are poor and unfortunate in their old age. A man who perchance through influence has been upon the Government pay roll all of his life at a higher salary than he could ever obtain anywhere else should have no more privileges, and is entitled to no more privileges than the men who have never received these large salaries.

I am opposed to a retirement or a civil pension list on principle. But if it be equitable then the same system of retirement should be inaugurated in this country that is inaugurated in New Zealand—that is, when a man becomes old, when he is worn out, and has accumulated nothing during his life, the Government shall take care of him until he goes into his grave. But the difficulty with a civil pension list and a retirement list of any kind is that it is socialism run mad. If you provide a pension for a man when he shall have reached a certain age and retire him on three-fourths or half pay, you hold out to him the temptation to spend every dollar that he may earn; you hold out hope to him that there is a Government, of which he is a part, that will support him just so long as he may live. That stifles human incentive, hence is socialism.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that a man should be taught to look out for himself. A large majority of the men of this country do not make $600 a year. They struggle and toil. They are subjected to the blasts of winter and the heat of summer; they bring up a large family; yet as every day goes by these provident men lay up a small amount of money, and by that very effort they are compelled to depend upon themselves. Take that away and you have a man useless to civilization.

I know a little something about the Revenue-Cutter Service, perhaps as much as the gentleman from North Carolina. My younger days were spent upon the sea; I spent more than a year, off and on, upon a revenue cutter. I have some familiarity in a general way with the Revenue-Cutter Service, and I know that a Revenue-Cutter officer is simply a civil employee of the Government. The gentleman says these officers may be called into active service in defense of their country. That is true. So is every male citizen between the ages of 18 and 45 liable to be called into the active service of his country.

Mr. BELLAMY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LOUD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELLAMY. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that after the Spanish war a certain Revenue-Cutter officer, in order to make a test case, applied for extra pay for his services during the war with Spain on a revenue cutter; and that the decision upon that case was that the Revenue-Cutter Service is a part of the military and naval department of the Government, and therefore the officers of that service are not entitled to any pay under such circumstances?

Mr. LOUD. Well, I do not care to argue that question. I will withdraw the statement, if it will please the gentleman, as my time is very limited. I have not had the time to investigate this subject thoroughly enough to make a technical speech upon it.

Mr. BELLAMY again rose.

Mr. LOUD. The point raised by the gentleman is wholly immaterial, and as I have only twenty minutes I do not care to argue the legal status of this case. I am willing to admit, if it will satisfy the gentleman, that these officers are in the military service. That question is really immaterial for the purposes of the argument that I have in view.

The gentleman says there are but 215 of these officers. Now, if it is just to retire the officer, who becomes a lieutenant in two years, why should we not retire the men? To this point a gentleman replied the other day that the men remain in the service only three years. I will venture to say that if you pay the men of the Revenue-Cutter Service a sufficient amount of money they will stay there until they die; and I am sure that the man on deck is entitled to the charity, or liberality at least, of his Government as much as the officer.

A young man enters the service as a cadet, and in two years becomes a lieutenant. I believe I am correct about that. Another young man enters the merchant service, and if he becomes a second officer in ten years, he is one out of five thousand, and when he gets to be second mate of a ship of 1,000 or 1,500 tons, how much salary would he get after possibly ten or fifteen years' service before the mast? As second mate of a ship of 1,000 or 1,500 tons he would get $40 or $50 a month when he could catch a job.

The motive power behind this bill is the motive that ultimately will force a civil pension list upon this Government. We have in effect a civil pension in every department already. Why, sir, there are men in those departments who have become incapacitated for performing service; and the head of the division, seeming to suppose that he is running the division and paying the salaries out of his own pocket, says: "I have not the heart to perform my duty to the people of this country; that is, I have a man here that can not earn a dollar a year. I will not dismiss him." Why, sir, under such circumstances the head of a bureau or division has no discretion. He is put in his place simply to execute his duty to this Government, and he must see that every man performs his duty faithfully and well, and he has no discretion to keep an incompetent employee there drawing a salary and doing nothing.

Now, there are a number of officers in this Revenue-Cutter Service, I understand, who have been on waiting orders for a number of years. Why? Because the Secretary of the Treasury, in the goodness of his heart, has not the "mean" disposition, is not "cruel" enough, to dismiss them. He is perfectly willing that the man who is supporting his family on $600 a year shall be taxed to keep this other man in idleness, but he has not the courage to perform his duty and dismiss that man from the service.

I am surrounded with these revenue officers, as I am surrounded by post-office clerks, letter carriers, and other Government officials. Probably I have as many of these people surrounding me as any other man here. San Francisco is the great commercial city of the Pacific coast. Revenue officers abound there.

They have been after me, as they have been after you, a number of years. They are connected by marriage or blood with some of my constituents, just as the officers of the Navy are connected by ties of marriage or blood with many of our constituents. As a result, we passed the naval personnel bill; and as a result, in order to get these old fellows out of the way who can not go to sea and perform duty—in order that they may be retired, and thus promotion be given to a lot of young men who are waiting—I suppose we shall pass this legislation. However, I hope not.

I say again—and I will not discuss this question from a legal standpoint—this is a civil service. An officer or man in the Revenue-Cutter Service is in the civil service of the Government. I venture the assertion that there were more men killed and wounded in the Railway Mail Service during the years 1900 and 1901 than have ever been killed in the Revenue-Cutter Service since more than one hundred years ago. Why not pension them? Why not retire them? It is a more dangerous service than the Revenue-Cutter Service. Then take the men who are in the Life-Saving Service, a service a thousand times more dangerous than the Revenue-Cutter Service. Why not pension them?

But gentlemen say, "These men sometimes perform naval duty." Well, perhaps they do. But after you shall have provided for the retirement of Revenue-Cutter officers—officers in the civil service of the Government—you have approached so near to the retirement of any and every civil Government employee that you can not longer rise in your place and oppose the retirement of other men in the civil service.

And that is where the danger is, and I want to point out to the House, and the only object I sought to obtain was for a moment to call attention to the danger of passing legislation of this kind, because after you once embark you are on the broad sea of retirement or civil pensions for all time to come; and if you are going to embark in civil pensions, then I say those most entitled are not those in the Government service, but those outside of the Government service who receive a much less salary than the average man who works for the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from California consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. Sixteen minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MAHON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4872. An act to amend an act entitled "An act governing the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895.

Senate concurrent resolution 33.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed and bound in cloth 6,000 copies of the revised course of study for Indian schools; 1,500 for the use of the House of Representatives and 1,500 for the use of the superintendent of Indian schools.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11053. An act providing for issuance of patent to the town site of Basin City, Wyo., to the municipal authorities thereof for the use and benefit of said town, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12095. An act to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes relating to the signing of letters patent for inventions;

H. R. 283. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert M. McCullough;

H. R. 610. An act to correct the military record of John F. Antlitz;

H. R. 725. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph B. Arbaugh;

H. R. 809. An act granting an increase of pension to James P. Burchfield;
 H. R. 918. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Misner;
 H. R. 1190. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert S. Whittier;
 H. R. 1275. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Thomas;
 H. R. 1278. An act granting an increase of pension to La Myra V. Kendig;

 H. R. 10692. An act granting an increase of pension to David C. Maples.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] for twenty minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the Revenue-Cutter Service is a necessary and an honorable branch of the public service and I have no doubt it performs its functions most creditably. I have no disposition to disparage the efficiency or the merits of this branch of the service. As a matter of fact I know personally but little about it in detail. When a bill similar to this was up for consideration last year I made a few remarks in opposition to the measure, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] followed me and said that, judging from the character of the speech I made, he inferred that I believed a revenue cutter to be very similar to the cutter that Santa Claus drives over the country with his reindeers in distributing benefactions to the good little boys and girls at yuletide. Gentlemen have asserted repeatedly, in discussion of this bill, that it is a meritorious measure; that no just grounds have been advanced why it should be defeated.

The burden, Mr. Chairman, is upon the advocates of the measure. I have listened patiently to most of the discussion, and it seems to me that no adequate reasons have been advanced by a single advocate of the measure why it should become a law. The bill, I admit, is somewhat of an improvement over the one reported a year ago, but the vicious principle is still retained. The question of the character of the Revenue-Cutter Service, whether civil or military, is hardly open to discussion. It is not a debatable question. The Revenue-Cutter Service is ancient and honorable—it was organized in 1790, for the purpose of assisting in the collection of the customs. It is under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. The revenue cutters of course carry an armament; that is necessary. It is just as necessary for revenue cutters to be armed for the enforcement of the law as it is for police officers in the municipalities to carry guns and clubs; just as necessary as it is for deputy marshals in the moonshine districts of the country to go armed.

Its military character is only incidental. Its military functions are altogether subordinate. When you come to consider the question of justice to this branch of the public service, let me ask, gentlemen, by what standard they undertake to measure that intangible essence. There are two sides to the question, and in dealing with it we not only owe a duty to the men engaged in the service, but at the same time we must keep in mind the interests of the people of the country. There is only one principle by which we can determine the question of justice in the public service. When any branch of the public service offers sufficient inducements to attract men away from the activities of individual life—to attract a sufficient number of competent men—and they are paid their fixed salaries, full justice has been done to all.

It is not denied that men in this service are paid better, more munificently, than men in the civil operations of life are paid for similar kinds of service, but gentlemen say they are not as well paid as the Army and Navy. That may be. I know they are not as a matter of fact. But we are told that they are not relatively as well paid as the Army and Navy, and that the Revenue-Cutter Service is substantially upon the same basis as the others. Why, gentlemen in their enthusiasm in support of this bill have placed the Revenue-Cutter Service upon a pedestal and glorified it here. We know, Mr. Chairman, that it is simply the great ocean patrol, that it is a coast guard of the United States, and I believe it bears about the same relation to the United States Navy that the great forces of municipal police bear to the Army. In the great cities of this country, so well and efficiently policed, the salaries are lower than the salaries paid to the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service to-day, and in few of them is there leave of absence or sick leave. Some of the States have established not a retired list, but a police pension list. That may be very proper, but it is a local matter altogether. The only purpose of this bill is to increase the rank and the pay of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. It is entitled "A bill to promote the efficiency of the service." How does it promote the efficiency of the service? Has any gentleman, any advocate of the measure, explained in what particular a single provision of the bill has promoted or is calculated to promote the efficiency of the service?

Mr. GRAHAM. If the gentleman will allow me, I call attention to the fact that this bill provides for the removal of some of the barnacles that have been overhead in this service, that are filling the higher positions, that will be retired under this act, if it passes.

Mr. MAHON. Some of them 88 years old.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will not that improve the efficiency of the service? I have in mind one man in particular who is over 90 years of age, who is in this service, who is not doing a particle of work, and yet he and others like him are depriving younger men of promotion and of positions.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, it is a sad commentary upon the public service and upon the character of its organization if it has no method of disposing of incapacitated public officers. I do not believe the public service is any such condition as that. The Government is not called upon to retain on the pay roll at high salaries men who are unable to earn a single dollar.

Mr. GRAHAM. This service has such men.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then the fault is in the administration and not in the law. It ought to be more wisely administered.

I understand that under this bill the barnacles to whom the gentleman refers are to be put upon the retired list with probably $125 a year more pay than the most efficient men of the same grade in the active list are getting to-day. They are to be put upon the retired list at about five times as much as the great army of toilers and home builders to whom the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] referred, five times as much as they get for active service, that great army who have no sick leave, no annual leave, and no retirement list.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does the gentleman consider $2,500 a year an outrageous sum to pay an efficient officer who has given his life to the service?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I consider $2,500 a year too much to pay to any man for doing nothing. I am willing to pay $2,500 or $25,000 for an adequate return.

Mr. GRAHAM. Then why did you vote for the retirement provision for the Army and Navy?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My recollection is that I was not in public life when that grave and important question was up for consideration.

Mr. GRAHAM. How would the gentleman have voted in that case?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a different proposition. I do not know.

Mr. GRAHAM. The last Army bill was March 3, 1899. It contained that provision. Did the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not remember.

Mr. LANDIS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how he would vote on a proposition to retire the railway mail clerks?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is not a parallel case, because that is purely civil service and this is not.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. A great deal stronger case can be made in favor of the railway mail clerks.

Mr. LANDIS. Certainly it can. The case of the railway mail clerks is a great deal stronger.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a branch of the civil service and this is not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the gentleman how he would vote on a similar proposition for the officers of the transport service?

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman how he would vote on a proposition for a retired list for the Life-Saving Service?

Mr. GRAHAM. I believe that would be quite proper, and if such a proposition comes up I will vote for it.

Mr. MANN. And the Light-House Service?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; not the Light-House Service. That is different.

Mr. MANN. And the deputy-marshal service?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no similarity whatever between the cases.

Mr. MANN. That is the most dangerous service under the Government.

Mr. LANDIS. The Internal-Revenue Service.

Mr. MANN. Yes; it is the most dangerous service under the Government.

Mr. LESSLER. How about Congressmen?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Illinois certainly does not mean to say that we are living in a country where, with very few exceptions, in possibly half a dozen districts in the United States, a deputy marshal is in danger in the discharge of his duty under the laws of the country?

Mr. MANN. There are more deputy marshals killed in two years than there are killed in the Revenue-Cutter Service in a hundred years.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think there is no doubt about it. Here is the deputy-marshal service, the municipal police, the municipal fire-department service; here is the Life-Saving Service and the Railway Mail Service, where the percentage of casualties is much greater according to the records than in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And the same may be said of the Army and the Navy, both.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true. But in this country there is a great deal of sentiment and patriotism about the Army and Navy. They are supposed to be the embodiment of the power and the chivalry of the country, and they have a certain social standing to maintain, whatever may be thought of that aspect of the question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And we have just astonished the world with our Navy, and astonished all mankind, and lost but one man in doing it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is much to the credit of the Navy, I think.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The imbecility of the enemy.

Mr. ROBERTS. I will ask the gentleman, if he believes that the Army and the Navy should have retirement and pensions on the ground of patriotism and chivalry, how can he refuse it to the men in the Revenue-Cutter Service, when the first gun in the civil war and the first gun at Manila were fired from revenue cutters?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know that that is at all significant in determining this question. As much and as splendid fighting was done on the part of the State militia during the civil war as was done on the part of any organization of equal force in the Army.

Mr. ROBERTS. They are getting their pensions.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They are getting their pensions, and I will add that under the law officers and petty officers and seamen included in the Revenue Service get the same pensions that are given to the naval service where disability occurs in the performance of duty in time of war.

Now, I said a moment ago that this bill is entitled "A bill to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service." Let me ask a single man upon the floor in what respect it promotes the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service except to dispose of a few "barnacles," as they were designated by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]. If longevity pay is necessary to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, it is likewise necessary to promote the efficiency of the public service in all branches of the Administration. If it is necessary, and the argument is that it is necessary, to promote the efficiency, then it should be applied to promote the efficiency of the service in all the departments at Washington. What is there in the argument? Nothing at all. It is said that there ought to be some inducement to better service. Is not the hope of promotion inducement enough? I assume that with all the Revenue-Cutter officers the hope of promotion induces them to grow in efficiency.

Now, when a young man is appointed as a cadet in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and is commissioned after two years, he gets $900 a year during his cadetship. Then he gets his commission, and at least $1,200 a year, and he is quickly promoted. I think promotions come more quickly in the Revenue-Cutter Service than in the Army or Navy. The ways of life are open to the young man. A great many young men in the country—more than is required by the needs of this service—are willing to avoid the conflicts of civil life and forego its opportunities for achievement in order that they may provide a sure and comfortable support for themselves and families during life. When a man gets a commission in the Revenue-Cutter Service he is beyond want. His needs are provided for. His pay may not be as great as in some lines of service, but he gets a certainty. He gladly yields the broader opportunities and better privileges that civil life offers, with its chances of failure, for the certainty in this service. Does anybody claim that this service is not able to get all the efficient men that it requires under present conditions?

When was there a time in this country, except possibly under abnormal conditions, when there was not an abundance of cadets and an abundance of men in the country who were willing to go into the service and accept commissions and to perform all the arduous labors that gentlemen say belong to it. The pay that these men get is twice the pay that is given people for similar service in private life. When the bill is analyzed and looked into from all standpoints it does not possess sufficient merit to entitle it to a place in the permanent statutes of the country. There is some reason, I confess, in the argument of inequality; but I am not ready to admit that the Revenue-Cutter Service in dignity and responsibility occupies anything like the position that the Navy of the United States does. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, this is an attempt to establish an independent naval establishment.

Mr. Long, the Secretary of the Navy, two years ago addressed a letter upon a similar bill to Senator HALE, in which he condemned the measure because he said it practically established an independent naval establishment, with its corps of officers and with its board of examination and all that sort of thing. He said the question is, Do we need any additional naval establishment; and if so, how many? The Army transport service of the United States is independent of the Navy to-day, operating a considerable line of ships officered by men who hold the commissions of the United States Army. The argument of Mr. Long against the passage of that bill is cogent, and applies with equal force to this. Let the Revenue-Cutter Service continue to be a branch of the civil service; let it continue to be under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, to assist in enforcing the customs laws, to prevent the smuggling of goods into this country, and to continue to patrol the coast.

Occupying this subordinate position, it may continue to be liable to be detailed into the military service in time of war, and when called into that service its character is military. As a rule, its vessels are small. They do not engage in actual fighting. They perform the messenger service of the Navy during the war. The Revenue-Cutter boats are principally dispatch boats. Of course, in the execution of their work they must occasionally come into positions of danger; they must fight, and they do. Revenue cutters are officered and manned by American citizens, with American versatility and power to meet any emergency, to do anything that may confront them. Nevertheless this is a branch of the civil service.

To pass a measure of this kind is a dangerous step in the wrong direction. The fact that such a measure is proposed is one of the best illustrations I have seen of the grasping tendency of all branches of the public service to get more power, more pay, and more rank. I would like to know, in the name of justice and of the people, where this movement is going to stop. When this bill shall become a law, if it does pass, and when the Life-Saving Service comes knocking at the door of Congress, asking for more pay, asking for a retired list, asking for rank and position, how can we deny it? I think as much of the Life-Saving Service as of any other branch of the public service, and I consider it the poorest paid, in consideration of the hazards of the service, of any branch of the public service. The Light-House Service, with its boats that may be detailed for public service in time of war, has performed efficient service in connection with the Navy. That branch of the service may next come asking Congress to organize it upon the same basis, upon the same plane, as the Revenue-Marine Service. And what answer will the gentlemen make to that request? How will they respond to a demand for the equality of that service with the Revenue-Marine?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service provides in section 1 the grades in the service.

Section 2 provides for the rank of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service with corresponding grades in the Army and Navy.

Section 3 provides for the compensation of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, placing them on exactly the same level with officers of the Army and Navy, including the percentage of increase for length of service up to twenty years, or what is familiarly known as "longevity pay."

The remaining section provides for the retirement from active service of commissioned officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who have or may become physically, mentally, or morally disqualified.

The following table will show the wide difference which exists in pay, while it also shows an unjustifiable discrimination against the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service:

Difference in pay of officers, rank for rank, in the Army, Navy, and Revenue Cutter Service after twenty years of service.

Army.		Navy.		Revenue-Cutter Service.
Rank.	Pay.	Rank.	Pay.	Rank.	Pay.
Majors.....	$3,500	Lieutenant-commanders.	$3,500	Captains.....	$2,500
Captains.....	2,520	Lieutenants...	2,520	First lieutenants and chief engineers.	1,800
First lieutenants.	2,140	Lieutenants (junior).	2,140	Second lieutenants and first assistant engineers.	1,500
Second lieutenants.	2,000	Ensigns.....	2,000	Third lieutenants and second assistant engineers.	1,200

It is essential to the morale and efficiency of any service such as this that there should be some reward for length of service. In the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps this is given in the shape of an increase of compensation at the rate of 10 per cent for each five years of service up to twenty years, or 40 per cent. Why should not these officers, who are upon the same level in all things else, in life tenure of office, in general duties in peace and war times, etc., be denied this consideration?

There does not appear to be any valid reason why a body of officers who in every other respect serve upon a level with those of the Army and Navy should be denied equal compensation.

The Revenue-Cutter Service was organized in 1790, eight years prior to the organization of the Navy. It took an active part in the war of 1812, in the Mexican war, in the civil war, and in the war with Spain.

The service now consists of about 200 officers and 1,000 men with about 40 vessels armed with 70 guns. The vessels in the service have increased from sailing vessels of 100 tons to steamships of 1,000 tons burden. The duties of the service in time of peace consist in the enforcement of all laws of the United States affecting the maritime interest of the nation; the arrest and prevention of illicit traffic by sea; the navigation laws, compelling all kinds of craft navigating the waters of the United States to comply with legal requirements in regard to documents, lights, steamboat inspection, and passenger laws; the quarantine laws; the rescue and succor of distressed vessels and crews; the drill and discipline of the life-saving crews; the supervision of construction of life-saving stations, and the entire inspection work of that service, the supervision of anchorage grounds established by law, etc.

The duty performed in this service when rescuing crews of distressed vessels has been most important. It has been the saving of innumerable lives and of vast values in property. In the minority report upon this bill attention is called to the fact that these reports are not submitted in detail to Congress. They are submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and are on file in the Bureau subject to the inspection at any time of anybody who desires to see them.

Now, sir, in regard to the objection of some that this bill will tend to create a civil pension list, I wish to say that it will not create a civil pension list any more than the Navy or the Marine Corps has created a civil pension list.

Mr. Chairman, the military character of this was service officially stated by the Treasury Department in the report of the service in 1881, as follows:

The Revenue-Cutter Service, while charged by law with the performance of important civil duties, is essentially military in its character. Each vessel is provided with great guns and furnished with as full a complement of small arms for its crew as any ship of war. Its officers are required to be proficient in military drill and possess a thorough knowledge of the uses of both great and small arms. Its crews are required to be instructed from day to day at the great guns and in the use of small arms.

Commanding officers are required, while boarding vessels arriving in ports of the United States, in case of failure or refusal of any such vessel on being hailed to come to and submit to the proper inspection by an officer of the service, to fire first across her bows as a warning, and in case of persistent refusal to resort to shot or shell to compel obedience. In the performance of this work they are likely at any time to receive injuries and to be subjected to the same dangers in time of peace as the force employed on naval vessels.

By act of March 2, 1799, it is provided that the revenue cutters shall, whenever the President so directs, cooperate with the Navy.

The men of this service are commissioned and dismissed the same as they are in the Navy. The seamen are enlisted, uniformed, and drilled as in the Navy. The ships are armed as similar ships in the Navy, and in the Spanish war they carried 61 large guns. They are not civilians. The following quotation from the speech of Mr. Scudder, of New York, in the Fifty-sixth Congress, bears directly on this question, as follows:

It seems to have escaped general notice that the officers and men of the regular Revenue-Cutter Service can not volunteer, and therefore they are not volunteers. Second Lieut. Walker W. Joynes, Revenue-Cutter Service, has demonstrated this beyond a question of a doubt, having, in order to make a test case, applied for the two months' extra pay given to volunteers, he having served on the cutter McCulloch at the battle of Manila. His application was denied, and the Auditor for the Treasury Department and the Solicitor of the Treasury decided that—

"A regular officer or a regularly enlisted man of the regular Revenue-Cutter Service is not competent to volunteer in time of war, because it is just as much a part of his duty to serve as it is the duty of a regular officer or regularly enlisted man of the Army or Navy to serve in time of war."

Candidates for appointment as cadets must pass a very rigid examination and take a two years' training on board of the training ship Chase. They are instructed in seamanship, navigation, ordnance and gunnery, international law, and many other necessary subjects. This, Mr. Chairman, shows that the requirements and duties place this service upon the same plane as the Navy, and the pay and prospects should be the same. The passage of this bill, that has passed the Senate, will give to the men in this service the relief to which they are entitled.

Mr. Chairman, another matter that I wish to refer to at this time is in relation to the erection of a monument to the memory of Brig. Gen. Count Casimir Pulaski, as provided for in House bill 16, introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRICK].

Congress has caused to be erected in this city monuments to many of the heroes of the war of the Revolution, but up to the present time it has neglected to perpetuate the memory of Brig. Gen. Count Casimir Pulaski in like manner—a champion of liberty whose high-minded patriotism and distinguished services should be immortalized by the erection of such a memorial. The passage of this bill will also redeem the resolution of the Continental Congress, which body on November 29, 1779, upon receiving information of the death of General Pulaski, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That a monument be erected to the memory of Brigadier-General Count Pulaski, and that a committee of three be appointed to bring in a resolution for that purpose.

The members chosen were Mr. Gerry, Mr. Livingston, and Mr. Harnett.

Count Casimir Pulaski was born in Poland in the year 1747 and enlisted at the age of 21 years, under the leadership of his father, to fight for the continuance of independence of Poland, but history tells us that they were unsuccessful, and when the American Congress adopted the Declaration of Independence he resolved to again enter the fight for freedom, though for a new nation, a new world. Our envoy to the court of France, Dr. Franklin, when writing of him to General Washington, said:

Count Pulaski, of Poland, an officer famous throughout Europe for his bravery and conduct in defense of the liberties of his country, will have the honor of delivering this into your hands. The court here have encouraged and promoted his voyage from an opinion that he may be highly useful in our service.

With this recommendation he was cordially received upon his arrival in Philadelphia in the summer of 1777.

His first blow for the freedom of the colonies was struck at the battle of Brandywine, being the first contest in which that other gallant patriot, Lafayette, took part. General Pulaski was, on the recommendation of Washington, commissioned brigadier-general and chief of dragoons in the United States Army September 15, 1777, being the first general of cavalry in the Army of the United States.

In a letter recently discovered by Col. Joseph Smolinski, dated Charleston, August 19, 1779, appears his declaration to become an American citizen. It is as follows:

I could not submit to stoop before the sovereigns of Europe, so I came to hazard all for the freedom of America, and desirous of passing the rest of my life in a country truly free and before settling as a citizen to fight for liberty.

In the leading events of the campaign following Pulaski occupied a distinguished position. For me to recite his services in detail would cause me to give a minute account of various battles, leading up to the time he received his death wound, while gallantly leading his cavalry at the siege of Savannah, October 9, 1779.

Of the character of Count Pulaski and the great events in his life, especially his invaluable service to America, that entitle him to be numbered among the heroes of America and to be perpetuated in the memory of the people for whom he sacrificed his life, and of the appreciation and high esteem in which his memory is cherished by those sons of Poland who have taken up their homes in this land, I give some of the statements made by Col. Joseph Smolinski, of Washington, D. C., before the Committee on the Library. Colonel Smolinski is the representative of the combined Polish-American societies, specially commissioned by them to assist in consummating the plan to erect this statue to the memory of Count Pulaski:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 22, 1901.

Memorial of Gen. Count Casimir Pulaski, by Col. Joseph Smolinski, of Washington, D. C., representative of the Polish-American organizations in the United States in the Pulaski monument movement, etc.

No page of American history is so full of interest as the one which relates to the Revolutionary period. It gave birth to the highest ideals of patriotism, to the loftiest spirit of devotion to country, immortalized in a thousand glorious actions which constitute a common patrimony of the nation's proud inheritance.

When from the belfry of old Independence Hall Liberty Bell tolled the glad news which announced to the struggling colonists and proclaimed to the world the birth of a new republic with its civilization, democratic institutions, true liberty, and individuality of citizenship, there appeared on the political horizon, among the galaxy of heroes who left their impress upon time, three names which take high rank on the pages of contemporaneous history.

They stand out in bold relief in the Temple of Fame, and the glory which enshrines their memories will grow brighter and brighter as the years roll on. We refer with patriotic pride to the illustrious George Washington, the epitome of whose life is written in the significant and familiar legend: "Father of his country; first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." Next is the last general of the Polish Republic, Thaddeus Kosciuszko, whose life, indeed, was "poetry put into action," of whom the poet wrote at the sad hour of his death:

"Hope for a season bade the world farewell,
And Freedom shrieked as Kosciuszko fell."

And last, but not least, is the Phil Sheridan of the American cavalry, the brave Casimir Pulaski, who lost his life at the siege of Savannah. The last two warriors were the tried and trusted friends of the immortal Washington, their illustrious commander in chief. They were men of military genius, noble sons of the fair land of Poland, conspicuous exemplars of unswerving fidelity to principle, bright symbols of patriotism and patriotic endeavor, champions of universal freedom.

What greater gift can a people bequeath to a nation than monuments of art which not only symbolize heroic deeds and virtuous actions of great and good men and women, but as object lessons immortalize the achievements of true greatness, so that the generations as they come and go may draw inspiration from the glories of art which so eloquently tell the story of the lives of those whose heroism and virtues stimulate action and excite admiration?

If the assertion is true, who is more deserving of this degree of immortalization than Brig. Gen. Count Casimir Pulaski? The sentiment of appreciation of his worth and meritorious services was emphasized by the representatives of the Continental Congress, who were first to conceive the idea of erecting a monument to his memory. It originated during the stirring period of the war of the Revolution, of which he was one of the heroes and a martyr.

On the 29th of November, 1779, a letter, dated October 31 of that year, from Major-General Lincoln, was read in the Continental Congress. It inclosed a communication of the 5th, same month, from Lieutenant-Colonel Bedaux, of Pulaski's Legion, announcing the death of the last-named officer, whereupon Congress

Resolved, That a monument be erected to the memory of Brigadier Count Pulaski, and that a committee of three be appointed to bring in a resolution for that purpose.

"The members chosen: Mr. Gerry, Mr. Livingston, and Mr. Harnett." After a most careful research among the archives of the Continental Congress, I found no record whatever showing that the resolution was carried out, and consequently the stone of the then proposed monument remains in the quarry.

After the lapse of more than a century, with the record of a vote still standing on the pages of the Journals of the Continental Congress as a public recognition of the eminent services of our hero, as well as an indication of a Republic's forgetfulness, I will not say ingratitude, the Polish-American citizens of our land, who number nearly 3,000,000 of souls, desire and pray that this Congress, the first of the twentieth century, redeem the pledge promised by the Continental Congress, and thus give evidence of the nation's gratitude in appreciation of the meritorious services and noble character of Pulaski, who shed his blood in order that the infant Republic might live.

From out that galaxy of heroes who gave our nation an historic beginning at a momentous period of the world's history not excelled even by the Olympian memories of Pericles, who pictured in thundering eloquence Athenian patriotism, there is one among the many far-shining men, whose renown in valor and deeds is the record of a golden page of our national history, to which it has imparted dignity. This one man I single out was a foreigner by birth, a noble son of that most ancient nation—Poland; a stranger, if you please, but a dear brother by adoption, a veritable Bayard, "without fear and without reproach," a champion in the cause of the oppressed in the cause of freedom, a hero of liberty, nay, an American citizen, baptised in his own blood on the plains of Savannah while defending our beloved land against the enemy.

This proud warrior and hero of liberty gives us in his imperfect English the keynote of his lofty character. I quote from one of his unpublished letters to the Continental Congress, dated Charleston, August 19, 1779, read before that body October 1, 1779, in which also appears his declaration to become an American citizen:

"I could not submit to stoop before the sovereigns of Europe, so I came to hazard all for the freedom of America, desirous of passing the rest of my life in a country truly free, and before settling as a citizen to fight for liberty."

Then in an outburst of indignation at the intrigues and injustice operating in those days as well as our day, he continues:

"But perceiving that endeavors are used to disgust me against such a motive and to regard it as phantom, I am inclined to believe that enthusiasm for liberty is not the predominant virtue in America at this time."

And concludes thus:

"The campaign is at hand. Perhaps I may still have an occasion of showing that I am a friend to the cause without being happy enough to please some individuals." (Papers Continental Congress, No. 164, p. 108.)

It is in the revival of the recollections of what Pulaski did in the cause of freedom on two continents that we are stirred by a sense of deep gratitude and a loyal, patriotic appreciation, willing as lovers of liberty to give evidence of that inspiration born of his example, made holy by his death, in erecting to his memory a monument worthy of his name and fame; one that shall remain on our sacred soil in the nation's great capital, an object lesson, an educator, silent though it be, that shall cause his compatriots to love and cherish more and more as the generations go and come their obligations to this our beloved country, and by thus making them good citizens they will be better fortified and imbued with a proper spirit and a higher ideal of American citizenship against the demoralizing tendencies and pernicious influences of the present day.

Gentlemen, around this monument we pray you to erect, inspired by the fond memories that shall cluster around it like the ivy, there shall grow up that magnificent, ideal citizenship, second to none in the sum of national greatness, that shall insure the safety of the Republic and its perpetuity.

What claim has Pulaski to this recognition?

If, indeed, time lends importance to high station and emphasizes its consecration of heroes and heroic actions in the glories of art, surely the principles of right and justice which they upheld in former times will lose none of their force in the triumphant present.

Few names of the stirring period of the eighteenth century have come down to us with more dignity or clothed in greater attractive romance than the intrepid Lithuanian, Pulaski, who, like his illustrious compatriot and companion in arms, Kosciuszko, touches the tender chords of our sympathy.

Born in 1747, while yet a youth he pledged his life and fortune to liberate his country, both from the invader and the disturbing elements within, under the famous compact of the confederation of Barr, organized by his patriotic father, Count Pulaski, in 1768, who, together with another son, were lost in the great fight for Polish independence.

In the struggles which preceded the first partition of Poland, in 1772, he commanded in many actions and military operations against the flower of the Russian army. His wonderful endowments, skill, and intrepidity excited the admiration of Europe, and drew forth from the writers of the day such estimate of his worth as a soldier as is given in a letter to Washington dated Paris, June 13, 1777, which reads:

"Count Pulaski, who was a general of the Confederates in Poland, and who is gone to join you, is esteemed one of the greatest officers in Europe." (Diplomatic Correspondence of the Revolution, Wharton, vol. 2, p. 339.)

We all know the sad story of the downfall of ill-fated Poland, and we know, too, what herculean efforts Pulaski, Kosciuszko, and other brave companions in arms made to prevent the enactment of the saddest picture of time, that horrid scene, the crucifixion of Poland, the foulest blot on the world's civilization.

Noble Spartan, hopeful to the last that his country will again rise triumphant from the grave of oppression, he saw, like a bright vision from afar, the beautiful temple of liberty building on the Western Hemisphere. There, beneath the furls of our starry banner, his compatriots would find a home in a land of the free.

His generous impulse to serve the struggling colonists, his martial enthusiasm and love of liberty, are forcibly expressed in the following letter of Franklin, the accredited representative of the colonies to France, which resulted in Pulaski's admission to Washington's war councils in the days which tried men's souls:

"Count Pulaski, of Poland, an officer famous throughout Europe for his bravery and conduct in the defense of the liberties of his country against the three great invading powers of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, will have the honor of delivering this into your hands. The court here have encouraged and promoted this voyage, from an opinion that he may be highly useful in our service."

Briefly, in the summer of 1777 he arrived in Philadelphia, entered the service as a volunteer, served successively under Washington, Greene, Wayne, Sullivan, Lafayette, Lincoln, etc. At Brandywine, where the first blows for American independence were struck, his skill, endurance, and bravery were so marked that Washington intrusted him with the command of his bodyguard during the close of that memorable action. A few days after the battle "the Father of his Country," in recommending our hero to Congress for appointment and commission as a brigadier-general, says:

"This gentleman has been, like us, engaged in defending the liberty and independence of his country, and has sacrificed his fortune to his zeal for these objects. He derives from hence a title to our respect that ought to operate in his favor as far as the good of the service will permit."

The record shows that Congress confirmed this recommendation, and on September 15, 1778, he was commissioned a brigadier-general and chief of dragoons in the United States Army, though but 30 years of age, having previously been designated as commander of an independent corps, known as the Pulaski Legion, March 28, 1778.

Furthermore, it was left to Pulaski, the father of American cavalry, to demonstrate the value of this arm of the military service, aptly called "the eye of the Army," which up to his coming the Lees, Sumters, Marions, and William Washington failed to show. None of the officers named held higher rank than that of colonel. Pulaski was the first general of cavalry in the American military establishment.

To follow this fearless cavalryman in his rides through the storms of battle from the Atlantic to the Gulf would occupy too much time.

American history, written by numerous versatile pens, contains graphic accounts of his brilliant services.

In conclusion, gentlemen, permit me to invite your attention to the last sad drama in his short but eventful life. It was while gallantly leading the combined American and French cavalry forces against the enemy he received his death wound at the siege of Savannah, Ga., October 9, 1779, and as he was borne from that memorable field moistened with his precious blood, turning to Light Horse Harry Lee, as that officer was familiarly called, he gave him, in feeble accents, this last command, "Follow my lancers, to whom I have given my order of attack," and on October 11, 1779, his spirit took its flight heavenward—called off duty forever.

His memorable charge is thus described by one of his staff officers, Major Rogowski:

For half an hour the guns roared and blood flowed abundantly. Seeing an opening between the enemy's works, Pulaski resolved, with his legion and a small detachment of Georgia cavalry, to charge through, enter the city, confuse the enemy, and cheer the inhabitants with good tidings. General Lincoln approved the daring plan. Imploring the help of the Almighty, Pulaski shouted to his men "Forward!" and we, 200 strong, rode at full speed after him, the earth resounding under the hoofs of our chargers.

For the first two moments all went well. We sped like knights into the peril. Just, however, as we passed the gap between the two batteries a cross fire, like a pouring shower, confused our ranks. I looked around. Oh! sad moment, ever to be remembered, Pulaski lies prostrate on the ground. I leaped toward him, thinking possibly his wound was not dangerous, but a canister shot had pierced his thigh and the blood was also flowing from his breast, probably from a second wound. Falling on my knees I tried to raise him. He said, in a faint voice, "Jesus! Maria! Joseph!" Further I knew not, for at that moment a musket ball, grazing my scalp, blinded me with blood, and I fell to the ground in a state of insensibility.

He was borne from the bloody field, and, after the conflict was over, was conveyed on board the U. S. brig Wasp, to go round to Charleston. The ship, delayed by head winds, remained several days in Savannah River, and during this period he was attended by the most skillful surgeons in the French fleet. It was found impossible to establish suppuration, and gangrene supervened. As the Wasp was leaving the river, Pulaski breathed his last. His corpse became so offensive that Colonel Bentalou, his officer in attendance, "was compelled, though reluctantly, to consign to a watery grave all that was now left upon earth of his beloved and honored commander."

Gentlemen, it is to the memory of this great and good man—a fearless soldier, a hero of the war of the Revolution, entitled to the proud distinction of being numbered among the founders of our Republic, an exemplar of patriotism, a champion of liberty, of whom Washington said, "His valor and active zeal on all occasions have done him great honor"—that we Polish-American citizens—I should say American citizens—pray you to immortalize by erecting to his memory a monument of American art which shall stand out in bold relief as the noblest expression of a people's heartfelt gratitude. Thus, too, will this monument, like all others, serve the office of history by endearing in the hearts and minds of generations yet unborn the memories which cluster around the great Revolutionary struggle for liberty, and instill a better appreciation of the sacrifices made by the patriots of 1776, whose heroism we must admire if we can not imitate.

It is designed that this statue, as a work of art, shall emanate from this country. We are treating General Pulaski as an American citizen, which he was, while honoring a hero of liberty who fought on two continents for human freedom.

We believe that this great desire expressed by organized effort to erect a monument to the memory of Pulaski will have a very beneficial effect upon the Poles of this country; we believe it will attach them more dearly to our flag, and as they seem to have an almost idolatrous love for heroism and heroes, and as Pulaski was one of our great Revolutionary characters, we think this monument will have that great tendency.

It will do more than this by emphasizing our appreciation of the inestimable blessings we as a people enjoy as a result of sacrifices made and victories won by the patriots of 1776. To keep alive the memory of heroes through whose sacrifices deliverance came and freedom was made possible, we must not forget the debt of gratitude we owe to the foreigners who so generously aided the immortal Washington in establishing our great Republic.

Let us, then, erect a monument of granite and bronze that shall perpetuate the memory of the heroic dead, Pulaski, who—

"In the thickest fight triumphantly he fell,
While into victory's arms he led us on;
A death so glorious our grief should quell;
We mourn him, yet his battle crown is won."

Liberty was the goal, the price of which was his precious life, and our gratitude should be commensurate with the share of glory that attaches to his noble sacrifice.

It is to perpetuate the memory of this great soldier and hero of the Revolution, of this champion of liberty, by erecting to his memory a monument that I urge the passage of this bill. He fought and died for American independence, he knew the value of freedom. All that was near and dear to him was sacrificed in the struggle against the partition of his native land, his father killed, his country's political existence taken from her, his countrymen coerced or driven into exile; but while a ray of hope remained he fought for Poland, but the combined power of three mighty nations overcame and crushed a patriotic people, and Poland fell. Banished from his native land to seek a home among strangers, it is not to be wondered at that while in France in 1777, his sympathy was at once enlisted with the American colonists, who had declared their independence. He beheld in this effort to throw off the yoke of oppression a struggle like that his country had recently been engaged in. The spirit of liberty for which he had lost everything prompted him to join the forces of those who in the New World had pledged to each other their life and honor to maintain. He came here to prepare a place for the liberty-loving people of his country and to lay the foundation of a country whose people are not only free, but who allow naturalization to all who desire to be.

He laid down his life to secure for the United States the end he had hoped to attain for his own country.

In several instances Washington commended his distinguished services, and always relied on his judgment, bravery, and fidelity to the cause of American independence.

Pulaski was true to his native land, true to the land of his adoption, true to the cause of liberty and freedom, and the people of this country should pay, without further delay, the debt they owe this hero of the American Revolution.

This legislation is urged by over 2,000,000 sons and daughters of Poland who in this country cherish the name of Pulaski. I have received petitions urgently requesting the passage of this bill from over 30 organizations of the Polish National Alliance and several other organizations of citizens of Polish birth or descent, who represent upward of 60,000 of the population of Buffalo, N. Y., the city I have the honor, in part, to represent.

The Committee on the Library of this House, through its chairman, Mr. McCLEARY, favorably reported a similar bill to appropriate $50,000 for the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of Brig. Gen. Count Casimir Pulaski in the Fifty-sixth Congress.

I hope that now the pledge of the Continental Congress will be redeemed and that the nation will pass this bill and erect a statue to the honor of this great soldier.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LESSLER].

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Chairman, when on the 15th of January last I was sworn in as a member of this House, I was asked, almost on that very day, to appear before the committee having this bill in charge, to say a few words in its favor. I demurred because, to be very frank, I had imagined that what is commonly known as the Revenue-Cutter Service was a matter relating mainly to the steamboats or ships plying up and down New York Bay. I soon found that there was in other quarters the same general ignorance of what this service is. It was then impressed upon me that in all probability, in my Congressional district, there were more ships and more men connected with this service than I had had any conception of; and hence I felt that if, after examining the matter, I should find this to be a meritorious proposition, it was almost my duty to appear before the committee in its support.

I looked up the subject. I found that this service had a history extending away back. I found that it had a complete set of regulations extending away back. I found that it had a school-ship, requiring a corps of highly qualified officers for its direction and management. I found that it had seamen receiving salaries commensurate with those paid to seamen in the Navy. I found that it had officers whom the Government required to be men of education, to wear clothes of a certain stamp, to support themselves as gentlemen in a way befitting officers of such a branch of the Government.

The day I appeared before that committee there was taken up a bill which was to give to some of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service the thanks of Congress for heroic work performed by them. The men representing the service before the committee had traveled a considerable distance to appear there and tell of the heroism of an officer, a physician, a private, and a seaman of that service in rescuing some men who were serving in the Arctic Zone. It seemed to me that was a pleasant prelude to the plea I had to make before that committee; and it seems to me now, without going into the technicalities of the bill, that any measure which promotes a morale among men, which gives them the idea that this Government does look after them in their old age, that this Government has an eye to their future, that this Government has a proper sense of the eternal fitness of good work and good deeds—that such a measure is calculated to promote the efficiency of any service; and when the day shall come that we have to meet the question of a civil-service pension for the railway mail clerk or any other clerk we shall meet it on the floor of this House with no fear for the future.

These gentlemen who are so startled for the to-morrow of legislation should leave that to-morrow to the men who may be their successors in this House. The distinguished gentleman—and I use that term in return for the courtesy of the term extended to me—referred to me in his minority report and to a statement which I made. I made the statement before the committee that I was informed that this Government printed a book, and that that book had the pictures of uniforms; that it laid down regulations; that it said how many bars and buttons and stripes and everything else a revenue officer should wear, and, further, that I had been informed that one of these men, out of his salary, had to pay $600 because this Government required him to wear a certain uniform. The gentleman, with that insouciance of temperament which so aptly fits him, refers to me as one of the distinguished gentlemen who brought this business to his attention, and declares that that is his idea of the flunkysm—and, by the way, that is a new phrase, as I understand—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield two more minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LESSLER. He declares that that is his idea of the flunkysm that attaches to the service. He admits that the Revenue-Cutter officer has to pay for the uniform, but he did not get up and howl in his minority report about the Government requiring him to do it. It would be a very great delight to me at least to have time enough to analyze the speech that was made opposing this bill.

It wanders off into everything that appertains to this bill—not. [Laughter.] It goes to every other line of service to draw a parallel; but I want to put before this House its main feature, and that is that here is a body of men who work three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, who, because of the very fact of the small boats that the gentleman refers to, take their lives in their hands, when the men of the Navy are over on the other side and all over the rest of the world on good decks, in good ships, and they are not required to brave in times of peace, of hard weather and good weather, day in and day out, the dangers of the sea, trying to earn their money and doing men's duty in men's positions. If these positions in the Revenue-Cutter Service are not for men, then let the Government so declare. Being for men, let us put them where we have put other men and increase by this bill the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois use some time now?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman desires me to, I will.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no one else to yield to this minute.

Mr. RYAN. I will say to my colleague on the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] that my colleague from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] is ready to go on for five minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, this is a meritorious measure, and deserves the favorable consideration of this House. By their fidelity to service, their loyal and patriotic devotion to duty, their valiant service in times of war, their heroic conduct in the battles which were fought on sea in defense of our country and our flag, their efficient work in times of peace, the Revenue-Cutter Service has merited the commendation of the Government, and deserves the recognition which this bill proposes to give it. It deserves to be placed, so far as rank and retirement are concerned, on a parity with the Navy of the United States.

The Revenue-Cutter Service has a magnificent history. It antedates that of the regular Navy. It was organized in 1790, and in every war our country fought since that time its men have rendered brave and heroic service. They helped to fight the battles of 1812, the Mexican war, the war of the rebellion, and the recent war with Spain. They have in times of war been an efficient aid to the Navy, and in many instances their heroism was surprising and commands our admiration. Examine the record of this service and you will find that in whatever naval combat its men were called into requisition, or in whatever conflict they took a part, the gallantry of the officers and the men, the daring and the courage of the Revenue-Cutter Service were equal to and unexcelled by the Navy itself.

In the war with Spain the Revenue-Cutter Service took an active and distinguished part. Thirteen revenue cutters, carrying 61 guns, 98 officers, and 562 men, rendered efficient aid to our Navy. In the famous battle of Manila the McCulloch was assigned to duty by Admiral Dewey, and when the victory was won, which sent a thrill of joy through every American heart and gladdened the soul of every American freeman, it was the McCulloch that carried to Hongkong the dispatches announcing to the world our national triumph, and Admiral Dewey in his dispatch to the Secretary of the Navy commends the McCulloch as a valuable auxiliary to the naval squadron.

Side by side with the naval torpedo boat Winslow the revenue cutter Hudson fought the battle of Cardenas, and the Windom, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, demolished the light-house and destroyed the rendezvous of the Spanish troops at Cienfuegos. Nor must it be overlooked that the Manning rendered such splendid aid in many engagements with the foe that the officers of the Navy officially commended the zeal and meritorious service of these revenue-cutter men.

But it is needless to multiply the instances in which the Revenue-Cutter Service helped to win the battles or attain the achievements which now has made this country a world power. The report of the committee contains the facts which show what admirable and efficient work was done by this service during the war, how this service received the praise of the officers of the Navy and of the Navy Department itself, how much is due to this Revenue-Cutter Service for aiding the naval vessels and the naval forces in accomplishing the victories which have contributed so much to make this country the greatest and most glorious on earth. [Applause.]

In time of peace the men of this service are constantly at work. When the officers of the Navy are either in foreign or domestic ports enjoying their ease and comfort, and enjoying their social life, and engaging in their social functions, the Revenue-Cutter Service are daily performing active work in the interest of the Government. Class them as you will, after all they are the coast-wise navy. It is the coast which in times of peace, as well as in war, the Revenue-Cutter Service must protect and guard and police. The Senate Committee on Commerce have well stated the status of the Revenue-Cutter Service in these words:

The military character of the Revenue-Cutter Service was officially stated by the Treasury Department in the report of the service in 1881, as follows: "The Revenue-Cutter Service, while charged by law with the performance of important civil duties, is essentially military in its character. Each vessel is provided with great guns and furnished with as full a complement of small arms for its crew as any ship of war. Its officers are required to be proficient in military drill and possess a thorough knowledge of the uses of both great and small arms.

"Its crews are required to be instructed from day to day at the great guns and in the use of small arms. Commanding officers are required, while boarding vessels arriving in ports of the United States, in case of failure or refusal of any such vessel on being hailed to come to and submit to the proper inspection by an officer of the service, to fire first across her bows as a warning, and in case of persistent refusal to resort to shot or shell to compel obedience. In the performance of this work they are likely at any time to receive injuries and to be subjected to the same dangers in time of peace as the force employed on naval vessels.

"By act of March 2, 1790, it is provided that the revenue cutters shall, whenever the President so directs, cooperate with the Navy. It will be observed that the cooperation of the two services prescribed in the act above quoted is not contingent upon a state of war or other particularly perilous conditions. On the contrary, it may take place in time of peace, and for specific purposes and when less hazard is involved to the two services than pertains to the discharge of a revenue vessel of its ordinary duties.

"But if in legal theory they are civil employees, are they so in fact? Are they less positively a part of the military force in time of war than the Army or Navy? It is true that revenue vessels are not to be ordered into action on purely military service, offensive or defensive, except the President so directs; neither are the vessels of the Navy."

It is not my purpose to dwell on the many and varied duties which the law requires of the revenue service. It aids in the protection of the revenue; it assists in the enforcement of the revenue and the maritime laws; it helps in the enforcement of quarantine regulations; it is called into requisition to see to the enforcement of the neutrality laws; it assists in carrying out the navigation laws of the Government.

For the men of this service there is no vacation, no ease, no comfort, no special social distinction, no such distinction as seems to have been accorded to the American Navy. But they are men of nautical skill, of excellent discipline, of fine intelligence, and ought to take rank with the naval service. It is unfair that they should be discriminated against. By their conduct in times of peace as well as in war they have earned the right to be placed on an equality with the Navy so far as to give them rank and the right to be placed on retired lists.

Whatever opinion I may hold as to whether there ever should have been such a thing as a retired list for either Army or Navy, the fact remains that such a list exists. So long as it does, give to the men whose bravery, and courage, and heroism is as great as that of any man who ever trod the deck of man-of-war the same rights as to rank and retirement as the law accords to the Navy now. To do less is an injustice to this splendid service. Give them the recognition which is their due, for they deserve the benefits this bill would confer.

I believe this will promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I am not one of those who fear that this bill is but the entering wedge to a place on the civil-pension list. Whenever the time comes that a demand is made to pension the men of the Revenue-Cutter Service, it will be time enough to discuss that proposition.

It is not before us now. When it comes, if it ever shall, there will be enough courage displayed by this House to meet that question properly and in the interest of the people. I shall vote for this bill as it is now framed because, in my judgment, it is just and right to the men and, above all, because I believe it will raise the standard of the service and promote its efficiency.

For what this Revenue-Cutter Service has done in times of war; for what, judging by its brilliant record, it is ready to do again should the safety of our country require or our national honor or our flag be again assailed; for what the service is doing in times of peace in effectively aiding, amid frequent danger and discomfort, in the execution and enforcement of the maritime and revenue laws; because I believe that while the Cutter Service is, after all, in a practical, though not in a legal, sense a part of the military force of this country; because I am opposed to unjust discrimination against the men of this service, whose discipline, whose training, whose proficiency in the practical use of arms entitles them to take a place side by side with the men of our American Navy, I earnestly trust that the bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to know what time is now remaining to the two sides?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour and thirteen minutes remain to the gentleman from New York, and one hour and twenty-one minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does not care to occupy any more time this evening.

Mr. MANN. I should prefer not to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I move that the committee rise, Mr. Chairman.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. OLSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I have had sent to me a memorandum in reference to certain phases of the Chinese question, prepared by Mr. Edward J. Livernash, of the California Chinese exclusion commission, for that commission and other bodies which are interested in the subject here. It is a very valuable and important contribution to that question, and I ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the papers which he presents, relating to the Chinese question, may be printed as a document. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. What is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That there be printed certain papers relating to the Chinese-exclusion act, a compilation prepared by —

Mr. TURNER. By Mr. Livernash, of the California Chinese exclusion commission. It is a very valuable paper.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the printing is ordered.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Mr. NELSON. I present a petition signed by over 600 of the most prominent firms and business men of St. Paul, Minn., together with resolutions adopted by the board of trade of that city, in favor of a reciprocal trade agreement with the Dominion of Canada. I ask that the petition, together with the resolutions, be printed in the RECORD without the names, and that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

There being no objection, the petition and resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. PAUL, MINN., March 29, 1902.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We herewith present you with a petition to Congress favoring a reciprocal agreement with Canada.

This petition, you will notice, has been signed by over 600 of our most representative firms and business men.

We inclose with the petition a duplicate copy of resolutions unanimously adopted by our board of directors December 16; also other communications and clipping bearing on the subject.

We beg your careful consideration and earnest support in securing favorable action on the part of Congress.

Yours very truly,

BENJAMIN F. BEARDSLEY,
Secretary.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

The petition which was recently sent to Congress, signed by all the leading business men of St. Paul, for commercial reciprocity with Canada, was simply a local expression of a general sentiment which prevails throughout all the States on the Canadian border from Maine to Oregon and Washington, and of a general movement to give it effect in appropriate national legislation. Much as Minnesota is interested in opening to the trade of her merchants the prosperous and progressive territory embraced in the northwestern Provinces of Canada, the New England States and northern New York are still more interested in closer commercial relations with the far more populous Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. All attempts on the part of Canada to bring about a commercial treaty with this country on a basis of mutual and equivalent tariff concessions have been frustrated by the influence of the protected interests which have been arrayed against it. And since this country, which forms the natural market for her products, has refused these opportunities to extend its Canadian markets by opening its own on terms of reciprocal concession to the Canadian producers, the Dominion government is seriously considering a policy of retaliation. There is a tariff bill now pending in the Dominion Parliament providing for discriminating duties against the manufactured products of the United States as a further step in the direction already taken by discriminating in favor of English imports.

Mr. John Charlton, who has been a leading representative of the Canadian movement for reciprocity, plainly indicates that this bill may receive the support of the Canadian government. He declares that if the United States, while possessing 63 per cent of the total import trade of Canada, continues to shut its market against Canadian products, Canada is ready to declare a war of duties. We are now selling to Canada $110,000,000, while buying from her only $45,000,000 a year. New England is already alarmed at the threatened contraction of its large business with Canada, while it is anxious to obtain the cheap raw material—the lumber, ore, and coal—which Canada is ready to furnish to its industries. A close commercial union with Great Britain would largely compensate Canada for the loss of her now restricted American trade, but the United States can find nowhere on the globe any market to replace that which she already has in Canada, and can make no reciprocity treaties with other countries which would so widen the market for her wares as in Canada.

It is for these reasons that the Boston Chamber of Commerce has asked the cooperation of all the business interests in the northern belt of American States in urging that the United States Government take the initiative in arranging a reciprocity treaty with Canada on the basis of equivalent tariff concessions on both sides. As a matter of fact, such a reciprocity treaty would be of far greater advantage to the United States than it would be to Canada. The bulk of her farm products now go to Great Britain, and will continue to go there. But she would consume a far greater amount of our manufactured goods if she were allowed to do so. Congress is pottering over treaties with France and Italy and other countries. Right on our northern border lies a country stretching from the eastern to the western ocean, divided from it by no natural barriers, inhabited by people of the same race and language, with whom reciprocal trade on terms that would facilitate the exchange of their products would be worth more to the United States than that of any other country in the world except Great Britain, whose trade is free to all the world.

OFFICE OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
St. Paul, Minn., —, —.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON and Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned, merchants and manufacturers of St. Paul, Minn., represent that a reciprocal trade agreement with the Dominion of Canada, prepared on the basis of equivalent concessions, would be of great benefit to the business interests of the United States, and they respectfully solicit your active influence to the end that such a treaty may be negotiated and ratified. [756 signatures.]

Resolutions St. Paul Chamber of Commerce. Reciprocal trade with Canada, unanimously adopted December 16, 1901.

Whereas it is essential for the maintenance and future extension of our export trade that the United States should make favorable commercial agreements with foreign countries; and

Whereas it is peculiarly desirable that the United States should cultivate the most intimate trade relations with the countries of the American continent; and

Whereas the Canadian people are relatively the best foreign customers that we have, and an impairment in our trade intercourse with them would be seriously detrimental to a great variety of our business interests: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce earnestly requests the authorities at Washington, and trust that the merchants and manufacturers of this city will associate themselves in this petition to endeavor to make, on the basis of mutual concessions, a reciprocal trade treaty with the Dominion of Canada.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to the two Senators representing the State of Minnesota in the United States Senate.

These resolutions were also indorsed by the St. Paul Jobbers' Union, St. Paul Chamber of Commerce, and Northwestern Manufacturers' Association.

ST. PAUL, MINN., March 6, 1902.

Mr. C. J. WHELLAMS,
Secretary Northwest Manufacturers' Association, City.

DEAR SIR: I desire to congratulate you upon the high character of the signers of the petition to Congress for a reciprocal agreement with Canada, to which you have been instrumental in securing their signatures. They represent the body of the business men of high standing in this community who are the most progressive and influential representatives of the commercial interests of the city and the State. It ought to carry great weight with Congress.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. WHEELOCK.

ST. PAUL FOUNDRY COMPANY,
St. Paul, Minn., March 6, 1902.

Mr. C. J. WHELLAMS,
Secretary of the Northwest Manufacturers' Association,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: It is with considerable surprise that I find on investigation of the list of names that you have succeeded in securing on the reciprocity question with Canada. On careful examination I find you have the leading and most substantial business houses of the city, and I believe it is the strongest list of any petition that was ever signed in this city. I congratulate you on securing this large list, and I think that the influence and weight will have considerable bearing toward securing the reciprocal agreement with Canada.

Yours, truly,

JOHN B. JOHNSTON,
President Northwest Manufacturers' Association.

ST. PAUL ROOFING, CORNICE, AND ORNAMENT COMPANY,
St. Paul, March 6, 1902.

Mr. C. J. WHELLAMS,
Secretary Northwest Manufacturers' Association, City.

DEAR SIR: Having before us the results of your canvassing for names in support of the petition, reciprocity with Canada, we have to say that this is one of the most, if not the most, weighty and important list of signatures ever signed to any petition in this city, and is notable on account of the lack of individual names to increase number, and for the great weight carried by the firm signatures, of practically all of the financial, commercial, and industrial interests of this city, with the single exception of the lumber manufacturers. We congratulate you on making so clear a preponderance of signatures, so clearly and forcibly demanding the enactment of legislation toward the end of reciprocal trade with our immediate neighbors on the north.

Respectfully, yours,

A. K. PRUDEN,
Chairman Mercantile and Manufacturing Company,
St. Paul Chamber of Commerce.

NORTHWESTERN INVESTMENT COMPANY (INCORPORATED),
St. Paul, Minn., March 6, 1902.

Mr. C. J. WHELLAMS,
Secretary Northwestern Manufacturers' Association,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: I have looked over with interest and with a good deal of care the names which you have succeeded in having subscribed to the petition for "a reciprocal agreement with the Dominion of Canada." As you know, I have lived here long enough to be very generally acquainted with the names and standing of the leading business men of St. Paul. I am very much impressed at the high character of the signatures to this petition and doubt whether any petition ever went out of this city with an equal number of really influential names.

You are to be most heartily congratulated upon the success which has attended your effort in having our business interests of all sorts express themselves in favor of this movement.

Very truly, yours,

THOS. COCHRAN,
President Northwestern Investment Company.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4936) granting an increase of pension to Robert L. Griffin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEITFELD introduced a bill (S. 4937) to incorporate the Columbia Heat and Power Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the purpose of improving the Mount Rainier National Park, in the State of Washington, and for the protection of the park, the construction and repair of bridges, fences, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and Mississippi for sums of money claimed under certain treaties; of the Pillager bands of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota; of the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation; of the White River Utes, Southern Utes, Uncompahgre Utes, Tabeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uintah bands of Ute Indians, known also as the Confederated bands of Ute Indians of Colorado; and of the Peoria, Kaskaskia, Wea, and Piankashaw Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for completing the improvement of Aransas Pass, Texas, from $250,000 to $500,000, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment directing the Secretary of War to prepare a list of the bridges in the harbor of Pittsburgh which are an impediment to safe and convenient navigation, the nature and extent of the modifications required in each of them, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRITCHARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,200 for the purchase of a tract of land adjoining the Cherokee Training School property in North Carolina, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,157.90 to pay Henry W. Spray for care, education, and support of Indian children at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., from July 1 to December 31, 1892, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,000 for the purpose of settling certain litigations between the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians and W. H. Thomas, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EMPLOYMENT OF MESSENGER.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided by law.

THE HAY-PAUNCEFOTE TREATY.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Senate Document No. 85, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, together with the proceedings had on the treaty known as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of February 5, 1900, be reprinted.

WILLIAM C. CARSON AND NATHANIEL R. CARSON.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to have a resolution adopted referring a case to the Court of Claims.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4008) entitled "A bill for the relief of William C. Carson and Nathaniel R. Carson," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has just been read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does that resolution come from a committee?

Mr. McCOMAS. It is a resolution in respect of a war claim, and it merely proposes to refer the claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has it been before the Committee on Claims?

Mr. McCOMAS. I understand there is such a bill in the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let the resolution be referred to that committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. HALE. Let the Secretary proceed—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was there unanimous consent to take up the oleomargarine bill immediately after the routine morning business?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was. The Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I had not intended to make any remarks upon this bill, but as the discussion has proceeded and we are requested by numerous telegrams to vote one way or the other upon the measure, I have concluded to submit as briefly as I can the reasons which will impel me to vote against the bill.

Mr. President, what is the bill? What is the purpose which it is designed to accomplish? Is it a tax bill, a commerce bill, or an attempted exercise of the police power to suppress fraud? As to the last purpose, it is admitted on all sides, I believe, that Congress has no authority to exercise the police power as a primary object to suppress fraud within the States.

The bill can not be maintained as a bill to regulate commerce, because the power of Congress is confined to the regulation of commerce between the States and with foreign countries, and the bill in its operation is designed to extend beyond the limits of that jurisdiction. It applies not merely to commerce within the States, but also, as pointed out by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] yesterday, it is to operate upon commerce confined wholly within the limits of a State.

The bill, therefore, can only be sustained, and that is conceded, I think, by those who advocate its passage, as an exercise of the taxing power, and ostensibly upon the face of the bill it is a bill for the purpose of raising revenue. Yet, Mr. President, there is not a Senator, I take it, who will cast his vote in favor of the bill solely upon the ground that it will furnish revenue needed for the support of the Government. Those votes will not be cast for the replenishment of the Treasury. Those who vote for the bill, I take it, will justify themselves in so doing upon the ground that while the measure upon its face and ostensibly purports to be an exercise of the taxing power, incidentally it will have the effect of suppressing what is claimed to be a dangerous and all-pervading fraud.

If I believed that this measure would in some degree contribute to the National Treasury and would at the same time accomplish the purpose which it is claimed it will accomplish, namely, the suppression of fraud as an incidental effect of its operation as a revenue measure, I should be inclined to cast my vote in favor of its passage. Will it have that effect?

What is the mischief which is aimed at in the provisions of the bill? It is claimed that its object is to purge and purify the American market. It is not contended that oleomargarine in and of itself is deleterious or fraudulent. Oleomargarine is admitted to be a fairly good substitute for butter. Yet most people prefer the original to the substitute. Anyone having his choice would take the genuine article of butter rather than oleomargarine.

Oleomargarine resembles butter, and butter resembles ordinarily oleomargarine. Out of this situation grows the duty of the manufacturer or dealer in oleomargarine to disclose to the purchaser the fact that it is not butter, and if he fails to make such disclosure fraud may justly be attributed to him, and it may be provided that he shall be punished by reason of the deception which he undertakes to practice.

But, as I stated, Mr. President, the fraud is not in the article of oleomargarine itself. Whether colored or uncolored it is a wholesome article of food. It serves a useful purpose. Anyone who can not obtain butter would take oleomargarine as a desirable lubricant or article of food. But if he disposes of it, concealing or misrepresenting its real character, he is properly chargeable with the commission of fraud and deception. That is the mischief which it is claimed by the advocates of the passage of this bill will be incidentally suppressed in the imposition and collection of the tax which is provided for.

Will this bill in its operation have any such effect? If I believed it would, I should be inclined to vote for the passage of the bill; but I fail to find anything in the provisions of the bill which will either approximately or remotely, directly or indirectly, tend to the suppression of the fraud, to the destruction of the mischief at which it is asserted by the advocates of the measure it is aimed.

And why will it not and can it not have that effect? The bill simply imposes a tax at the rate of 10 cents per pound upon oleomargarine colored in any shade of yellow in imitation of butter. When the manufacturer or dealer in this article has paid his tax at the rate of 10 cents per pound the bill turns him loose, so to speak, to prey upon a suffering community with absolute immunity. He can color his oleomargarine in imitation of butter. He can put it in such packages as may subserve his purpose. He can dress his agent in the guise of a countryman and send him out upon the market with a basket upon his arm containing this spurious article; and the bill turns him loose to practice his deception without limit or the fear or danger of punishment upon the unsuspecting housewife or upon the suffering community who, it is claimed, are to be protected under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. President, the fact that the payment of the tax leaves the dealer, or the manufacturer, free to practice in any manner he chooses the deception which is so decried here conclusively establishing that this measure does not intend to prevent the mischief which has been so eloquently denounced in this Chamber.

But, Mr. President, while this measure will not tend to prevent fraud, in my judgment it tends to the encouragement of a fraud and to the extension and enlargement of the very mischief which has been so denounced. Let us see. It is said that avarice is the inspiration of the fraud. The avarice is augmented to the extent in this case of 10 cents a pound for every pound of this article which is put upon the market.

If the manufacturers or dealers in this article are disposed to practice fraud at all, more than ever will they have an inducement to go out to the people who desire to purchase good butter and obtain by the practice of deception and false pretenses the highest price for this article which could be obtained for the best grades of butter put upon the market; and if they do this there is no penalty denounced. There is nothing in this bill which inhibits that fraudulent practice, but the party having paid the tax to the Government is immune to practice fraud without limit and without restriction.

Thus, Mr. President, not only does this bill fail in any degree to suppress the mischief at which it is claimed it is aimed, but it is an encouragement to such fraudulent practice, and it becomes itself a party to that crime.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Utah allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think that the increase of this tax to 10 cents a pound where it is colored and the reduction to a quarter of a cent a pound when it is uncolored will tend to stimulate production of the genuine uncolored article and to restrict the production of the colored article?

Mr. RAWLINS. I am glad the Senator has propounded that query, because I had it in mind to deal with that very question in the course of the few remarks which I wish to make. I will reach it in a moment.

There is no provision of this bill prohibitive of the fraud. It can not upon its face be made prohibitive of a fraud, because it is not competent for the Federal arm to extend its jurisdiction and exercise a police power, which belongs exclusively to the States. Therefore, not only does the bill not tend to the suppression of the mischief which it is claimed ought to be suppressed, but it is impossible for Congress to undertake, as a primary object, to deal with that mischief, because under our structure of Government it belongs to the States and not to Congress.

But, Mr. President, this bill tends to another result more mischievous than any evil which has been pointed out and decried in this Chamber. When the manufacturer is called upon to contribute to the National Treasury at the rate of 10 cents per pound for each pound of colored oleomargarine put upon the market, he is bound to meet in competition those who are his competitors now, and he is put at a disadvantage in that competition to the extent of the amount of the tax which he is thus compelled to pay and to recoup his losses. If he is inspired with the avarice which it is claimed is the inspiration to the fraud, he will not only have an inducement to practice the fraud and impose the article upon the unsuspecting public as the best grade of butter, when in reality it is not, but he will have the further inducement to degrade the quality of the article and to make that which is now wholesome unwholesome; that which is not deleterious injurious; and in that sense the tendency of this bill and its operations, if passed and put into effect, will be injurious to the public health.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. Then I understand the Senator to admit that there is great opportunity to use deleterious ingredients in the manufacture of this article?

Mr. RAWLINS. I have no doubt that in respect to this article, as in every article of similar character, to anyone so evil-minded there is an opportunity to practice a vile fraud, which ought in some way to be suppressed, and I am desirous of going as far as any Senator legitimately in the exercise of proper power to the suppression of such fraud and such practice, which tend to the injury of the public health.

Mr. President, the manufacturers and dealers in this article contribute the taxes and are then turned loose with an increased inducement, if their practice is the result of avarice, to the extent of 10 cents per pound for each pound they manufacture, to practice to a greater extent the fraud which is complained of, and still another, which is detrimental to the public health.

Now, I come to the very question which the Senator from Vermont propounded to me, and it is a pertinent one in this discussion. It is whether this legislation will tax out of existence colored oleomargarine, or this article, whatever it may be, whether it have color or not. Mr. President, the evil here is not in the article itself. Oleomargarine is not per se fraudulent. The fraud consists in the concealment or misrepresentation of him who undertakes to sell it, and his situation in the market is such that there is devolved upon that person the duty, in good morals, to disclose the character of the article which he sells, because being like butter, and people generally preferring butter, it is a fraud if when he tenders oleomargarine he does not disclose to the purchaser the fact that it is not butter.

If this legislation is designed to destroy and will have the effect of destroying oleomargarine and preventing its manufacture in the future and doing away with it, there will no longer be any subject in relation to which such fraud can be practiced. If that is the effect of this bill, I concede that it will be the suppression of fraud as an incidental effect of a measure, which, upon its face, purports to be for the purpose of replenishing the Treasury.

But, Mr. President, let us examine that question. Are we by the exercise of the taxing power of the Federal Government to destroy any article of property which, in itself, is not deleterious and is wholesome, which serves a useful purpose, which tends to the welfare of the people, because under some circumstances some evil or pernicious person may be guilty of fraud in connection with its disposal or sale? For time out of mind the suppressio veri and the expressio falsi have clustered about that useful and noble animal known as the horse. The fraud, the misrepresentation, or the concealment of the horse dealer have been well understood at all times and everywhere. But will anybody claim that the horse ought to be taxed out of existence because the horse dealer may lie? I think not.

Are we going by the passage of this legislation to establish the principle that the Federal Government will tax out of existence any useful article because there may be somebody who will commit a fraud in relation to it? That is the important question in this case, Mr. President. That is a Pandora's box. Are we to encourage—

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. RAWLINS. I yield.

Mr. PROCTOR. I believe we have a law against selling horse flesh for beef, have we not?

Mr. TELLER. A national law?

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not know of any such law. Perhaps the Senator does. But that is just in line with the suggestion I was about to make, that one vicious precedent has a train of evil consequences, the limit of which no man can foresee. If we are to tax oleomargarine, destroy its existence as a useful and wholesome article of food, a desirable lubricant, and a good substitute for butter when we can not get butter, because some person in the market place will commit a fraud in relation to it in disposing of it to the person who desires to obtain butter, we can build up the same argument for the suppression of any other article which is put upon the market. No article of apparel, no machine which serves a useful purpose, nothing which tends to promote civilization and advance the welfare in this mechanical age would be free from the interference.

Mr. President, that brings us back to the vital question in this case. Shall Congress pass laws purporting to be in the exercise of the taxing power, but which are not at all designed for the replenishment of the Treasury, which have no purpose to provide revenue needed for the support of the Government? Shall Congress pervert such power conferred for those specific ends for the purpose of destroying one useful article in order that another article may have freedom from competition in the open market? Are we to so purge and purify the market place according to the eloquent argument of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]? If so, where is the limit and what is the restriction upon our power?

Time out of mind sugar has made palatable various articles of food upon our tables, entering largely into the consumption of the people. The original source was the cane, and we looked to the cane fields of the sunny South for the saccharine which should provide for the happiness of our people. By the skill of the chemist, by the ingenuity of those desiring to produce other things new in their nature, but still serving a useful and desirable purpose, this article is now extracted from the beet. Some powerful political influence, taking this statute as an example, may next appeal to us to pass a law in order that it may have the market for the product of the cane field to the exclusion of the product of the beet field.

Next, there are a good many farmers who are engaged in the production of corn. They, perhaps, constitute a majority, and they may come here with a cloud of telegrams and petitions urging Senators and Congressmen to vote in favor of some tax which will give to the producer of corn the market for food to the exclusion of all other cereal products.

Take those things which constitute the apparel of the people. There are various sources of supply for those things which protect us in that way from the inclement weather. The influence of one becomes more potent than another, and it appeals to Congress to exercise the taxing power to encourage the industry which it is engaged in to the exclusion of every competing industry.

Mr. President, this bill confessedly is a bill to destroy a wholesome article which is a good substitute for butter, which anybody would use if he could not get butter, in order to give the market exclusively to the product of the dairy. I can not vote for such legislation.

If the bill proposed a reasonable tax upon oleomargarine, 1 or 2 cents per pound, and in such form that it would make some contribution to the national Treasury, in such a manner as to provide some revenue to supply the needs of the Government, so as to be legitimately sustained as a proper exercise of the taxing power conferred upon Congress under the Constitution, and if in arranging the details for the collection of that tax, and to prevent frauds upon this means of obtaining revenue, devices can be obtained which will enable people buying the article in the open market to identify and know whether it is butter or not butter, if you provide for a stamp tax the stamps to be in such form and to be put upon the article in such small packages that in every case when a package is put upon the market the revenue stamp will disclose that it is oleomargarine and not butter, I would readily vote for such a measure, because it would be a measure which in its primary purpose would be the raising of revenue, and it would have the incidental effect in its administration of supplementing the laws of the States and enabling them to detect any fraud if any person should attempt to commit it in the disposal of the article upon the market.

There is an amendment in the nature of a substitute for this bill which is precisely of that character, and for that substitute I shall cast my vote. That substitute will tend to suppress fraud—I mean the real fraud which is aimed at. The bill aims at an innocent and wholesome article and destroys it. The substitute aims at the fraud committed in respect to the sale of the article and will tend to suppress that fraud. Those who vote for the original measure vote to pervert the taxing power. The bill itself in that sense instead of accomplishing or tending to accomplish the suppression of fraud is itself a fraud, because under the pretense of a tax law it is in reality a discriminating law tending to destroy one industry and to build up another, and is utterly revolutionary and a perversion of the powers which were conferred upon Congress. The substitute is a legitimate exercise of the taxing power, and in its administration has the incidental effect of tending to the suppression of fraud.

How can any man desiring to accomplish the real object which in eloquent terms was depicted here, namely, the suppression of the practice of fraud in the disposal of oleomargarine, cast his ballot for the bill which tends to spread, to extend, and to make all pervading that fraud and in no sense to suppress it, and to add to it another fraud detrimental to the public health, and not vote for a measure which is legitimate in its primary purpose and in its incidental effect intending to prevent the very mischief which is so decried in this Chamber?

Mr. President, the bill is not a tax bill. It is an attempt by a false pretense to exercise power reserved to the States and belonging to them exclusively, a part of the police power, for the suppression of fraud. The bill is a fraud per se, therefore, and not a bill for the suppression of fraud. The substitute is justified for the reasons which I have pointed out.

Mr. President, no wonder Senators upon the other side are evasive and elusive when their intention in regard to this measure is inquired into. The motive of every Senator is inviolable; the motive of his action is inviolable; no one can impugn his motives. Every Senator justifies himself in what he does. But when we scrutinize the purpose in a way in which the courts will not scrutinize it we, each one for himself, have the right to determine the purpose which each has in view in proposing to vote for given legislation. We ask ourselves this question: What answer must each one for himself give?

Here is a dangerous and all-pervading fraud, which ought to be suppressed. Legislation in the States so far has been ineffective for its suppression; legislation by Congress has failed so far to accomplish that desired result. True, a legitimate exercise of the power to regulate commerce will not do it; true, we can not appeal to the exercise of the police power, which belongs exclusively to the States; true, we can not, and we do not in the nature of things, impose this tax for the replenishment of the Treasury as its primary and paramount object. We come to the question, and we, by indirection and by false pretense, do something which will meet the public clamor throughout the country to suppress fraud. Then we have got to meet that question. Our constituents smother us with telegrams and petitions to come to their relief. We justify our consciences by saying, "Yes; we have no right to do this, but we will do it." But there is one justification for that—

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose that means that Senators who oppose this bill obey their consciences, and those of us who are in favor of it palter with ours. Is that what the Senator means?

Mr. RAWLINS. Not for the life of me would I make such an imputation. I would not do it because I am as liable to be affected by such a charge as is the Senator. I do not impute that; but I say to the Senator that in arguing the law of the case we have a right to follow out every premise to its logical conclusion. That does not imply inquisition into any motive of any Senator. I disclaim any such purpose.

I say we are confronted to-day with that very question in the form in which I have put it, the logic of which is as inexorable as fate. So good a lawyer as the Senator from Wisconsin, and other Senators preeminent in that line, will not be questioned about it. They are scarce able to endure the catechism of those who see in this measure not a legitimate exercise of the taxing power.

I have confessed, so far as I am concerned, that if this bill stood upon the basis that it could be legitimately sustained as a revenue measure my vote could be induced for it, though it might not otherwise be given if the bill would have the incidental effect in its administration of suppressing fraud. That, I suppose, is the ground upon which every Senator who votes for this bill will put his vote. I can not see that it can, either remotely or approximately, directly or indirectly, tend to the accomplishment of that purpose in its present form. What is its object? This bill will probably pass; I do not know; but it ought not to pass, in my judgment. If it does pass, it will pass to the tune of the rural ditty:

"Where are you going, my pretty maid?"
"I am going a-milking, sir," she said.

It may accomplish the object so eloquently described by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]; it may restore to us the God-given privilege of enabling us to warm our feet in the morning where the cow had lain over night, and it may take some of us back to the halcyon days of frozen toes and the comforting cow pens. Whatever may be its effect in these extraneous matters, whatever else it may do, how it may affect the political destiny of any—and that ought not to be a part of our consideration—I do not know. We are always glad to gratify wishes and respond to the petitions and requests of our constituents. If our constituents were able to give this question thorough consideration and listen to the arguments pro and con, which we are able to listen to here, then they could pass a judgment upon it which would be entitled to far more respect than it is under existing circumstances. I do not see in this a revenue measure; it has no tendency to accomplish the object which these people who importune us desire to see accomplished.

I am impelled from the necessities of the case to cast my vote against the bill, and shall vote in favor of the substitute, as I have outlined.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has the floor by right. If he desires to take it, I will not proceed now. I only want to occupy a few moments, but I do not wish to interfere with the right of the Senator or that of anyone else.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator will proceed.

Mr. TELLER. I am not going to spend any considerable time on this bill. I regard this as a revenue bill, because it comes from the House of Representatives with the marks of a revenue bill. While I know that I may discuss the question in my own mind whether it is a proper revenue bill or not, I can not deny but that it will stand the test, if the question is raised in the courts, as to its being a revenue bill. So I do not care about discussing the constitutionality of this measure. I have no doubt the court will hold that this tax is legally and properly laid. The court will not inquire, and can not inquire, and it would not be possible to allow that to be done, as to what particular motive induced the Senate and the House of Representatives to enact this measure.

The avowed declaration outside of the Senate has been uniform, I think, that this is a bill repressive in its purpose. In other words, it is a bill to destroy an industry. Undoubtedly and unquestionably we may do that thing. We may put so heavy a tax upon any article as to prevent its production, and as Congress and nobody else must be the judge of that, it behoves us to consider whether or not it is a proper thing for us to do.

If oleomargarine were a deleterious article, unhealthy and pernicious, we might reach it in two ways—by putting such a tax upon it as would destroy it, or we might reach it under the general interstate-commerce power of the General Government and prohibit its use in commerce, I suppose.

One Senator tells us that this bill will destroy the colored article of oleomargarine, and another Senator tells us that it will actually increase the product. I do not see any influence in this bill to meet the great complaint which has been made so far by every Senator who supports the bill, and that is the complaint that the manufacturers and sellers of this article commit fraud by putting it upon the public as butter when it is not butter.

I sympathize with every attempt to compel the men who manufacture this article to sell it for what it is; but I know, Mr. President, and so does every other Senator here, that the power exists to compel that to be done. We all know it does not exist in the General Government. We have not any power to do it. We have the power to prevent its manufacture, or, if we so choose, to double or treble or quadruple the tax on this colored article of oleomargarine, so that none will be manufactured. The State of Colorado can compel every ounce of it that comes into that State, if the State so desires, to be sold not as butter, but for what it is—oleomargarine.

The Senator from Wisconsin told us that seven States in this Union have declared that it was impossible for them to enforce a provision of their law which compels the people who make this article to sell it for what it is. Why, Mr. President, if that is so, that is a lamentable fact; it is a disgraceful fact; but I want to challenge that statement. It is not the fact. The State may not do it, but there is ample power in the State to do it; and if the provision of law that it shall be sold for what it is is not capable of execution, it is the fault of the State.

While oleomargarine is an article that may deceive the eye, it can not at all deceive the chemist. There are tests that can be applied by every man in his own house to determine whether a given article is butter or whether it is oleomargarine. The test may be applied in every grocery store. Every man who knowingly sells oleomargarine as butter commits a fraud in the States where the law prohibits the article being sold.

Will this bill, when it becomes a law, remove the fraud that has been the subject of continual condemnation in every speech which has been made on this question? I do not believe it will. I do not believe what the Senator from Wisconsin believes that it will compel all the oleomargarine in the country to be manufactured without color. I believe it will practically add 10 cents a pound to all the oleomargarine that is manufactured; and I believe that the men who buy oleomargarine in this country will pay that 10 cents a pound additional. In other words, Mr. President, it is a tax upon consumption. If that has any virtue it is that it reduces the competition between butter and oleomargarine; and that is all there is of it. You have added to a perfectly healthy and useful article of food 10 cents a pound. The men who find themselves unable to buy high-priced butter will find that butter will go up still higher, and they will still buy higher-priced oleomargarine to put upon their tables.

Mr. President, if this vice is so great as to justify legislation of this character, the proper thing for us to do would be to put a tax of 50 cents a pound on oleomargarine, and then there would not be any of it manufactured at all.

It has been very earnestly contended that the fraud is to be destroyed. I want to repeat, Mr. President, that that is a subject as to which this Congress has no control whatever, and which it is under no obligation to consider. That is a thing of which the States in their capacity have absolute and exclusive control.

While under the Constitution this may be a perfectly legitimate law when we shall have enacted it, and the courts may sustain it, because they have no right to consider our motives; yet if oleomargarine is a fraud when it is sold as butter, this bill will be a fraud when it stands upon the statute books, because it is meant for one thing when legally it stands for another.

Mr. President, I am willing to vote at the request of the citizens of my State for the passage of any proper law that will compel the producers of this article to sell it for what it is; and I understand that we have such a law in Colorado. So far as I know, there are no complaints there. I have not received and have not heard of any complaints regarding this matter. The manufacturers may sell elsewhere large quantities of oleomargarine for butter, but I very much doubt whether they do so in my State, where we have proper police laws and where they are properly enforced.

The principle of this bill is vicious. You can, as has been said here—and I shall not elaborate upon it—destroy any industry in this country on the same pretense. In this case I do not believe you will destroy the industry.

I believe there will be just as much oleomargarine manufactured under this law as has been manufactured heretofore, but you will compel every man who buys a pound of it to pay 10 cents a pound additional to the Government when the Government does not need it, and when you have now pending between the two Houses a bill to reduce the excise taxes of this country $77,000,000 this year, and last year we took off $40,000,000. Under these circumstances nobody can contend for a single moment that we need any additional revenue. We now have more revenue standing to our credit to-day than any other nation under the sun, and no nation in the world has as much ready cash on hand as we have got. For the nine months of the present fiscal year we have got a surplus of nearly $62,000,000. Therefore we do not need this additional revenue, Mr. President. It is an attempt on our part to do by indirection what we can not do directly; to do for the people of the States what the States ought to do for themselves; and if this is half the fraud that it is claimed to be, the States will take care of it, and we need not bother ourselves with it.

Mr. President, I have on my table here to-day the second appeal that has been made to me from Colorado. I have had one appeal from the people who want to buy oleomargarine, who say it is a useful article, and who ask me not to allow this legislation to pass. This morning I got an appeal from the people who make butter. I am always glad to hear from my constituents upon these subjects, but, after all, I shall exercise my judgment upon this matter, and that is, that I ought not to vote for this bill, and I do not intend to vote for it.

Mr. SPOONER and Mr. FORAKER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is entitled to the floor. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I would not take the floor as against the Senator from Wisconsin if it were not entirely agreeable to him—

Mr. SPOONER. I am not holding the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. And if it were not for the fact that I want to speak only briefly.

I have given notice that I shall propose two amendments to this bill; and I wanted at this time, for fear I might not have time enough after the debate has passed under the five-minute rule, to explain why I have offered these amendments, the object of them, and the necessity for their adoption to make this bill satisfactory to myself.

I desire to say, however, before I come to speak of the amendments in the way I have indicated, that I have learned a great deal about oleomargarine since this debate commenced. As other Senators have announced in the progress of the debate, I was originally impressed with the idea that oleomargarine was an unwholesome product; that it was not an acceptable article of food; and, never having had occasion until now to give special attention to the subject, that impression has very largely remained with me. During the progress of this debate, however, I have learned from the investigation that has been made by the committee, the report of which is before us and which I have read, as well as from other sources, that that impression is not well founded. It must be conceded, and it is conceded by all, I believe, or at least practically by all who have participated in this debate, that oleomargarine is a wholesome article of food; that it is a good substitute for butter, and that it is now widely used in all sections of our country. This being the case, I think two provisions in this bill should be changed, or at least modified.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I interrupt the Senator from Ohio?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if, at the time of the passage of the first oleomargarine act in 1886, the sole and only argument used in favor of the enactment of that law was not that oleomargarine was an unhealthy product and injurious to the human system?

Mr. FORAKER. I am not sufficiently familiar with the discussion in connection with that legislation to be able to answer without qualification the question which the Senator from North Carolina has put to me. It is my impression, however, that he is substantially correct in making that statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, it was my privilege to participate in that debate and cast a vote on that question in another body in 1886. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that that was largely the contention, and to a very considerable extent it was conceded, I think, that the article known as oleomargarine was differently made at that time from what it is at the present time.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire for giving me the benefit of that information. What he has said, however, is in accordance with the impression I already had about it, that the article was at that time legislated against for the reason suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, in a very large part, at least. But, however that may be—

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I will suggest that owing to the restrictions and regulations required by that very law the materials used in the manufacture of oleomargarine have been very much brought up and benefited and improved since that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no doubt that also is true, for certainly it is the fact that oleomargarine, as it is now manufactured and sold in the market is a widely different and much better article of food than it was supposed to be at that time.

Mr. COCKRELL. And just as good as butter so far as purity is concerned.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Missouri says just as good as butter so far as purity is concerned. I am inclined to agree with him about that, and I am inclined to agree with him, not alone because of what has been testified to before the committee, but because of what has been put before us officially. I have before me the table that is furnished by the Director of the Census in Bulletin No. 138, in which he gives us the formulas according to which the different grades of oleomargarine—three in all that he discusses—are manufactured and put upon the market. These formulas certainly sustain all that the Senator from Missouri has stated.

The objection that I have, therefore, to what is here sought to be legislated against is what has been termed the putting of this article upon the market not as oleomargarine, but so much in the similitude of butter as to practice an imposition upon those who want to buy butter. I do not know to what extent that is true. I have no doubt whatever but that it is true to some extent; and I have not any doubt whatever but that to whatever extent it may be true, we ought to correct it if we possibly can.

I ought to say further, before speaking of these amendments, having stated that much as to the general purpose of the bill, that I have not taken the floor for the purpose of discussing the legal questions involved in this legislation or that it gives rise to. There is abundant excuse for that in the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on the one side, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] on the other—not to mention the other Senators who have so ably discussed the legal aspects of the case—have completely covered every legal proposition that has been raised by this proposed legislation. I do not think anyhow, Mr. President, that there is any serious difference of opinion between the lawyers of this Chamber, certainly not judging from that which they have spoken in our presence, as to what is the correct legal view as to each of the propositions involved. But, as I have said, as to that I do not propose to speak. I deem that unnecessary.

What I want to do, desiring to vote for this bill if I can, is to correct its provisions, first, the one found at the bottom of page 2, in the last clause of section 2 of the bill. It has been contended here that under this provision anyone is at liberty to buy oleomargarine, and, after having bought it in its natural condition, color it to suit his own fancy, provided he uses it only in his family, and only allows it to be used in connection with his family by such guests as he may have without compensation in his family. My objection to that has already been stated by others. I think they have correctly pointed out that the effect of that provision will be to subject every family table in this country to a system of espionage, to a visitation from a Government inspector to ascertain, in the first place, whether or not oleomargarine is used; in the second place, whether or not, if used, it is colored to any shade of yellow; and, in the third place, if they find that oleomargarine so colored is being used in that family, whether or not there is any guest there; and, if there be a guest there, whether or not he is a guest "without compensation" or a boarder paying for his board.

I think we ought to so amend the bill as to avoid that very disagreeable result of such legislation. I do not think anybody here wants to have, as a result of this measure, every family table in the land subjected to the visitation of a Government representative or put under the scrutiny of officials of the Government. Therefore I have given notice that I shall move, when the proper time comes for the consideration of amendments, to strike out from line 24, on page 2, the words "and guests thereof" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "table;" so that the clause will read in such a way as to allow a man who has purchased oleomargarine to put it on his family table and have it used there without regard to whether he happens to have a boarder or not, and without liability in any event to inspection and examination by a Government official. I retain the word "family," so that the clause may not be taken advantage of by hotel keepers or by cafés or others where there is a public house or where the table is a place for the public entertainment of guests. I trust that that amendment will be accepted.

The other amendment which I propose to offer is to strike out the words "ingredient or," found at the end of line 25 on page 2, and to strike out the same words where they occur on page 3. The language that I wish to amend is the following:

And any person that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family and guests thereof without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any ingredient or coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act, and subject to the provisions thereof.

By striking out the words "ingredient or" and inserting the word "artificial," as I should have stated that my amendment provides, the language would read as follows:

And any person that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family and guests thereof without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any artificial coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act, and subject to the provisions thereof.

The necessity for that is in this: From the bulletin furnished us by the Director of the Census, to which I referred a moment ago, it is shown that in each of the formulas according to which oleomargarine is made there are ingredients used that must of necessity give to it some slight shade of yellow, and I may remark in this connection that in all the cases which have gone to the Supreme Court of the United States the testimony reviewed, or the testimony that was offered and rejected, has been testimony showing, according to the finding of the Supreme Court of the United States, that the natural color of oleomargarine shows some slight shade of yellow. That has been shown, I believe, in every one of the decisions. It must of necessity occur if oleomargarine be made according to these formulas. I will not take the time to read from all of them, but only from the last one:

Formula 3.—High grade.

	Pounds.
Oleo oil.....	100
Neutral oil.....	130
Butter.....	95
Salt.....	32
Total.....	357½

In other words, 95 pounds out of a total of 357½ pounds of the product is butter itself.

According to the other formulas no butter is used, but cream and milk are used in one and milk in the other, and other ingredients which of necessity would give some slight shade of yellow. That being the case, for us to provide that no ingredient shall be used that will lend any shade of yellow whatever to the color of oleomargarine would be for us to make it impossible for oleomargarine to be made according to any acceptable or known formula now in use, and certainly would make it impossible for it to be manufactured in accordance with the most acceptable formula, that numbered 3, as given in this bulletin by the Director of the Census.

Now, unless we intend absolutely to prohibit the manufacture of oleomargarine we ought not so to provide in our bill as to bring about that result. I understand it is not claimed that the purpose of the bill is to prohibit. If that were the claim, many of us could not support it at all. But it is only to impose a tax on the doing of that thing which may lead to fraud, imposition, and deception. If that be true, if our purpose is to allow it to be made according to these acceptable formulas and sold according to its merit, then we ought not to prohibit the putting in of ingredients which are absolutely necessary to make an acceptable and wholesome product.

For that reason I shall move to amend, as I have already indicated, by striking out the words "ingredient or" and inserting the word "artificial," so that the only thing prohibited by the bill with respect to the matter of color will be the putting into oleomargarine of any artificial coloration. That, I think, ought to be prohibited. I think the manufacturers of the product ought to be allowed to use the other ingredients just as they are using them.

What answer there may be to this I do not know, but from what has been said informally I apprehend it will be urged that some oil will be found that has color in it which would impart more yellow than is now imparted by the ingredients to which I have referred. I do not know whether that is true or not, but whether it is true or not I think we ought to deal with this subject according to the nature of the product as it is disclosed to us by the testimony taken before the committee and by the formulas that have been submitted to us officially as those in accordance with which the product about which we are legislating is manufactured and put upon the market. When we deal with what we have and are acquainted with, we know what we are legislating about.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the proportion of butter?

Mr. FORAKER. Ninety-five pounds out of a total of 357½ pounds—more than 25 per cent.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think that is added as a substitute for cream or milk. I think actually butter is not used to that extent, but the ingredients that make butter are used. It is correct in that respect.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Vermont for interrupting me to make the remark he did. He doubtless overlooked the fact that I made the statement that there were three formulas given. I read only the third one, which provided for the use of butter, remarking that butter was not used in the other formulas, but that cream and milk were used in the second and milk only used in the first. I did not read all of them. I did not want to take up so much time, because I begged the indulgence of the Senator from Wisconsin that I might occupy a few moments, and I want to hurry through.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that I do not understand he is speaking by my courtesy.

Mr. FORAKER. I think, perhaps, it is due to all that these formulas, now that so much has been said about them, should be put in the RECORD in their entirety, and I will read them in order that they may be.

Formula No. 1 is known as the cheap grade. It consists of—

	Pounds.
Oleo oil.....	455
Neutral lard.....	255
Cotton-seed oil.....	315
Milk.....	255
Salt.....	120
Color.....	1½

Total..... 1,451½

Out of the total of 1,451½ pounds the Senator will observe that there are 255 pounds of milk. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] suggests that it does not state whether the milk was skimmed or not. I think, it being for the cheap grade, we might safely assume that it had been skimmed. It does not say anything about cream.

Formula No. 2 is denominated "medium high grade," and I desire to call the Senator's attention to this particularly, for I think there is more cream and milk in this formula than would be an offset to the butter in the other.

	Pounds.
Oleo oil.....	315
Neutral lard.....	500
Cream.....	280
Milk.....	280
Salt.....	120

Total..... 1,496½

Five hundred and sixty pounds out of the 1,496½ were milk and cream. So it is, as I said a while ago, that to anyone who reads these formulas it must be manifest that necessarily there must be some flavor of butter and some color of yellow. You can not escape it; and if every shade of yellow is to be inhibited and is to make the person producing it a manufacturer within the meaning of this statute and subject his product to a tax of 10 cents a pound, it simply wipes out, without any possibility of escape, the whole manufacture. I do not think anybody wants to do that. I do not. I think it is a wholesome product. I know it is largely used in our State. I know it is kept in most of our groceries. I know it is kept and sold as oleomargarine or butterine, under the various names given to the product, and I know that in most instances it is properly labeled. I know people buy it because they want that product, and use it because, the price being considered, they prefer it to butter. But with these amendments, for the reasons already given, I shall support the measure.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I desire briefly to place myself on record in favor of this bill. The measure before us for consideration is one that deeply affects the agricultural interests of the entire country, and no section, perhaps, will be more benefited by its passage than my own, Pennsylvania.

The returns of the census of June 1, 1900, show that the livestock industry of Pennsylvania has a value of $109,590,426. Of this the dairy industry, counting simply cows kept for milk of the age of 2 years and over, represents a sum of $29,141,561, and the value of neat cattle, outside of cows kept for milk, amounts to $13,921,630, making a total for cows and neat cattle in Pennsylvania of $43,063,191. The value of the production of these animals per year has not yet been computed by the Census Department; but by comparing the number of dairy cows, as given by the census of 1890, with the present census there has been a gain of 16,519 head, an increase of 1.7 per cent. The amount of butter manufactured from these animals amounts to about 90,000,000 pounds per year, and the amount of milk produced to about 440,000,000 gallons. There are at present in Pennsylvania 856 creameries manufacturing butter. In the plant of each of these there is invested an average of $3,000, which would represent an invested capital of $2,568,000.

A large number of private dairies, ranging in size from 12 to as many as 75 cows, have also been established, involving a large fixed investment of capital for stables, silos, dairy buildings, and equipment.

The income to the people of my State in a single year from butter alone amounts to between sixteen and eighteen million dollars, and the milk product, estimated at 8 cents per gallon, represents about $35,000,000 additional. This immense sum of money is a new product each year, adding this much to the actual wealth of the State annually, and has the advantage of being distributed throughout all of the farm homes of the Commonwealth, going to the support of more than 1,000,000 people who are engaged in agriculture, enabling them to maintain themselves in comparative comfort. If this industry were to be destroyed the loss to the agricultural people of the State would be a calamity, particularly because much of the material that is used in the feeding of these dairy cattle would, if the industry were destroyed, be left on the farmers' hands valueless; and if the butter output were to be supplanted by some other substance, the depreciation in the value of milch cows throughout Pennsylvania would amount to many million dollars, and would involve as well the partial or total loss of the stabling and creamery buildings that are now in use in the prosecution of this industry. A large number of our people also would be thrown out of employment.

This occupation is suited to the strength and attainments of men, women, and children, and, unlike most of the other departments of farm operations, it is continuous throughout the entire year, giving employment to the occupants of farm homes through the winter months, at a time when other farm duties are suspended. The cutting off of this industry would leave a large part of our population in comparative idleness during a considerable portion of the year. Every farmer, therefore, or owner of a cow is directly interested in whatever will affect the dairy industry injuriously, or, in other words, that will make the conditions such that the cost of producing a pound of butter will be greater than the article can be sold for in the market.

Oleomargarine can be manufactured at from 7 to 9 cents per pound, depending upon the quality and fluctuations in the price of the materials that compose it. With the present Government tax of 2 cents added, the total cost of the manufacture is from 10 to 11 cents per pound. This makes it possible for the oleomargarine manufacturer to place his product upon the market at a price below the cost price of butter. The inevitable consequence will be to drive out the butter-making industry from the country, because of its unprofitable character, which, as I have shown, would be a great annual loss to the State, and would result in the still further depopulation of the country districts by destroying an industry which is doing more to sustain agriculture in the Eastern States than any other single line of farm production.

The addition of 10 cents per pound, as proposed in this bill, will raise the cost price of oleomargarine to from 17 to 19 cents per pound, which is about the cost price of manufacturing a good article of butter. This allows these two substances to go upon the market at about the same cost of production, and the effect will be to protect the farming industry against being undersold, and consequently driven out of business by this new product.

If the oleomargarine manufacture gave employment to persons equal in number to those now engaged in the production of butter, and if the profits of the business were distributed amongst this large number of our population, there would not be the same objection to its unrestrained sale that there is under present conditions, in which a single manufacturing establishment, employing from fifteen to twenty persons, is capable of an output greater than that of a hundred thousand farmers, and the profits of their business, instead of being distributed among all of these families, would go into the pockets of one or two already rich individuals or corporations.

The protection of American industry is a well-accepted principle, at least by the political organization to which I belong, and I would be doing violence to my political convictions, as well as injury to the great farming constituency which I represent, if I did not use my utmost endeavors to secure the passage of this bill, which protects farming people in their occupation and at the same time does no injustice to any other person or business.

We have been legislating for the protection of manufacturers for many years, and this is right. It is equally proper that the General Government should protect the farming industry upon the same principle and for the same purpose, namely, the benefiting of American labor and the establishment of comfortable homes for all of our people.

There is also another reason why the oleomargarine manufacturer should be taxed by the General Government. The experience of the dairy and food commissioners of the several States, who have been endeavoring to enforce State laws for the protection of the farming interests in their States, is to the effect that instead of oleomargarine being sold for what it is, and marked so that the purchaser may have knowledge of the substance which he is buying, it is manufactured to resemble butter and is sold as and for butter. It is a fraud upon the consuming public, as well as a menace to a very important branch of agricultural industry. The imposition of a 10-cent tax, to be collected before the article is permitted to be exposed for sale, will remove in a great degree the temptation to commit this fraud, and will be to that extent in the interest of public morals.

We are not ready to substitute the oleomargarine factory for the butter industry in the State of Pennsylvania.

We are not willing that the profits of our domestic animals shall be taken away from their legitimate sources and given to a select syndicate of capitalists, in order that they may become inordinately rich.

The time has come for Congress to pay attention to the voice of the agricultural people of this country, that has come up here in unmistakable tones calling upon us to protect them against this menace to their existence.

The legislatures of 32 States, representing over 60,000,000 of the people of the United States, have legislated against this oleomargarine fraud, and we are therefore but carrying out the desire of this great constituency when we vote to place a tax of 10 cents per pound upon oleomargarine colored to resemble yellow butter.

Requests have come to me from all of the representative agricultural organizations of my State asking me to support this bill. I also have numerous letters from individual farmers of reputation and influence from all parts of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania requesting me to support this measure and to use my best efforts to secure its passage. To these requests I have given but one reply, and that is that I shall do all I possibly can to have the bill promptly considered, and that when the proper time would come I would cast my vote in its behalf. I hope, therefore, Mr. President, that the bill will pass without amendment and that it may accomplish all that the great farming interests of this country expect from its enactment into law.

Legislation along the line of the present bill provides protection for the farmer and is therefore in harmony with the principles of the Republican party.

The agriculture of the Eastern States has suffered depression for a number of years, resulting from the liberal policy our Government adopted soon after the close of the civil war in making large grants of public lands to secure the construction of our transcontinental railroads.

The farmers believed at the time that the construction of these roads was necessary to enable the Government to protect her citizens who had at that early date settled along the Pacific coast in case of war with any foreign power. The establishment of the Maximilian Government in Mexico, and the refusal of England to satisfy the Alabama claims for a time threatened trouble with both Great Britain and France, and under these circumstances the loyal farmers of the East were ready to acquiesce in these land grants, although they could but know that it would prove more or less destructive to their own interests.

Immediately upon the completion of these roads agents of the companies engaged in their construction were sent into northwestern Europe, a section inhabited by the most thrifty farmers of the world, and shiploads of emigrants from Scandinavia, northern Germany, and Denmark were brought here and were settled upon these lands, which were sold to them at from $1.25 to $2.50 per acre. The result was that within a few years the acreage devoted to the growth of cereals was so greatly increased, followed by a corresponding increase in their product, that the price went down to a point which made it impossible for the Eastern farmer to continue his production upon his high-priced lands, upon which heavy taxes had to be paid.

While this increase in the production of cereals was going on these elements were at work along other lines. The building of these railroads opened up many millions of acres of Government lands for the occupancy of capitalists, who established large stock ranches, the product of which had the same effect upon the prices of sheep, wool, and cattle that the cereal product had upon the price of grain.

In these trying circumstances the Eastern farmer was obliged to turn his attention in other directions and so in many sections the dairy was resorted to as the chief industry of the farm. But even here the Eastern farmer finds no security unless the Government will extend to him the same helping hand that is extended to other industries needing help. A by-product of the immense packing business that has been built up in the West as the result of cheap lands in some instances and Government lands being occupied by individuals in others is brought into our Eastern market, and the dairy farmer again finds himself subject to a competition that he can not successfully meet. He does not object to the competition if the article with which he must compete is sold for what it is. If it is placed upon the market without being colored so as to deceive the consumer the dairyman is content to take his chances. Hence he insists that in addition to the tax "for revenue only" of one-fourth of a cent per pound there shall be a protective tax sufficiently large to enable him to compete with the colored article when it finds its way into the market.

Products of the dairy and those of the poultry yard are the only two sources from which the farmer is able to realize cash quickly. Butter, milk, poultry, and eggs can be sold daily if desired in the markets. Crops, on the other hand, require much time before they can be marketed.

The history of all nations shows that as the agricultural people prosper so prospers the nation. No nation, however rich or powerful, can afford to neglect the tillers of the soil. Owing to our nation's rapid progress in science and industrial development conditions are constantly changing. The farmers of to-day have to meet many contingencies undreamed of by their forefathers. The vast network of railways brings them into direct competition with distant lands. New inventions lessen the demands for many things and change the current of trade. To protect the people against violent changes which would prove disastrous to our industries should be the object of our Government. Not only the mechanic, the merchant, and the manufacturer but the farmer should be protected. But how can this be done? The manufacturer can be protected by tariffs against disastrous competition of foreign pauper labor; the merchant by laws prohibiting discrimination in freight rates, giving to each an equal chance in the markets of trade and commerce, but these remedies affect the farmer only in a remote degree. But the farmer can be protected in his right to sell the products of the soil as such.

We do not deny the right of anyone to manufacture or sell healthful food products as such, but stringent laws should be enacted and the enforcement thereof placed in the representatives of the farmers themselves against all food adulterations. Perhaps the most conspicuous article in food adulteration, certainly the one of most interest to the farmers of Pennsylvania, is oleomargarine. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue reports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, that there were, in round numbers, 91,000,000 pounds of oleo manufactured in the United States, of which eleven and one-half million pounds were sold in Pennsylvania. In the manufacture of this immense amount only 1.72 per cent of the material used was butter. The rest was composed of different materials—principally animal fat and cottonseed oil—colored, and sold as butter.

Against this imposition the honest farmer and dairyman should be protected, not only by suitable laws but by the appointment of suitable officials who will without fear or favor enforce existing laws.

It may be well to remember that the farmers of the country are among our very best citizens, and there is no class that is more deserving of the considerate care of our lawmaking bodies, both State and national. Their chief organization in this country embraces about 30,000 local granges, with a membership of 1,500,000, embracing the heads of families.

For a number of years their legislative committees have been in Washington during the sessions of Congress. These committees have always been composed of intelligent, conservative gentlemen, showing that the organizations they represent are composed of men who take part in molding the sentiment of the communities to which they belong. They have always favored Government protection where protection is needed, and now that they need protection themselves it is only just that it should be given them. In the State of Pennsylvania the local granges number about 500, with a membership of fully 55,000, principally heads of families. The farmers of Pennsylvania are among the most intelligent and conservative of all the many elements of our population, and in a general way they may be said to constitute the best bulwark of our institutions.

For these reasons, representing as I do one of the greatest agricultural States in all the Union, I heartily favor this bill as it is reported from the Senate committee, and I shall cast my vote for it when it comes up for final passage.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, if any other Senator desires to speak on this bill, in view of the time I have already taken, I will yield the floor.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to speak about three minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I do not desire to debate this bill, but simply to state my position with respect to it. Some of the Senators supporting the bill have suggested that those of us who oppose it are influenced by our desire to take care of the cottonseed oil industry. I wish to say that in the entire eastern part of my State there is not grown one single stalk of cotton; in the middle section, which is a blue-grass region, the culture of cotton is a very small and rapidly diminishing industry; in many counties of the west there is little or no cotton grown, and the dairy interest in Tennessee largely preponderates over the cottonseed industry.

There are many large dairies and large Jersey cattle farms throughout the whole length of the State of Tennessee, and in the amount of capital invested and the number of people employed, I say the dairy interests are largely more important than the cottonseed oil interest.

It is not for any reason, therefore, of that sort that I oppose this bill. If I were governed by such considerations I should vote for the bill. I am opposed to it simply because I believe that it is essentially a vicious piece of legislation, that it involves a vicious principle. I believe that this bill is really what oleomargarine is alleged to be, a penal statute colored in imitation of a revenue law. I can not conscientiously vote for any such legislation, and because, and only because, I believe it involves a very bad principle; because I believe it is seeking to use the taxing power not for the purpose of raising revenue, but for the purpose of destroying one industry to help another industry, I am compelled to vote against the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I spoke unexpectedly and upon a sudden call the other day upon this bill, and I said, as to its constitutionality, about all that I care to say. I do not rise now for the purpose of entering upon any elaborate argument upon it.

I want (and that is one reason I have for asking the indulgence of the Senate) to call attention to two statements, perhaps three, which are made in the minority report, and which have been very much relied upon and very often quoted in all the speeches which have been made in opposition to the bill. One is a statement imputed to Hon. H. C. Adams, dairy and food commissioner of Wisconsin, as follows: "There is no use beating about the bush in this matter; we want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business."

It is not a matter of much consequence to us, I suppose, when we come as Senators to deal with matters of legislation, what may be said or may not be said before committees in advocacy or in opposition to proposed measures. Those of us who vote against them do so because we, for reasons which are satisfactory to us, are opposed to their passage, and those of us who favor them do so because we think they ought to pass, and not because some person who desires their passage has an ulterior purpose to accomplish by them.

Mr. Adams is a neighbor of mine. He lives in the same city in which I reside. I have known him for a great many years. He is a man of education, of fine ability and of broad views, and all the years I have known him I have not known him under any circumstances to make a statement in regard to which anyone would question his good faith or his word. This statement imputed to him he says he never made. He has stated repeatedly before the committee that he never made it, and I believe him. It is confessed that there was no stenographer present, and I believe the statement that he made this observation rests entirely upon the recollection of the chairman of the House committee.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator allow me there?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. Is not the Senator mistaken when he says that no stenographer had taken down that hearing?

Mr. SPOONER. He wrote me a letter which I have at my house in which he says, and he had so stated to me before, that at the time he submitted to the committee the observations of which it is alleged this sentence was a part there was no stenographer present.

Mr. MONEY. Of course I would not contradict a statement made by the Senator nor by his friend, in whom he reposes such confidence, but how does this matter come here reported? It was not reported from a member of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know that the matter ever was reported.

Mr. MONEY. As a matter of fact it was reported by a stenographer, and when Mr. Adams returned to the committee and said he did not say it a member said he did say it and the stenographer's notes showed that he did. Now, there may have been a mistake on the part of the stenographer, but, if the Senator will indulge me a moment, it is usual when stenographers take down these hearings that the witnesses themselves revise the stenographer's notes. That has always been the custom. There may have been an exception in this case.

Mr. SPOONER. I am only stating what Mr. Adams says to me, and I have no doubt whatever of the accuracy of his statement as to his utterance of this language. He wrote a letter to Hon. S. S. BARNEY, a member of the House from my State, under date of December 8, 1900, written at the Raleigh, in which he says:

THE RALEIGH,
Washington, D. C., December 8, 1900.

DEAR SIR: In the report of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture upon the Grout bill I am quoted as having said in my testimony before the committee, March 7, 1900: "There is no use beating about the bush in this matter. We want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business."

The statement is absolutely incorrect. I made no such declaration. I did say that the purpose of the Grout bill was to stop the coloring of oleomargarine in imitation of butter and to destroy that portion of the oleomargarine business which depended for its success upon the deception of the public.

I have never, at any time or place, thought or said that the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, when not a counterfeit of butter, should be prohibited.

Respectfully, yours,

Hon. S. S. BARNEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

H. C. ADAMS.

Mr. President, I have had a great many conversations with Mr. Adams upon the subject of oleomargarine, and the position stated in his letter to Congressman BARNEY is the position which in conversations with me he has always taken upon the subject.

It is said also that Mr. Knight, secretary of the National Dairy Union, wrote a letter to the Virginia Dairyman, dated May 18, 1900, from which an alleged extract is set forth in the minority report. I think Mr. Knight has asked for the production of that letter. I believe he has repeatedly denied before the committee that he ever wrote any such letter, and the letter has never been produced. If I am wrong about that, the Senator from Mississippi, who is more familiar with the details than I am, can correct me.

Mr. MONEY. I can only say about it that the report of the House committee contains a quotation; and if the word of Mr. Knight is good against the honor of the minority who drew up that report and who inserted a falsehood, then it can stand that way. But I certainly must believe that an honorable committee of the other House or of this House would not insert in a report a quotation from a letter with its signature when it was an utter forgery, to the detriment of a gentleman who is here interested in business for his employers.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not impute any such purpose to any member of the committee.

Mr. MONEY. It is either one or the other. There is a conflict.

Mr. SPOONER. But the letter was not given in evidence. No letter has ever been produced, as I understand it, and printed, of this kind signed by Mr. Knight. He demanded the production of the letter, stating that he had never written any such letter. That demand is in several of the hearings, and he tells me that the letter never has been produced.

Mr. MONEY. I for one never heard it contradicted. I heard him ask for the production of the letter.

Mr. SPOONER. So far as the statement imputed here to Governor Hoard is concerned, I take this as fairly representing his position. He is a man of great ability. He has been governor of Wisconsin. He has devoted a great many years to the interests of the dairymen and thoroughly understands this subject. He is fair-minded about this legislation. He has done as much in one way and another to improve the methods of dairying among the farmers of the United States as any man in it. His statement was as follows:

The hoped-for effect of the legislation asked of Congress is not to destroy the oleomargarine industry, but to force it over onto its own ground; to compel it to be made in its own guise and color. Is there anything unjust or unreasonable about this?

With a tax of 10 cents a pound on the counterfeit substitute, we believe the temptation for unjust profits, deceptive sale, dishonorable and dangerous conspiring against law, and fraudulent competition with an honest industry will be greatly modified.

I have had many conversations with Governor Hoard as to his attitude upon this subject. I have never heard him express any opinion different from that which he gave in this statement before the committee.

I only call attention to these things because it is fair to these two gentlemen who live in my State that their version should be presented to the Senate.

Mr. MONEY. Right on the point just passed, if the Senator will allow me, he seeks the truth of this business. The statement was printed in the hearings of 1901. In the hearings of 1902 before the House committee January 13, on page 33, you will find that Mr. SCOTT asked this question of Governor Hoard:

I object just as much as you do to the sale of one product for another product. I was simply asking whether this bill would be demanded if, after its passage, just as much oleomargarine would be manufactured and put on the market as is now manufactured and sold.

That is, if the bill was passed making it white.

Mr. HOARD. In that case, sir, I would come before Congress and demand a still higher rate.

That is just what Mr. Hoard said in one place. Then it goes on:

Mr. HAUGEN. I understood you to say that as a representative of the dairy union you do not advocate this bill for the purpose of stamping out one industry for the benefit of another.

Mr. HOARD. We come here for the purpose of asking that fraud be legislated out of existence.

He had just said if they made as much of it white he would come to Congress and ask for a higher tax.

The CHAIRMAN. When Mr. Adams made the statement that he did make, did he represent the agricultural interests of the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. HOARD. He is the dairy and food commissioner of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. Does he represent the State of Wisconsin when he says he wishes the oleomargarine manufacturers stamped out of business by this law?

This is the stenographer's report. Here is the chairman quoting him:

His language is this: "There is no use beating about the bush in this matter; we want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business."

That is the end of the quotation.

Whom did he speak for?

Mr. HOARD. I do not think it is fair to ask me in regard to that when Mr. Adams arose in the committee and said that was not the phraseology or meaning of his utterance.

That was in the hearing before the House committee.

The CHAIRMAN. He made the statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Undoubtedly he made it.

Now, that was inserted here by the minority of the committee. It was a question, it seems, between the memory of the witness and the memory of the committee, and they were so well satisfied that they put it in the report, and as Mr. Adams had discovered a certain interest, I will say, because he found it was hurting this bill to make any such declaration, I am inclined to take the word of the committee. I have not any personal acquaintance with him and I do not intend to reflect upon anybody.

Mr. SPOONER. It would be very easy for Mr. Adams to be right and very easy for the gentlemen to whom the Senator refers to be entirely sincere. He undoubtedly did speak about taxing the business out of existence. He says as to that, he did not refer to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine as such, but did refer to taxing out of existence the counterfeit. But I leave that to be determined upon the probabilities and upon the statements.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, there was no question of fraud in the statement of Mr. Adams. He said nothing about fraud or stamping out fraud. I will read it again as printed from the stenographer's notes, which the witness was permitted to correct:

There is no beating about the bush in this matter; we want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business.

Not the fraud, but the manufacturers. When Mr. Hoard says that Mr. Adams had denied that statement, said it was misunderstood, immediately the chairman and Mr. WILLIAMS, the senior Democratic member of the committee, said he did make it, and they were so confirmed in their opinion that they published it in their report. I do not believe they would have published it in their report if they had believed that it ought not to be there. It is a matter of veracity, at least.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not charged that. Mr. Adams does not charge that.

Mr. MONEY. Of course he makes no charge against anybody. He tries to exculpate himself, and he was not in the attitude of charging people.

Mr. SPOONER. I have heard him make a great many statements on the subject, and he states in the letter his attitude, which he has occupied in conversation with me on the subject. When the Senator says there was no question of fraud, he is certainly mistaken, because there has been a question of fraud all the time. The whole foundation and substance of the agitation for this bill has been the fraud put upon the consumers and upon the dairymen through the sale of oleomargarine colored in the similitude of butter. There have been two phases of this business, as there are now. One is to deal with the product appearing to be what it is, and the other is to deal with the product appearing to be something other than it really is.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, we are not talking about the general question of fraud. I understood the Senator to make a speech upon the ground that he wanted to protect the public from a fraud.

Mr. SPOONER. That is one ground.

Mr. MONEY. That is the way I understood him all the way through, and so I understood others. We are not speaking of that; we are talking about the utterance of this witness, and I am speaking now about the particular part of it which he denied, and that is down here stated and affirmed by the chairman and another member of the committee. There is no mention of fraud in it. I am only speaking now about the correctness of the report, and not upon the question as to whether there is fraud or not.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator say there is no question of fraud in it?

Mr. MONEY. In this remark. We are not talking about fraud.

Mr. SPOONER. In that remark we have to take all he said about fraud in order to get at the matter.

But I leave that, Mr. President. Now, this is not a new departure. There has been, as I said the other day, and as everyone knows, on the statute books since 1886 a tax of 2 cents a pound on oleomargarine with a considerable number of penal and regulatory provisions. The proposition here is to reduce the tax on oleomargarine proper, but to increase the tax on oleomargarine colored as butter. It is idle to spend time in discussing the question upon the evidence whether the present law has been effective to protect the consumers from fraud. It can not be denied that it has been ineffective for that purpose, and the evidence of it is absolutely overwhelming. I referred to one item of evidence the other day. I do not intend to repeat what I then said, but I venture to call again attention to the fact that 32 States of this Union with over 50,000,000 of people have passed laws prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine colored yellow in the similitude of butter, and yet within a single year in violation of the statute there were sold in those States, as shown by the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 62,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine colored in the similitude of butter.

The present law has been, I think, although it has brought very considerable revenue to the Government, really an aid in the perpetration of this fraud upon the consumer, because, under the decision in the Leisy case and the case of Bowman v. The Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, it has been generally understood in the States that the police laws were powerless to reach this product imported into the State from another State until the original package had been broken, and when the original package had been broken obviously it has been almost impossible to prevent retail dealers from selling this thing as butter, and for the price of butter, which they knew was not butter.

There has not been as much fraud on the part of the manufacturers, although there has been some. A year or so ago a man was arrested in Chicago—I have his name in the papers here somewhere—who for two years or over had been engaged in manufacturing oleomargarine without paying any license and without paying 2 cents a pound and selling it colored in the similitude of butter. He was arrested, convicted, and fined $10,000, based upon the number of pounds of oleomargarine which in an illicit way he had manufactured and sold, as nearly as they could get at it.

The evidence shows—almost every health officer, almost every detective, every food commissioner, from Ohio, from Wisconsin, from Pennsylvania, from New York (and some of those men dealt with a thousand cases in which prosecutions were made)—that in almost every instance it was found that the oleomargarine was sold for butter and at the price of butter. I do not intend, Mr. President, to spend any time in going over the evidence except to say that it is absolutely overwhelming and irresistible.

Now, what shall we do? It is proposed to reduce the tax on oleomargarine by this bill, when manufactured and put upon the market for what it is, from 2 cents a pound to one-quarter of a cent a pound. That is a considerable reduction. It is a large concession to the legitimate product. It is proposed alternatively to levy upon the product, when colored in the similitude of butter, a tax of 10 cents a pound.

Does any Senator really seriously mean to contend that the levy of 2 cents a pound upon oleomargarine in the existing law was unconstitutional? The same argument was made as I have stated against its constitutionality in 1886 in this Chamber that is made against it now. It was argued then, as it is argued now, that it is a prostitution of the taxing power of the Government; that we have no power under the Constitution to levy taxes except with the object of obtaining revenue. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] made as fine a presentation of the argument from that standpoint as I think it possible to do, and a distinguished Senator from Texas, an honorable and able predecessor of the Senator who so ably and brilliantly represents that State in this Chamber now, who spoke yesterday [Mr. BAILEY], made a lawyer-like and, from that standpoint, an exhaustive argument against the constitutionality of that tax.

If there had been no question of fraud in that product, I venture to say that there would have been no proposition to levy a tax upon the product. Some very able lawyers and very good men—men who have a conscience for the law; men who are not willing, at the behest of constituents or yielding to the clamor of any class of people, to forget their obligations to the Constitution—advocated the passage of the existing law and discussed fully the arguments which to-day are made here and which then were made here against the constitutionality of the tax. One of them was Senator Edmunds, concededly a great lawyer as he was a great Senator. I sat where I am standing now and listened to his argument. I have it here and intended to read some sentences from it, but will not.

Another Senator who made an elaborate argument in favor of the constitutionality of the law from the standpoint not simply of the Constitution, but also from the standpoint of conscience, was the great Senator from New York (Mr. EVARTS) whose reputation as a constitutional lawyer was not confined to the United States, but was international. Those Senators found no difficulty whatever, not paltering with conscience, either—none of us do that—in finding justification in the Constitution for this tax of 2 cents a pound. We really do not disagree much on propositions, except that our friends on the other side—and they are sincere about it—practically contend that there is no power to levy a tax under the taxing clause of the Constitution unless the chief or main object is revenue, and that where revenue is not needed to pay the debts of the United States, to provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare, such a tax, while binding in the forum of law, is dishonored in the forum of conscience.

As I said the other day, Mr. President, and I repeat it now, I have never been willing to concede that the power of taxation by the Government is limited solely, or mainly, to the raising of revenue.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question, solely that I may get his view of it, not for the purpose of entering into the discussion at all?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. Suppose at the time the bill which is the law now on the statute book was under discussion in this Chamber, when it was discussed by the very learned Senators then as it is now being discussed by the very learned Senator from Wisconsin, had specified in its title and in its body that the purpose of the bill was to prevent fraud in the manufacture of oleomargarine and to regulate it for that purpose—suppose it specified that as the purpose—I want to ask the Senator whether he thinks that in the forum of law that would have been upheld by any court?

Mr. SPOONER. I am not prepared to say that it would not have been.

Mr. BACON. I wanted to get the Senator's view of it, if I could.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not prepared to say it would not have been. The courts could see that one object of it was to raise revenue.

Mr. BACON. But, if the Senator will pardon me, I am speaking of a case where the bill itself specified that that was the only purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, well, no Congress would pass any such bill as that.

Mr. BACON. If it only specified—

Mr. SPOONER. That would be nonsense.

Mr. BACON. If it only specified that purpose, with due respect to the Senator, it would not be nonsense to say that that was the exclusive purpose. It might be that the Senator would differ from me, but it would scarcely be nonsense.

Mr. SPOONER. No legislature, no Congress would pass a bill imposing a tax and declare on the face of it that it did not expect to raise any tax from it.

Mr. BACON. It might.

Mr. SPOONER. It might?

Mr. BACON. It might put the tax sufficiently high to be prohibitory. Now, I will put it that way, in order to relieve it from the disagreeable position of being nonsensical.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say the Senator was nonsensical. I said—

Mr. BACON. No; but that the proposition would be nonsensical.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; if put in a law.

Mr. BACON. I will put it this way to the Senator: Suppose that, instead of imposing a tax of 2 cents, the bill had provided for a tax of 100 cents, and had specified in the title and in the body of the bill that the purpose was to prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine and to regulate its manufacture for that purpose. That is the proposition, because in that case there would have been no possibility of revenue. It would have been so recognized necessarily that the purpose avowed was the exclusive purpose, to wit, to prevent fraud and to regulate the sale for that purpose. I want to ask the Senator, as I said, not for the purpose of entering into the discussion, because it is getting late, but in such a bill as that, specifying the rate of tax and that purpose, does the Senator think there would have been in the forum of law any court which would have declared that a constitutional act?

Mr. SPOONER. Well, Mr. President, that is an abstract question. I think a very strong argument could be made in favor of it. But I can not conceive of the possibility of any Congress passing such a bill or of any such proposition being brought before a court. If it were, I am not at all certain that a court would declare it unconstitutional.

Mr. BACON. The Senator can very readily see that a bill of that kind might be introduced and become a law for the purpose of destroying an industry in the same way that the 10 per cent tax was levied upon the circulation of State bank bills for the avowed purpose—and the purpose recognized and vindicated by the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States—so that it is possible that for the purpose of destroying the manufacture of any article Congress might undertake to impose a tax which would effect that end.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from Georgia think that if the act of Congress imposing a tax—was it 10 or 8 per cent?

Mr. BACON. On State bank bills?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Ten per cent and—

Mr. SPOONER. Ten per cent. Does the Senator from Georgia think that if it had been declared in that act that it was the sole purpose of Congress thereby to extinguish State-bank circulation the Supreme Court of the United States would decide it unconstitutional?

Mr. BACON. Most decidedly not; because the Supreme Court decided that that was the purpose, and it could not have decided that any more certainly if it had been avowed than they did decide it as a conclusion drawn from its terms. But the reason why it would not have been unconstitutional, Mr. President, if it had been so avowed, is that the purpose to extinguish was not unconstitutional; but in this case that is the very point of the question which I am submitting to the learned and honorable Senator. In this case the question is, If that is the purpose, and the sole purpose, to extinguish this manufacture, would it be unconstitutional? That is the very point that I want to bring the Senator to. In the case of the tax on the State-bank bills it was not an unconstitutional purpose, because the purpose was to maintain the national circulation.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but Congress had the power to do that directly.

Mr. BACON. Of course; or indirectly, either.

Mr. SPOONER. By prohibition; but, instead of that, Congress did it indirectly, through employing the power of taxation—

Mr. BACON. What it had a right to do directly.

Mr. SPOONER. What it had a right to do directly.

Mr. BACON. That brings us to the very point to which I want to direct the attention of the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. It will take all my time—

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon. The only thing I wanted to say was that this could not be done constitutionally directly, and consequently it can not be done constitutionally indirectly.

Mr. SPOONER. That begs the question. I think Congress has the power to select, subject only to the limitations in the Constitution, the objects of taxation. I think Congress has the power to select those objects with reference not alone to revenue, but to the general welfare. I think Congress has the power under the Constitution, and has exercised it often, to choose an object of taxation from which it desires that little revenue shall be raised, solely because in the general public interest, in the opinion of Congress, the manufacture or business taxed ought to be discouraged. Congress is free, and the Senator will not deny that, to choose for taxation such objects as it pleases.

Mr. BACON. I can not interrupt the Senator, and so he must not challenge me.

Mr. SPOONER. That statement can not be challenged. The Supreme Court has said that very distinctly in the License Cases (5 Wallace). The court said:

It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress can not tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject and may be exercised at discretion. But it reaches only existing subjects. Congress can not authorize a trade or a business within a State in order to tax it.

Where Congress has the power to levy a tax upon an article it has the discretion to fix the amount of the tax. No one can dispute that. If it may levy a tax of 2 cents a pound on an article, it may levy a tax of 20 cents a pound on it, and nowhere will anyone be heard to say, in challenge of its constitutionality in a court, either that its object was not revenue, that revenue was not needed, or that the tax was destructive.

Congress may levy one tax upon a product in one form and a different rate of tax upon the same product in another form, guided in that discrimination by the judgment of Congress as to "the general welfare." Those words can not be stricken out of the taxing clause of the Constitution, Mr. President, as practically it is sought to do. Congress may impose a tax or an excise upon opium to be used in the preparation of medicine or to be used as a medicine, and Congress may impose an entirely different tax, and has done it, upon opium manufactured in the United States for smoking purposes. The tax on opium used for a legitimate purpose was comparatively light and, I think, imposed not for revenue, but to give Congress the power to regulate it in order to prevent harm in its use.

But, Mr. President, when Congress came to levy a tax upon opium manufactured in the United States, not imported—if manufactured in Georgia or manufactured in Wisconsin for smoking purposes—it levied a tax of $10 a pound. Does anyone suppose that was for revenue? Of course it would bring revenue into the Treasury if any opium were manufactured for smoking purposes and discovered; but that was not its object. Its object was to subvert the general interest; the purpose was—and many such taxes can be found, inexplicable upon any other theory, some of which have been in operation for fifty years, and some of which will continue in operation doubtless so long as the Government continues—to levy a tax not for revenue, but to promote the general welfare.

What power had Congress to protect the health of the people of Georgia or of Wisconsin against destruction by this awful habit of opium smoking? Why not have left that entirely to the States? The States undoubtedly have that power; but it was thought wise to have some uniform rule, searching in its character, extending into every State, which would bring under the supervision of the Federal officials this injurious manufacture. So we have a tax at one rate for a legitimate purpose, and for another purpose, harmful, we have a tax at another rate.

Consider again the license tax cases. Does the Senator suppose that Congress had simply revenue in mind when they levied a tax on lottery tickets, first, declaring that there should be a license fee; and, afterwards, that that might operate to permit, against the laws of the States, the sale of lottery tickets in the States, changing it to a special tax? Was it for revenue?

The State of New York prohibited the sale of lottery tickets. It was a crime there to sell them. There was also a special tax on liquor dealers. Both laws came to the Supreme Court of the United States, and Mr. Evarts, representing the defendants, argued that the object was not revenue, but that it was an attempt upon the part of the Congress of the United States to reap some profit from crime in the States. The court held that it left the States entirely free to prohibit the trade in lottery tickets; that it left the States entirely free to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors, or to prohibit them; that all the statute meant was that if sales were made in the States of liquor or lottery tickets, the Government of the United States would not prosecute or take account of it so long as the tax was paid. Arguing that question, the court seems to intimate that the effect of such a tax, whether that was its purpose or not, might legitimately be the extinguishment of the traffic, for they say here:

There is nothing hostile or contradictory, therefore, in the acts of Congress to the legislation of the States. What the latter prohibits, the former—if the business is found existing notwithstanding the prohibition—discourages by taxation. The two lines of legislation proceed in the same direction, and tend to the same result. It would be a judicial anomaly, as singular as indefensible, if we should hold a violation of the laws of the State to be a justification for the violation of the laws of the Union.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me now.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I was just going to say—

Mr. SPOONER. Well, I yield.

Mr. BACON. Of course we all recognize that law as being applicable to articles which are vicious or unwholesome or unhealthy, or to practices where the agencies of the Government, like the mails, are being used for immoral purposes.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am too old foggyish to be able to see that there is no vice in fraud; that it is only a man's stomach which is to be protected; and the Supreme Court of the United States, if you will take the Plumley case and put alongside of it the Schollenberger case, has held as to this very manufacture two things: one as to it if it is offered for what it is—in its relation to commerce between the States—and another if it is offered for what it is not.

In the Plumley case the statute of Massachusetts prohibited the sale, not of oleomargarine which disclosed its own nature, not of oleomargarine which could be identified as such—that was excepted—but of oleomargarine, or the custody of it for sale, wherever it came from, if manufactured in imitation of yellow butter produced from pure unadulterated milk or cream. The court held that the act of Massachusetts was a valid act. Later the Pennsylvania statute, which prohibited the possession for sale of oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, came before the Supreme Court of the United States. The oleomargarine had been brought in, I think, from the State of Rhode Island. What did the court hold about it? The court held that a statute which attempted to prevent the transportation of oleomargarine from State to State in any form was beyond the power of the State. Why? Because they took judicial notice of the fact that oleomargarine was a healthful product, and they said no State can be permitted, in the exercise of its police power, to say that a healthful product shall not enter into commerce between the States.

That was a necessary decision; nobody could question it, because, as I said the other day, if the States were permitted to say what should or should not be transported from State to State the regulatory power of Congress over interstate commerce would be gone. Did that decision conflict in any way with the decision in the Plumley case? Not at all. The court held that while a State could not prevent, in the exercise of its police power, the transportation from another State into its boundaries of oleomargarine in its natural color so that it could be identified for what it was, where it was colored in the similitude of butter a State had the power, as protecting the consumers from fraud, to prevent its sale within that State, even though it came from another State. So that in this very case, as to this very product, the Supreme Court of the United States, by these two decisions—and in the Schollenberger case, in order to emphasize the distinction, they italicize the words "manufactured in imitation of yellow butter," etc.—decided that one, the article sold for what it is, is a legitimate article of commerce; that no State can prevent its transportation from another State into its boundaries, or its sale after transportation, because the police power of the State can not be used in order to destroy interstate commerce in a healthful article.

On the other hand, they held that where the same article is colored to cheat the eye as well as the sense of smell and taste, to be an easy imposition upon those who want butter, it is in the power—not being a legitimate article of interstate commerce—of the State, exercising its police jurisdiction, to arrest it and absolutely prohibit it. And so upon that alternative basis, dealing first with the product that is a genuine product, and alternatively with it as a fraud, Mr. President, as Mr. Justice Harlan says it is; and he says it is colored to be a fraud, and I believe it to be—dealing with it in the alternative way, this bill says, substantially, "If you manufacture it so that those who buy it will know what they are buying, a tax of one-quarter of 1 cent a pound is put upon it. If you choose to attempt to evade this tax by making a counterfeit of it, so that it resembles an article which is not taxed by law, and therefore may be sold simply because of its color, without paying the one-fourth of 1 cent a pound, or if you color it—for it comes to that also—so as to be able to perpetrate a fraud upon the consumers, you shall pay 10 cents a pound upon it."

If there is anything unconstitutional about that, Mr. President, I do not see it. I repeat to-day what I said the other day, that a business which comes before Congress with the statement that its life depends upon being permitted to violate the laws of 32 States with comparative impunity, and to unrestrainedly put upon the market an article which looks and tastes and smells like something which it is not, is not much entitled to consideration.

Does the bill interfere or invade in any way the rights of the States? Of course, a State must not be permitted to say what article subject to Federal taxation can be taxed in a State. Does this invade in any way the sovereignty of a State? Does it do so any more than in the case of the Federal liquor tax? The Congress taxes liquor made in Wisconsin. The State of Wisconsin has the power, the Supreme Court say, to prohibit its manufacture within its boundaries. Of course, in that event there would be no tax to be collected from it. So as to oleomargarine. The States, under this law, may prohibit its manufacture colored in the similitude of butter; but if they permit its manufacture colored in the similitude of butter they can not exempt it from the tax imposed by Congress.

The provision in the House bill which the committee have struck out, was intended—I will not say by the man who introduced it, for I do not know who introduced it—to interject into this bill, if it should become a law, a constitutional question upon the basis that it left the States free to authorize or permit its manufacture and sale without tax when colored in the similitude of butter. Of course, if that were its object—and I have some very strong evidence that it was so regarded by those who are fighting this bill—the whole tax here would become invalid the moment a State exercised that power and permitted oleomargarine to be manufactured exempt from the tax imposed by Congress, for the rule of uniformity would thereby be broken; and evidently Congress can not levy a tax and permit any State to make that State an exception to its operation.

I want further to say, Mr. President, that this bill does not in any way shackle a State. It is a concession to the States, as has been generally understood, because up to this time, I believe, it has been generally regarded, that the original-package doctrine has been held to be applicable to this product when it is imported into the States, and that the States have no power, therefore, to regulate it or to interfere with it until the original package is broken. I am not at all certain that that is good law, but it has been so regarded. But under the provisions of this bill that can not be again contended, because, whether necessarily or unnecessarily, this bill applies to oleomargarine the provisions similar to the Wilson law.

I do not know how Senators propose to get away from these two decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, differentiating from the standpoint of legitimacy and fraud the uncolored oleomargarine and the butter-colored oleomargarine, holding that one, the genuine article, no State can exclude; holding that the other, the illegitimate article, because easily put upon the market for butter, a State has the power to exclude altogether as a fraud.

Mr. President, one word about the substitute bills. I think either substitute—the one proposed by my friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] or the bill proposed by the minority of the committee—if adopted would perpetuate the very evil which, in part, this bill is intended to remedy, and one thing that makes me suspicious about it is that it is entirely satisfactory to the manufacturers of oleomargarine. Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes. One thing is certain. No man can successfully contend, in my judgment, that it would protect the consumer, the people who patronize the hotels, the boarding houses, the restaurants, and similar places.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. In one moment I will yield the floor.

Mr. CULBERSON. I merely wish to ask a question of the Senator from Wisconsin, and it is this: He says the substitutes, the one introduced by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] and the one introduced by myself, are entirely satisfactory to the oleomargarine people. I call his attention to the fact that the law officers of the Government, disinterested and impartial, express satisfaction with the same bill, and say that it will reduce the so-called fraud to a minimum and that all the revenue of the Government will be faithfully collected.

Mr. SPOONER. They have been very efficient in collecting revenue for the Government, but remarkably inefficient in enforcing the penal provisions of the law.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks it is the business of these Federal officers to enforce any penal provisions?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes. If there are sales in violation of the act of Congress I should suppose it was their duty.

Mr. TELLER. How were they violating the act of Congress if they paid the tax?

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose a man sold without a license or sold without putting on the stamps?

Mr. TELLER. I never before heard of any complaint of that.

Mr. SPOONER. All I have seen from any officer of the Government is the opinion of Mr. Gage. Mr. Gage is a great financier, a man of great ability, and I think he made a magnificent record as Secretary of the Treasury; a credit to the country and an honor to his State. I would accept his opinion upon almost any other subject in the world more quickly than I would upon the proposition which did not come in detail to his knowledge as to whether the substitute would or would not protect the consumer. You provide that it shall be put up in 1 and 2 pound bricks and thereby by law you make it look more like butter; by law you put it in the form of butter, and this scheme of branding in the article itself "oleomargarine" as a protection to the consumer against fraud is to me, with all respect to those who advocate it, simply laughable. Such a brand is easily taken off, and the fact that it had ever been there never could be suspected or detected. This is all I care to say.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] stated that the oleomargarine people are satisfied with the substitute. I wish to say to him that they have not had the privilege of writing it, nor have they been consulted about it. I myself have refused to talk with any of them. I stated at the beginning that I cared nothing for the interest of these people who are trying to make money by taxing others, or for any interest that is trying to make money out of this or any other bill. I am talking for the consumer.

In the few minutes left I wish to settle the question of veracity between Mr. Adams and the minority of the Committee on Agriculture. I sent for Mr. WADSWORTH, the distinguished chairman of the committee, and he says that Mr. Adams made the statement that is reported by them, that it happened that the stenographer was not there that day, and therefore each member of the committee took it down because it was a very bold assertion. Ex-Governor Hoard, in his testimony, says Mr. Adams rose in the committee and said he did not say it. Mr. Adams never reappeared before the committee at all at any time either to contradict that or anything else; but he did say in the Senate committee some time afterwards that they misunderstood him. When Governor Hoard was going over this statement of Mr. Adams, he said that Mr. Adams meant to be understood as saying "fraudulent," and he was reminded by the chairman and Mr. WILLIAMS that he had not said anything about the word "fraudulent."

Mr. President, I acquit Senators of any intention in their motives to vote differently from what they think; I accredit them with designs to protect the country from fraud; but I do not believe there would be any effort here to protect anybody from fraud unless there was an interest behind it which expected to make money out of it. If the men who are lobbying for this bill and who are its original proponents did not expect to make money out of it by destroying a competitor, there would be no intense anxiety here to protect anybody from any fraud.

The Senator alluded to a lobby being here. I have seen only one man about this Capitol opposed to the pending bill, and he is the attorney of the Live Stock Association, who has a right to be here in the interest of his clients. Mr. President, the people who want this legislation are those who expect to make money by suppressing an industry; and, whatever intention may be declared here, we have the declaration of the interested parties, and they tell us, in every instance quoted by myself and by other speakers on this side of the Chamber, that that intention, to use the language of one, is to eliminate this industry from the list of industries.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that Mr. Knight defied anybody to produce the letter he wrote, and he said he did not write the letter. That letter is to-day in the possession of Mr. Bailey, of Kansas, lately a member of Congress, and it could have been produced at any moment if any gentleman felt desirous of seeing it. But in the very last hour of the debate, when my distinguished friend the Senator from Wisconsin is on the floor, he enters this general denial for Mr. Knight, with no time to produce the letter. The letter is in the possession of Mr. Bailey and can be seen by Mr. Knight or the Senator or any friend, if they desire.

Mr. SPOONER. Did not Mr. Knight enter a denial before the committee?

Mr. MONEY. Yes; but nobody believed him, because the statement was made that the letter could be produced at any time. Mr. Knight was not permitted to enter the room of the Committee on Agriculture of the House at all, because of the attack he made upon the chairman in an attempt to defeat him for reelection by letters written to his constituents; and what was the result? I have just received this dispatch:

Representative WADSWORTH opposed additional taxation, but advocated honest legislation on oleomargarine. His agricultural constituents indorsed him by a larger vote of confidence than before.

That shows how Mr. Knight's letters were accredited in the district of the gentleman from New York, chairman of the committee in the House, a man whose interest in cows and in butter and in land and in farming is larger than that of any other member of Congress in either House. And his honest position is in opposition to this bill, for he is just as much in favor of protecting the country from fraud as is the Senator from Wisconsin or the majority of the committee, or any other man.

We have here a substitute bill offered by the minority which will more effectually prevent fraud than the bill offered by the majority of the committee, and I decline, with my associates, to be put in the category of those who are attempting to protect fraud or impose deceit upon the public. We are just as earnest in our efforts to prevent fraud as any men in the Senate, and we claim the right to do it by our own bill, which will do it without crushing an industry that is lawful and suppressing an article of commerce, declared so by the courts, an article which chemists and scientists say is digestible and nourishing.

The Senator from Wisconsin continually referred to the analysis of one doctor made one year, and that several years ago, and declined to take the table in which the estimate of that scientist appeared, the average of which proves that oleomargarine is more digestible than butter. The table shows it not for one year, but for many years, as the result of experiments made by that scientist through several years as against that one time, and all the others are for several years, low at first, and gradually increasing in digestibility.

There is nothing in this bill to command the support of a man who has convictions that one industry should not be taxed for the benefit of another. So far as the opponents of this bill are concerned, we feel that we have done our duty to the country. We have interposed with all the energy we have, by every means possible to defeat this bill. The country has been showered with printed petitions sent from the Dairymen's Union all over the country, and Senators have been bombarded with telegrams by the thousand. A sort of bullragging has gone on to press men to vote for the bill. I say this because some have told me that they were against the bill, but they have been overwhelmed by telegrams sent by some one here to be repeated to the Senator, and he is compelled to vote for it, and there are others in the same fix, I know.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator will have the fairness to say that we have also been deluged by stereotyped postal cards, telegrams, and petitions on the other side of the question.

Mr. MONEY. I would have said it if I had known it, but I did not know it to be so.

Mr. HARRIS. I state it.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator states it, I accept his statement; and then we are both and all in the condition that we have been bullragged or threatened with the votes of constituents. I have received such, I know, and I have replied to them that I was not trying to serve the interest of any one class, but that I was for the people and for all, against any class, and as far as my personal political fortunes went that I did not ask their votes, if they did not want to give them to me; that I did not want any conscript or hired men in my camp; that they must be volunteers or none.

Now, of course each Senator must settle it with his conscience; but I know there are going to be a good many wry faces on the other side of the Chamber when they swallow this dose; there is a distaste for this measure. It is very little consolation, however, to the people who are interested, not in asking for a tax for their benefit, but in asking to be let alone, that they may pursue their industry uninterfered with and untaxed for the benefit of other people.

In the case which has been so often quoted, and I am sorry I can not find it, the court says it is unconstitutional to levy a tax for any but a public purpose, and the courts in hundreds of cases have decided that a public purpose is not the newspaper or common acceptance of the word "public," but governmental, and no man can say this bill was introduced for a governmental purpose. It was introduced simply as the friends and originators of it have declared, that a competitor might be extinguished; that butter might be protected, in addition to the 6 cents protection it enjoys under the tariff law, from a home competition of a lawful industry. As has been said by the chief of all the friends of this bill, if this measure shall not prove to be sufficient as repressive taxation, to use his own language, he will be here next winter with something that will do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 3 o'clock has arrived. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I believe I have the consent of the committee to ask that the amendment which I suggested be first acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask that action first be taken on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MONEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MONEY. Is a motion to recommit in order now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to recommit is in order at any time.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I move that this bill be recommitted to the committee. In making this motion, I do it for the purpose of having the bill perfected. It is evident that there are many gentlemen upon the floor of the Senate who are undetermined in their own minds as to the proper course to be taken in voting upon this bill, especially when it is not perfected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order—

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the bill be recommitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the bill be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. HANSBROUGH and Mr. MONEY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" on this motion and I should vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is absent to-day; but by arrangement the pair has been transferred to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], which, I understand, relieves me and allows me to vote as well as the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK], who is paired with the Senator from Indiana. I make this announcement as covering all votes. I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON (when Mr. DOLLIVER's name was called). My colleague is necessarily absent from the Chamber to-day. On this question he is paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (when Mr. ELKINS's name was called). My colleague is absent on account of business. If he were here, he would vote to recommit the bill.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. The pair has been transferred to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which permits the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] and me to vote.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. An arrangement has been made whereby that Senator will stand paired on all votes on this measure with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], thus allowing the Senator from Idaho and me to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on the motion to recommit.

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEFEW] to the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea" on the motion to recommit.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but by an arrangement the pair has been transferred to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and I have exchanged pairs, and the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will stand paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. QUAY's name was called). My colleague is unavoidably absent. Were he present, he would vote "nay," and upon all other questions concerning this bill he would vote with the friends of the bill.

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea" on this motion, which leaves me at liberty to vote because I will vote the same way. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent on account of an affliction in his family. If he were present he would vote "yea" upon this motion, and would vote "nay" on the passage of this bill.

Mr. CLAY. I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON] to the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask what was the statement made by the Senator from Georgia in relation to my colleague?

Mr. CLAY. I desire to state that I was informed by the Senator from Washington that the senior Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea" if he were present, and therefore I made the transfer.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Aldrich,	Clay,	McLaurin, Miss.	Simmons,
Bacon,	Culberson,	McLaurin, S. C.	Stewart,

So the motion to recommit was not agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the amendment to the amendment shall be first considered. I think that would be the proper course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment without any vote upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; then I ask that the amendment as proposed to be amended by me be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the modified amendment of April 1 be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following in lieu of section 4:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of this act "butter" shall be understood to mean an article of food as defined in "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886; that "adulterated butter" shall be understood to mean a grade of butter produced by mixing, reworking, reurning in milk or cream, refining, or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of melted or unmelted butter, in which any acid, alkali, chemical, or any substance whatever is introduced or used for the purpose or with the effect of deodorizing or removing therefrom rancidity, and any butter with which there is mixed any substance foreign to butter as herein recognized or understood, with intent or effect of cheapening in cost the product in any way, either through cheaper or inferior ingredients, or with intent or effect of causing the absorption of abnormal quantities of water, milk, or cream: Provided, That in case of the addition of animal fats or vegetable oils the product shall be known and treated as oleomargarine, as defined in the aforesaid act approved August 2, 1886.

That "process butter" or "renovated butter" shall be understood to mean a grade of butter produced by mixing, reworking, reurning in milk or cream, refining, or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of melted or unmelted butter, and in which no acid, alkali, nor chemical, nor any substance whatever has been used for the purpose or intent of deodorizing or removing rancidity therefrom, and to which no substance or substances foreign to pure butter has been added with intent or effect of cheapening cost or increasing weight of same.

That special taxes are imposed as follows:

Manufacturers of process or renovated butter and of adulterated butter shall pay $900 per year, the payment of which shall cover the tax upon the manufacture of both articles. Every person who engages in the production of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter shall be considered to be a manufacturer thereof.

Dealers in adulterated butter shall pay $48 per year. Every person who sells adulterated butter shall be regarded as a dealer in adulterated butter. And sections 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, and 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, so far as applicable, made to extend to and include and apply to the special taxes imposed by this section and to the person upon whom they are imposed.

That every person who carries on the business of a manufacturer of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter without having paid the special tax therefor, as required by law, shall, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be fined not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars; and every person who carries on the business of a dealer in adulterated butter without having paid the special tax therefor, as required by law, shall, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be fined not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars for each offense.

That every manufacturer of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter shall file with the collector of internal revenue of the district in which his manufactory is located such notices, inventories, and bonds, shall keep such books and render such returns of material and products, shall put up such signs and affix such number of his factory, and conduct his business under such surveillance of officers and agents as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation require. But the bond required of such manufacturer shall be with sureties satisfactory to the collector of internal revenue, and in a penal sum of not less than $500; and the sum of said bond may be increased from time to time and additional sureties required at the discretion of the collector or under instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

That all adulterated butter shall be packed by the manufacturer thereof in firkins, tubs, or other wooden packages not before used for that purpose, each containing not less than 10 pounds, and marked, stamped, and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and all sales made by manufacturers of adulterated butter shall be in original stamped packages.

Dealers in adulterated butter must sell only original or from original stamped packages, and when such original stamped packages are broken the adulterated butter sold from same shall be placed in suitable wooden or paper packages, which shall be marked and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe. Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any adulterated butter in any other form than in new wooden or paper packages as above described, or who packs in any package any adulterated butter in any manner contrary to law, or who falsely brands any package or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for each offense not more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not more than two years.

That every manufacturer of adulterated butter shall securely affix, by pasting, on each package containing adulterated butter manufactured by him a label on which shall be printed, besides the number of the manufactory and the district and State in which it is situated, these words: "Notice.—That the manufacturer of the adulterated butter herein contained has complied with all the requirements of law. Every person is cautioned not to use either this package again or the stamp thereon, nor to remove the contents of this package without destroying said stamp, under the penalty provided by law in such cases." Every manufacturer of adulterated butter who neglects to affix such label to any package containing adulterated butter made by him, or sold or offered for sale for or by him, and every person who removes any such label so affixed from any such package shall be fined $50 for each package in respect to which such offense is committed.

That upon adulterated butter, when manufactured or sold or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof, and any fractional part of a pound shall be taxed as a pound, and that upon process or renovated butter, when manufactured or sold or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof, and any fractional part of a pound shall be taxed as a pound. The tax to be levied by this section shall be represented by coupon stamps, and the provisions of existing laws governing engraving, issuing, sale, accountability, effacement, and destruction of stamps relating to tobacco and snuff, as far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to the stamps provided by this section.

That the provisions of sections 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21 of "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, shall apply to manufacturers of "adulterated butter" to an extent necessary to enforce the marking, branding, identification, and regulation of the exportation and importation of adulterated butter.

All parts of an act providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, approved August 30, 1890, and of an act to provide for the inspection of live cattle, hogs, and the carcasses and products thereof which are the subjects of interstate commerce, approved March 3, 1891, and of amendment thereto approved March 2, 1895, which are applicable to the subjects and purposes described in this section shall apply to process or renovated butter. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to cause a rigid sanitary inspection to be made, at such times as he may deem proper or necessary, of all factories and storehouses where process or renovated butter is manufactured, packed, or prepared for market, and the products thereof and materials going into the manufacture of the same for exportation or transmission from one State to another. All process butter and the packages containing the same shall be marked with the words "Process butter" by marks, label, or brands, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and no process or renovated butter shall be shipped or transported from its place of manufacture into any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, until it has been marked as provided in this section.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall make all needful regulations for carrying this section into effect, and shall cause to be ascertained and reported from time to time the quantity and quality of process or renovated butter manufactured, and the character and the condition of the material from which it is made; and he shall also have power to ascertain whether or not materials used in the manufacture of said process or renovated butter are deleterious to health or unwholesome in the finished product, and in case such deleterious or unwholesome materials are found to be used in product intended for exportation or shipment into other States he shall have power to confiscate the same. Any person, firm, or corporation violating any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500 or by imprisonment not less than one month nor more than six months, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the committee agree to this amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to know if, under the rules of the Senate, it is not necessary first to dispose of the amendments reported by the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not necessarily.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas said that by an arrangement with the committee he offered this amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will now be subject to amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; it may be amended.

Mr. MONEY. I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not desire to appear persistent, but I submit it as a parliamentary inquiry if, under the rules of the Senate, the committee amendments were not to be first disposed of? I understood the Chair to reply that the Senator from Kansas stated that he offered it under an arrangement with the committee. Of course no arrangement between the committee and the Senator from Kansas could supersede the rules of the Senate, and I am free to say that if, under the rules of the Senate, the committee amendments must first be disposed of, I should like to have that course pursued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no such rule.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ordinarily unanimous consent is asked that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration, and that is generally granted. It was not done in this case, and the bill is open to amendment from the floor by any Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. I remember that on one occasion I submitted an amendment and I was told to wait until the committee amendments had been disposed of. I am simply trying to learn the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In that case the committee amendments were considered by unanimous consent obtained in the first place when the bill was brought before the Senate. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas being the most important one, it is thought advisable that it should be first considered, and it is necessary to pursue this course in order to complete the bill in logical order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi intend to offer his amendment as a substitute for the amendment just read?

Mr. MONEY. That is what I said—an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an additional section, to be known as section 4, the following:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of this act certain substances, fats, oils, fluids, extracts, mixtures, compounds, and products, including such mixtures and compounds with butter and made in imitation or semblance of butter, shall be designated as "renovated butter," namely, butter which has been melted and its rancidity removed or masked, and which has been regranulated, colored, and prepared in imitation or semblance of genuine butter; or any article or compound produced by taking original packing stock butter, or other butter, or both, and melting the same so that the butter fat can be drawn off or extracted, and then mixing the said butter fat with skimmed milk, or milk, or cream, or other milk products, and rechurning or reworking the said mixture; or in any article or compound produced by mixing or compounding with or adding to natural milk or cream, packing stock or other butter and animal fats, or animal or vegetable oil, or any oleaginous substance not produced from milk or cream; and any article or compound produced by any similar or other process than commonly known as "boiled," or "process," or "ladled," or "tub," or "renovated" butter, with or without common salt, with or without coloring matter, and made to resemble genuine butter. And that all the provisions of this act and the act to which this is an amendment shall apply to the manufacturers and wholesale and retail dealers in renovated butter as defined in this section, and the tax on renovated butter shall be one-fourth of 1 cent a pound, and it shall be subject to all the provisions of existing law applicable to oleomargarine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say a word, as I am quite sure one feature of this amendment can not be understood by Senators unless they have examined it carefully, and I think it possibly may have escaped the notice of the author himself.

While the amendment is designed to reach factories engaged in the business of producing the butter which is denominated here either adulterated or renovated butter, under its terms it will reach every farmhouse and will subject every farmhouse in the United States to the espionage of Federal officers to see whether or not the provisions of the act containing this amendment are being violated. I will call the attention of the Senate to the features of it which will demonstrate that fact very clearly. The time being limited I only call attention very briefly to the second paragraph on page 2 of the proposed amendment, in which process or renovated butter is defined.

That "process butter" or "renovated butter" shall be understood to mean a grade of butter produced by mixing, reworking, rechurning in milk or cream, refining, or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of melted or unmelted butter, and in which—

There is no other substance. That is the sole thing. Any housewife—

Mr. SPOONER. That is not all of it.

Mr. BACON. That is all that is necessary to be done. The balance of it is simply exclusive, containing nothing else. If the Senator will examine it he will see that it says—and in which no acid, alkali, nor chemical, nor any substance whatever has been used for the purpose or intent of deodorizing or removing rancidity therefrom, and to which no substance or substances foreign to pure butter has been added with intent or effect of cheapening cost or increasing weight of same.

That is exclusive.

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will allow me? I have only five minutes.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator refer me to the place where he reads?

Mr. COCKRELL. Beginning at line 14.

Mr. BACON. I say that all that part to which the Senator alluded, and which I have just read, is exclusive and not necessary to making it renovated butter. If a housewife shall take two different pats of butter and churn them in milk in order to make it uniform, that will violate the law. I say it would subject every farmhouse in the United States to espionage, to see whether or not the law is being violated, and the penalty is this: If a housewife takes two pats of butter and churns them in milk in order to make them uniform, and that is all that is necessary to be done, she has to pay a license of $600 a year, and is subject to a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $5,000 if she does it without paying that license of $600.

I presume that is not the purpose of the Senator from Kansas, but that is what this amendment does, and there is no possibility of escape from the proposition.

Senators will remark the fact that the language is alternative. It is not that she shall do it for the purpose of producing a uniform and purified and improved product; but if she does it for the purpose simply of producing a uniform product, a butter in which there is no suggestion of imperfection or rancidity, if she does it for the purpose of making it a uniform product and improving it, under the provisions of this bill she will be liable to a tax of $600 a year and a penalty of not less than $1,000 or more than $5,000 in case she should do that simple act without having taken out a license.

There are many other things that will follow, but I have not the time to call the attention of the Senate to them and I do not think it is necessary, but certainly this proposed amendment unless amended will work great hardship and subject people to very great penalties without any possible justification.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am willing to admit that the objection which the Senator from Georgia suggests might possibly by a somewhat strained construction apply, but I think the matter can be met by the addition of a couple of words on page 3, line 3, where it says:

Every person who engages in the production of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter shall be considered to be a manufacturer thereof.

By inserting the word "for sale," I think it would then meet the objection.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator mean to say that a housewife can not make butter for sale?

Mr. HARRIS. I say she ought not to make butter in the manner indicated here for sale.

Mr. BACON. That she ought not to take two parts of butter and churn them in milk and sell them, although perfectly sound butter, and that every farmhouse must be subjected to espionage, must be subject to the visits of Federal officers, to see whether or not a proceeding so simple and innocent is being engaged in?

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me, I suggest that it can be cured in another way, by inserting in line 3, page 3, before the word "production" the words "business of" and changing "production" to "producing," so as to read:

Every person who engages in the business of producing process or renovated butter or adulterated butter shall be considered to be a manufacturer thereof.

Mr. BACON. That would not perfect it. It is a part of the business of the farm.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. I say that would be a part of the business of the housewife who makes 2 pounds of butter. It is just as much her business as the business of the factory that makes a million pounds of the butter.

Mr. FORAKER. I submit there would not be that indefiniteness about the effect of this language if it were put in the way I propose. I think under every fair construction, at least, it would apply only to those people who engage in it as a business in some degree or other. I will suggest that it be made to read:

Every person who engages in the business of producing process or renovated butter, or adulterated butter.

Mr. HARRIS. By adding the words "for sale" after the word "producing" would make it absolutely certain. It would then read:

Every person who engages in the business of producing for sale process or renovated butter, etc.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I do not agree with amendments to this bill just offered, either the one by the Senator from Kansas or the Senator from Ohio. They do not relieve the objections to the bill, but make it the more repellent to me. These amendments just offered, if carried out, would bring trouble and mortification to the housewives of our country. If carried into effect, under the operations of this bill, there would be a horde of inspectors hanging around farmhouses, village boarding houses, as well as homes in cities, seeking to implicate and punish good women for making butter and cheese as they had been taught, and as they preferred to make it. Because it concerns the women of our country and their domestic business we should be the more circumspect and deal with it more delicately.

Mr. President, this bill, as stated by the chairman of the Agricultural and Forestry Committee and who has it in charge, is sui generis. There is none like it, in this—it proposes to tax a necessary food product, not luxury, for purposes of revenue—not whisky or tobacco or beer, but that which is of daily use and which is a prime necessity and found every day on every breakfast table in the land. Hence it may well be said that such a tax is sui generis, for there are none like it. But why this novel, unequal, and unjust tax of products purely local within the State and unknown to interstate-commerce law?

We are told it is for revenue. Have we not an overflowing Treasury, and have we not just repealed the war tax and stopped the collection of millions of dollars because we do not need it? So, to say it is done for revenue is false pretense, and under the circumstances makes it farcical.

It is regarded by the best legal authorities as an unconstitutional tax unless it is levied and collected as revenue. Hence we claim it to be an unconstitutional tax, as the revenue is not wanted, and would be so declared if the real facts could be reached by the courts. To say the least, as it is, it strains the timbers of the Constitution.

It is as unjust as it is unequal. It not only takes the money out of one man's pocket and puts it in the pocket of another man who did not earn it, but in practical operation will destroy one business to build up another. Is this democratic? Does not our political faith favor equal rights to all and special privileges to none? Mr. President, is not this one of the baldest propositions ever made in the Congress of the United States, of "class legislation"? Such as will protect one man at the expense of another, and that man not a foreign importer, but the sufferer a native-born citizen of the United States. Has it not been the creed and faith for more than half a century of the Democratic party to oppose such class legislation, as is shown by the practical operation of a protective tariff?

I can understand why a Republican who voted for the high protective tariff bills which have found place on our statutes and have been preying like vampires on the consumers in this country for more than half a century can vote for this bill with its invidious distinctions, but I fail to see the political consistency in an antiprotection Democrat who votes for this bill. I try to be governed by principle in such matters, and I can not go back on a lifetime of antitariff protection and vote to build up the interest of one man by destroying that of his neighbor. This proposes to live on what it destroys.

This, I believe, is the first time in the history of national legislation that a serious effort has been made to virtually tax out of its business relations, aye, out of existence, any useful products of our soil, thus operating not only to destroy one business but to build up another out of its ruins.

It has been the political faith in which I have been reared, and one that I have observed as a Democrat all along the line of my political life, to oppose a high protective tariff, and I beg to say in my judgment there has never been in our national legislation so bold and direct an attempt to build up or destroy domestic interests by high protective tariff, or tax—for tax and tariff are synonymous—as is shown in this bill, for it is unequal, giving an advantage to one citizen over another, its tendency and practical result being to enrich one and impoverish the other. This is an inequality the Government ought not to approve.

One of the curses in these distempered times is the encroachment, as in this instance, of the General Government on the local governments, by Congress overriding State legislation, enlarging the powers of the one and minimizing the powers of the other.

The interstate-commerce clause in the Constitution seems to have opened up with a broader view of late years than ever before, growing out of railroad transportation and extended commercial interest. For this reason we should throw double guards around local rights and keep them as the Constitution intended they should be kept. This encroachment by the general on local government is restless and aggressive.

We see it in the vast and varied increase in internal-revenue laws; we see it in the unity of the currency of the country, making a single standard; we see it in the banking laws, being one vast financial system exclusively under Federal laws, and in touch with each other; we see it in our enlarged and still expanding pension roll. It is recognized in thousands of pension cases, where the pensioner is amply able to take care of himself, but prefers relying on the Government as a means of support—thus losing sight of local interests, and looking alone to the General Government as the nourishing and protecting power of the citizen; we see it by the large increase of our Army, and in substituting regulars for volunteers, and seeking to make it a "standing army."

Farm productions, Mr. President, enter largely into the make-up of this wholesome, healthful, and cheap diet known as oleomargarine. But my time, as I have only five minutes under the present arrangement, forbids my entering that open field of discussion. Money should be raised by taxation only for public purposes. If levied and collected for any other purpose, the tax is, and in law ought to be, void.

This bill is a kind of "Paul Pry." It will have inspectors—in other words detectives—appointed by Federal authority to pry into the household matters of every housekeeper in the land who happens to have a boarder. Thus these detectives or Paul Pry's will keep an eye on the table, and the housekeeper can not exercise her ideas of propriety and economy.

It will increase the number of that most pestiferous class of so-called officeholders, known as inspectors, but really detectives, to the annoyance of the domestic household. And pray where will it stop? This opens the gate to a general "food law" by the General Government, with its regulations and penalties, destroying the independence and privacy and sanctity of homes. The States, counties, cities, and towns can and ought to manage such matters and keep the long, meddlesome, and greedy fingers of the United States Government out of the lard cans and butter dishes of the domestic housewife. Such matters should be left to local self-government.

Mr. President, of all the people in the world that I would love to gratify by complying with their requests, and gratify myself by so doing, are those who cultivate the soil, raise their own cattle, make their own butter, and use it on their hospitable boards, as well as sell the surplus as a source of income. It is among such in the blue-grass country of Tennessee that I was born, reared, and educated, and one of the chief pleasures of my now advanced life is the identification of my social relations, my political and personal affiliations, as well as whatever of pecuniary interest I have, with that noble people.

It would please me beyond measure to respond favorably to petitions from them requesting me to vote for this bill; but I shall stand by the faith that has thus far guided my politics, because I believe it right to do so. I will follow the old landmarks of Democracy that favor equal rights to all, and special privileges to none—and favor no tax upon the citizen, save for public purposes.

Mr. President, this patriotic agricultural people of Tennessee, when they know the facts, will have no censure for the exercise of an honest judgment by their Representatives, although they may differ with them. The agriculturists—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think the best answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is that the housewife does not re churn and refine her butter. After she has worked the dasher or the rocker for an hour, and the butter has come, she will not touch it again until the cream is ripe and ready to sour. But to remove any possible objection I move, on page 3, line 4, of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] to insert after the word "butter," the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], namely, the words "as a business."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 4, of the amendment submitted by Mr. HARRIS, after the word "butter," it is proposed to insert "as a business."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, it seems to me that after a bill has been carefully considered by another branch of Congress and sent here containing a provision upon the subject of renovated or process butter the committee of the Senate might well have allowed it to stand. Of course I know they had some good lawyer who advised them to take out that provision, and I suspect I know who advised them to do it, because if this bill had passed with section 4 as it came from the House of Representatives, it would not be worth the paper on which it is written before any court in the land. The only possible way that any court could have sustained the law would have been to say that Congress would have passed the balance of the bill with that fourth section left out. But the Senate is now giving evidence that Congress would not have passed the bill without some provision on the subject of renovated or process butter.

The fourth section is a pure and simple regulation without your usual subterfuge of a tax. I believe the purpose of the bill makes it all unconstitutional, and I wanted to see it passed with a provision in it that would make it unconstitutional on its face. I am free to say that it was for that reason that I did not mention it in the speech which I had the honor to make to the Senate. I wanted to see if, when the vote was taken, the Senate would not vote down the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and, by defeating its amendment, thus retain this provision. It is now apparent, however, that somebody has advised them that this provision would not stand judicial scrutiny, and in order to escape the Constitution they have assailed the housewives who make butter for sale.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. BACON. Let the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 4, of the amendment, after the word "butter," it is proposed to insert "as a business."

Mr. HARRIS. The insertion should be after the word "butter" where it last occurs in the line. The word is used twice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4 on page 3 of the amendment of Mr. HARRIS, after the word "butter" where it occurs the second time, it is proposed to insert "as a business;" so as to read:

Every person who engages in the production of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter as a business shall be considered to be a manufacturer thereof.

Mr. BACON. Upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] I desire to say simply a word. That amendment does not in any manner cure the difficulty. The housewife who makes 2 pounds of butter a day, and with it provides her little household necessities, is just as much in the business of making that butter as is the renovated or process butter factory that makes several million pounds of it a year; and if the making of 2 pounds of butter a day, carried on regularly, constitutes a business, it will still be subject to the same trouble that I suggested in the beginning, that it will not only subject that particular farmhouse to espionage to see whether or not as a business 2 pounds of butter are being made a day, but it will justify the visit of these officials to every farmhouse in the United States to see whether or not its occupants are engaged in that business.

Mr. President, if Senators, with that proposition before them, are willing to vote for the amendment, I desire that they shall go upon record, and I therefore call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. BACON. No, sir; on the amendment itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. I desire to say by way of explanation merely—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be read.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is quite a lengthy amendment, and it has been read. I think I can explain it in a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to say that this amendment, in the first place, is an exact copy of what is known as the Wadsworth substitute offered in the House of Representatives. In the next place, it defines renovated butter; and, in order to give Congress jurisdiction of the subject, it levies a tax upon renovated butter of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound. In the third place, it is an exact copy of that part of the House bill which came to us on the subject of renovated butter. I move it, as I have stated, as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a substitute for the amendment of Mr. HARRIS the following:

That sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That special tax on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine shall be imposed as follows:

"Manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $600 per annum. Every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer thereof.

"Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $480 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be deemed a wholesale dealer therein; but a manufacturer of oleomargarine who has given the required bond and paid the required special tax, and who sells oleomargarine of his own production only at the place of its manufacture in the original packages, to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall not be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer on account of such sales.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $48 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities not greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be regarded as a retail dealer therein. And sections 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, and 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, so far as applicable, made to extend to and include and apply to the special taxes imposed by this section and to the persons upon whom they are imposed: Provided, That in case any manufacturer of oleomargarine commences business subsequent to the 30th day of June in any year, the special tax shall be reckoned from the 1st day of July in that year, and shall be $500."

"SEC. 6. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word 'Oleomargarine' in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word 'Oleomargarine' printed on the outside thereof in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put up singly by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers and marked, stamped, and branded with the word 'Oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word 'Oleomargarine,' with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed, and shall sell only from the original crates or boxes in which they receive the pound or 2 pound prints, bricks, rolls, or lumps.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act, or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as butter, any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package, or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than $100 nor more than $500 and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years.

"SEC. 6a. Renovated butter is butter produced from inferior, cheap, old, sour, unmerchantable, or rancid butters by washing, mixing with milk, cream, or other milk product, rechurning, recoloring, reworking, melting, chilling, or by any or all of such processes combined, or by any other process. That upon renovated butter which shall be manufactured, made, and sold or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer or maker thereof, and any fractional part of a pound shall be taxed as a pound. The tax levied by this section shall be represented by coupon stamps, and the provisions of existing laws governing the engraving, issue, sale, accountability, effacement, and destruction of stamps relating to tobacco and snuff, as far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to stamps provided for by this section.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to cause a rigid sanitary inspection to be made from time to time, and at such times as he may deem necessary, of all factories and storehouses where butter is renovated; and all butter renovated at such places shall be carefully inspected in the same manner and to the same extent and purpose that meat products are now inspected. The quantity and quality of butter renovated shall be reported monthly. All renovated butter shall be designated as such by marks, brands, and labels, and the words 'Renovated butter' shall be printed on all packages thereof, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and shall be sold only as renovated butter. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500 and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

"The Secretary of Agriculture shall make all needful sanitary and other rules and regulations for carrying this section into effect. And no renovated butter shall be shipped or transported from one State to another, or to foreign countries, unless inspected as provided in this section."

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, with a view of offering this as a substitute to the bill as it may be perfected, I withdraw it for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] as amended.

Mr. BACON. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]; but on this amendment I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I do. I therefore desire to record my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Montana (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]; but, as explained by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], it has been arranged that my pair should be transferred to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], so that I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. I have just received a telegram from him saying that he would vote "yea" on this amendment. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. Under the arrangement that has been made, however, my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts has been transferred to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who was paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. In the absence of the Senator from Maine, however, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. QUAY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. QUAY] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], which I shall observe, and refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I understand, however, that a transfer of pairs has been arranged, so that my colleague stands paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—44.

Aldrich,	Dillingham,	Harris,	Mitchell,
Allison,	Dryden,	Hawley,	Nelson,

So the amendment of Mr. HARRIS was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the adoption of that amendment makes a slight verbal amendment necessary. On page 1 of the bill, at the end of line 3, after the word "imitation," the words "process, renovated, or adulterated" should be added, as the amendment just adopted covers all those different varieties of butter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, after the word "imitation," at the end of line 3, it is proposed to insert "process, renovated, or adulterated."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. The same amendment is necessary on page 4, line 21, after the word "oleomargarine," to insert "process, renovated, or adulterated butter."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 21, after the word "oleomargarine," it is proposed to insert "process, renovated, or adulterated butter."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is another slight amendment reported by the committee. In line 12, page 3, strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or." The reason for that is this: The section there recapitulates section 8 of the act of 1886, and it quotes it incorrectly. It is "or" in the statute, and by a mistake in another body the word "and" was put in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. One moment before that is done. Is it intended, I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont, that oleomargarine shall be taxed before it is sold?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not understand the question of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. CULLOM. We can not hear the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. As it is now, the bill provides:

That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption and use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax.

Does the Senator by putting in the disjunctive mean to say that the oleomargarine shall be taxed when manufactured and before it is sold?

Mr. PROCTOR. It should be "for consumption or use."

Mr. MONEY. No; I am speaking of the amendment which the Senator offered, which was to strike out "and" and insert "or."

Mr. PROCTOR. I tried to explain it. It is not an amendment to the law. It is merely leaving the law as it now is in the act of 1886. That is a recapitulation of section 8 of the act.

Mr. MONEY. I beg pardon of the Senator. I was looking at the wrong "and." That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, in line 5, page 3, I move to insert:

Wholesale dealers in adulterated butter shall pay a tax of $480.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that an amendment to the amendment which has been agreed to?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. COCKRELL. To the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment being now made by the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. "And retail dealers in adulterated butter shall pay $48 per annum." That is what they pay there now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri, by consent, offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

Wholesale dealers in adulterated butter shall pay a tax of $480, and retail dealers in adulterated butter shall pay a tax of $48 per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to offer at the present time an amendment to the amendment adopted, which was offered by the Senator from Kansas. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to butter produced in the home of a private family.

Mr. VEST. I should like to understand the effect of the amendment. Does that apply to adulterated butter?

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the amendment be read in connection with the text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly it does apply to the whole amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BATE. I ask that it be read again.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I wish to amend the amendment by inserting the words "for use."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina modifies his amendment as will be stated.

Mr. PRITCHARD. There is some objection to those words going in. Leave them out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw it?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws his amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he believes the tax would be uniform when the law taxes everybody except those who make the product at home for sale?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I know. He attempted to evade it by providing that the tax should not apply to butter made in this way for home consumption. Now, he leaves the amendment to stand, that it shall not apply to the sale of butter at the farm home, we will say, for that is the purport.

Mr. SPOONER. He has withdrawn the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. No; he only withdraws the suggested amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. BAILEY. The entire amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. PRITCHARD. It is not my purpose to withdraw the entire amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. That is what I understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was mistaken, then.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I simply desire to have the amendment voted upon as was originally submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to butter produced in the home of a private family.

Mr. BAILEY. If this were State legislation, clearly under the recent decision of the Supreme Court on the Illinois anti-trust law this exemption would render it invalid. While we have no prohibition against Congress denying to any class of citizens the equal protection of its laws, we have another valuable provision which is that in matters of taxation the tax shall be uniform. And just exactly how Congress can tax butter when made by one man and exempt the same kind of butter when made by somebody else passes, as do many other things about this bill, my comprehension.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 2, line 24, after the word "family," strike out "and guests thereof" and insert "table;" so as to read:

And any person who sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family table without compensation, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 2, line 25, after the word "any," strike out "ingredient or" and insert "artificial."

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the clause be read as it will read if amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 25, strike out the words "ingredient or" and insert "artificial;" so that the paragraph will read:

Who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any artificial coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, section 3, line 16, after the word "from," insert "artificial;" and in the same line strike out "or ingredient;" so as to read:

When oleomargarine is free from artificial coloration.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I did not intend to say a word on this bill. I am utterly opposed to the principle upon which this bill is based and the amendments that have been offered, and when I say "the amendments," I mean upon both sides of the Chamber, because amendments have been offered by my Democratic colleagues which seem to me to ignore the fundamental principle upon which I am opposed to this sort of legislation.

Under the Constitution of the United States the State has the right to regulate all questions of health and morals and the criminal laws that govern. We have been told here that 32 States have attempted to get rid of colored oleomargarine, and ineffectually, and now we are appealed to by certain persons interested in an adverse industry to legislate without regard to the Constitution and without regard to the interstate-commerce clause in order that colored oleomargarine, which is said to be a fraudulent product, may be prohibited from sale in the open market.

Mr. President, I am not able to see the difference between putting into my stomach colored oleomargarine and butter colored by aniline, made out of coal tar. I am, in my old-fashioned way, utterly unable to comprehend the difference. If any manufacturer of butter who sees proper to color it in order to make it acceptable to the public taste and in order to sell it can, without my knowledge or consent, inject into my stomach a preparation of coal tar, I can not see for the life of me why an oleomargarine manufacturer can not do the same thing.

No Senator pretends to say that this is a revenue bill. The bill itself on its face reduces the tax from 2 cents to one-fourth of 1 cent per pound upon uncolored oleomargarine and imposes a tax of 10 cents upon colored oleomargarine, which is absolutely destructive of all revenue whatever. If any Senator has the hardihood, I should like to hear one of them stand here now and contradict what I say. If anyone will declare that this is a revenue measure, I call his attention to the simple record, open to every man in the United States who can read and chooses to do so. We have just passed a bill almost unanimously in both Houses of Congress taking off $74,000,000 of taxes, the war taxes; and that bill is now in conference. We have a hundred and fifty million dollars of gold reserve. We have a hundred and seventy-five million dollars of surplus revenue, and during the last fiscal year we had $59,700,000 more receipts than we had expenditures. I want some Senator to stand here and say to the people of the United States that this is a revenue bill in the face of these facts.

I am opposed to the bill, and I am opposed to the amendment. This is nothing but parliamentary assassination. It is one interest making war upon another. The Senators who advocate this bill know very well that it is parliamentary assassination. They know that when the act comes before the Supreme Court of the United States that tribunal will say, as it did about the act of 1886, "This court must assume that Congressmen have obeyed their oaths to support the Constitution, and that this is a revenue measure." We know it is not, and I leave it to every Senator to consult his conscience and say whether he is observing the Constitution in voting for such a bill. For myself I would not vote for it if every man, woman, and child in this country would ask me to do it. I would not do it if the legislature of Missouri should ask me and demand that I should do it, because it has no right to make me violate the Constitution which I have sworn to support.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to offer an amendment intended to reduce the license fees to be paid by wholesale and retail dealers in uncolored oleomargarine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 4, insert the following:

Section 3 of said act is hereby amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided further, That wholesale dealers who vend no other oleomargarine or butterine except that upon which a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound is imposed by this act as amended shall pay $200, and such retail dealers as vend no other oleomargarine or butterine except that upon which is imposed by this act as amended a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound shall pay $5."

Mr. PROCTOR. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments have not yet been acted upon.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is a committee amendment on page 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 it is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 10, the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid any State to permit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in any manner consistent with the laws of said State provided that it is manufactured and sold entirely within the State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is another committee amendment at the bottom of page 3.

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] has taken the place of section 4.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not understand that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas was offered as a substitute for that section, because the amendment of the committee was to strike that out, and it will take a separate vote, as I understand it, to dispose of that.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understood that it was offered as a substitute for section 4.

Mr. BAILEY. I venture to say that the stenographer's notes will not sustain that contention.

Mr. MONEY. It was not understood—

Mr. HARRIS. I understood it was accepted by the committee in lieu of section 4, which had been stricken out.

Mr. BAILEY. The committee can not accept it in that way. I distinctly made the point of order in the beginning that the committee's amendments must first be disposed of. I was very courteously informed by the Chair that no such point of order could be made in the Senate; that the bill was open to amendment offered by any Senator; that the committee amendments were pending the same as amendments offered by Senators.

I am a little curious to know why the Committee on Agriculture struck section 4 out of the bill without themselves proposing some amendment on the same subject.

Mr. PROCTOR. The committee struck it out because they considered it entirely inadequate and insufficient, and they were in doubt whether they could prepare in time an amendment that would answer the purpose. They did, however—the bill not coming up—give attention to the matter, and the amendment of the Senator from Kansas was largely prepared by the committee. I polled, I think, nearly all the committee—I remember speaking to the Senator from Mississippi about it—and the committee accepted it in lieu of section 4.

Mr. BAILEY. The Committee on Agriculture, then, reported the amendment striking out section 4, with the understanding that some member of the Senate would offer an amendment on the same subject. Am I to so understand?

Mr. PROCTOR. There was no such understanding at the time the bill was reported, but it was a matter outside of the oleomargarine portion of the bill, and the committee was sure that this provision would not accomplish what it sought to. It would have been inoperative and of very little account.

Mr. BAILEY. The committee had no doubt, however, about the perfect constitutionality of that section?

Mr. PROCTOR. That is a question which the committee did not discuss. It would have been practically inoperative.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Texas permit me for a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will turn to the printed amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas he will find that it reads:

Insert the following in lieu of section 4.

That is the form in which it was sent to the desk and acted upon.

Mr. BAILEY. That may have been the amendment proposed, but it was not the motion voted on. Still, it is a matter of no practical or material importance. I was just curious to know what kind of motive operated upon the mind of the Committee on Agriculture. I regret to know that they happened to do right by mere guess.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would make the point that a motion to insert by way of perfecting the bill takes precedence over a motion to strike out.

Mr. NELSON. The adoption of this amendment in lieu of section 4, as we adopted it, was equivalent to a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. And as such, when we adopted it in that form, it was equivalent to a motion to strike out and insert. The first clause in the proposed amendment for section 4 states as follows:

Insert the following in lieu of section 4.

Adopting that was striking out section 4 and inserting this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any further amendment to the original text?

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in line 13, page 3, the word "ten" and inserting "five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 13, it is proposed to strike out the word "ten" and insert "five;" so as to read:

That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold or removed for consumption and use there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 5 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONEY. On behalf of the minority, I submit an amendment as a substitute for the whole bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi offers a substitute, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled, "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. That special tax on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine shall be imposed as follows: Manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $800 per annum. Every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer thereof.

"Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $480 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be deemed a wholesale dealer therein; but a manufacturer of oleomargarine who has given the required bond and paid the required special tax, and who sells oleomargarine of his own production only at the place of its manufacture in the original packages to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall not be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer on account of such sales.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $48 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities not greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be regarded as a retail dealer therein.

"SEC. 2. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word 'Oleomargarine' in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word 'Oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers and marked, stamped, and branded with the word 'Oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word 'Oleomargarine,' with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as butter, any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package, or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than $100 nor more than $500 and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months; and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886, and also to define manufacturers and dealers and to provide for the payment of special taxes by them."

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the minority have submitted this substitute for the bill of the majority with the belief that it is a more effective preventive of fraud and deceit in the sale of oleomargarine as a substitute for butter than the bill of the majority. I do not see how anybody can view it otherwise. It is devoid of repressive taxation, of any discrimination, of injury to any industry in the world. It is simply a preventive measure intended to regulate the manufacture and sale of this article of daily food familiar to the people in order to protect the consumer from any imposition on the part of the retail or wholesale dealer or manufacturer.

In our opinion it will meet the demand of the people who honestly want to prevent fraud and who do not wish to tax one industry for the benefit of another. In the opinion of the minority there are millions of people in this country who knowingly ask for oleomargarine and who use it understanding exactly what it is. I have now before me scores of letters and telegrams from working people all over this country, from almost every State in it, especially from the large cities, from labor organizations, saying that they know what they are doing, and they do not want protection except from the bill; that they want something that will prevent fraud if it is necessary, but for themselves they ask for oleomargarine, and they want it.

This, in my opinion, will be a test of the sincerity of those gentlemen who profess to see in this bill only a preventive measure, and of those, on the contrary, who, instead of trying to prevent fraud, are trying to repress an industry, in fact, to extinguish it, not that we care so much for the interest of the manufacturers of oleomargarine as we do for the interest of thousands of consumers who are able to buy oleomargarine and are not able to buy butter.

On agreeing to this amendment I shall ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I shall vote for this amendment, but before I do so I want to say that I vote for it only because it is less vicious than the one it is intended to displace. If it stood as an independent proposition there are things in it that I should not approve of and should not vote for.

Mr. MONEY. I will say, if the Senator will allow me, that I am exactly in his position. I stated that in the speech I had the honor to submit to the Senate in opening the debate.

Mr. BATE. Although I have signed the minority report I want to say the same thing. I do not agree with it entirely. I did it as the best I could get.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I simply rise to say that I shall very cheerfully vote for this substitute as against the pending bill, but of course I would vote against the enactment of any measure by the Federal Congress intended to deal with deceitful practices in trade.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say, not only as to this amendment, but as to all others, that while I shall vote for such of them as I think would be less objectionable than the pending bill, if either of them was the bill upon its passage I would vote against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

Mr. BACON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. MONEY. I asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON (when Mr. DOLLIVER's name was called). I desire to again state that my colleague [Mr. DOLLIVER] is absent necessarily to-day from the Senate. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. My pair has been transferred to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. The Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea;" I vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. QUAY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. QUAY] is unavoidably absent. Were he present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MONEY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Aldrich,	Clark, Wyo.	McLaurin, S. C.	Stewart,
Bacon,	Culberson,	Mallory,	Taliaferro,
Bailey,	Dubois,	Martin,	Teller,

Clay,	Elkins,	Money,	Tillman,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Turner,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, N. Y.	Warren.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the question on concurring in the amendments be taken on them in gross? The Chair hears no objection. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. MARTIN (when Mr. DANIEL's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DANIEL] is unavoidably absent from his seat. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired on this vote, and has been paired on all the amendments voted on to-day, with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. SCOTT (when Mr. ELKINS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. ELKINS] is unavoidably absent from the city. If he were here, he would vote "nay." A pair has been arranged with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], who, I understand, would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. That is transferred to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I vote "yea." The Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. QUAY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. QUAY] is unavoidably absent. Were he present, he would vote in favor of the bill on its final passage.

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and refrain from voting.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 39, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Allison,	Fairbanks,	Hawley,	Mitchell,
Burnham,	Foraker,	Kean,	Nelson,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	Kearns,	Penrose,

Beveridge,	Elkins,	Morgan,	Turner,
Clay,	Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.	Warren.
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Depew,	Jones, Nev.	Simon,

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PROCTOR, the title was amended so as to read:

A bill to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine and to impose a tax, provide for the inspection, and regulate the manufacture and sale of certain dairy products, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

ANATOMICAL BOARD OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 1st instant (the House of Representatives concurring), I return herewith Senate bill No. 2291, entitled "An act for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, April 3, 1903.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am somewhat in doubt what motion to make in reference to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proper course to pursue is to refer the bill to the Committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state that the purpose was to have the bill returned so as to have it amended. I will make the motion to refer it to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I rise to take the floor with the intention of discussing the Chinese-exclusion bill at 2 o'clock to-morrow, at which time, as I understand, it will come up as the unfinished business.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the routine business, I shall call up the Indian appropriation bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 4, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 3, 1902.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

Infantry Arm.

Edward J. Bloom, at large, to be second lieutenant, February 2, 1901.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Infantry Arm.

Capt. Edward H. Browne, First Infantry, to be major, March 28, 1902, vice Clagett, Second Infantry, deceased.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

William R. Akers, of Nebraska, to be receiver of public moneys at Alliance, Nebr., his term having expired. (Reappointment.)

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 3, 1902.

PENSION AGENT.

Augustus J. Hoitt, of Massachusetts, to be pension agent at Boston, Mass.

POSTMASTERS.

Burd R. Linder, to be postmaster at Orwigsburg, in the county of Schuylkill and State of Pennsylvania.

Daniel W. Bedea, to be postmaster at Shenandoah, in the county of Schuylkill and State of Pennsylvania.

Jesse N. Watson, to be postmaster at Hatboro, in the county of Montgomery and State of Pennsylvania.

Robert B. Clayton, to be postmaster at Ashland, in the county of Schuylkill and State of Pennsylvania.

Louis Biltz, to be postmaster at Girardville, in the county of Schuylkill and State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 3, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] occupy some of his time?

Mr. MANN. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, a few evenings ago an employee in one of the departments of the Government came to see me, it being his fourth or fifth visit, to request that I should use whatever influence I might have to retain him in the Government service; a laudable ambition, to remain in the employ of the Government.

That same evening another employee spoke to me relative to supporting the pending bill. I suggested that the passage of this bill meant the commencement of a civil pension list, and that I thought the results of it would open up an immense drain upon the Treasury. The reply to my suggestions was that when a clerk in the employ of the Government gives to the Government many years of his service that the Government ought to place him upon a civil pension list.

In these two incidents we have brought forth fully to our attention the condition in which the Government is placed. A strenuous effort at all times is being made to get into the Government service, and when once in office a strenuous effort is made to increase the salary and to establish an opening into the public Treasury. The title of the pending bill is "To promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service." I dare say that that is misleading. I have listened very attentively during the past few days to the speeches in advocacy of this measure, and I have heard no intimation or suggestion that the Revenue-Cutter Service was inefficient. I have heard no argument protesting that it needed improvement. Every suggestion that has been made and every argument that has been offered has been that the service is very efficient and that the service is rendering a perfect service.

Why, then, should this bill be styled a bill to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service. When we turn to the bill itself we find in it no provision whatever, no suggestion whatever, to increase the efficiency of the service. No new duty is prescribed; no irregularity in the service is sought to be remedied. The only purpose of the bill is to open a way to higher salaries and to establish a pension list. The bill divides itself into three branches. First, to increase the rank of the officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service. To this I have no objection. If there should be any comfort in having a provision to place upon themselves more tinsel and to make a more gorgeous display, I have no objection whatever to offer to that.

The next provision is to increase the pay of all the officers in the service; but no suggestion is made to increase the pay of the common laborers engaged in the service. The next suggestion is to place these officers upon a retired list at an increased pay. Under the law as it now exists they are subject to retirement at one-half pay. This is to be increased to three-fourths pay; so that under the operation of the present law a captain who was retired at $1,250 a year under the proposed law will be retired at $2,625 a year; in other words, an increased pension from more than $100 to more than $200 a month. In addition to this there are commutations allowed to the different officers under existing law ranging from $40 down to $20 per month. This is increased in the pending bill to $48 down to $24 per month.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we increase the pay of the Revenue-Cutter Service by the passage of this bill, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Life-Saving Service, a service which is just as commendable, that can present itself as forcefully and with just as many reasons and arguments in its behalf, stands knocking at the door of the Congress demanding an increase in its pay and that it shall be placed upon a retired pension list. Then there is the Marine-Hospital Service, that is just as commendable, making like demands. There is the United States Fish Commission, marine service, and that is entitled to as much consideration. Then there is the Railway Mail Service, that is entitled and possesses as much merit as this Revenue-Cutter Service. Where will this policy end? It means, Mr. Chairman, but one thing. It means the establishment of a civil-pension list in this Government; and when we ever open that door, I venture the prophecy that but a few years will elapse until we have a pension list requiring $500,000,000 of appropriation every year.

I wish to call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that at the present session the House has passed one law that has created the establishment of a permanent Census Bureau. This has added to the departments of the Government a large pay roll, amounting to a million dollars and more a year and an addition to the clerk hire of 1,000 or 1,200 clerks. There is pending in this body a ship-subsidy bill, another measure that is seeking to find an entrance into the Federal Treasury in order to donate unlimited millions of the money of the people, raised by taxation, to the classes in this country who are already in the wealthy class and have no need of the donation. Already we hear the demands upon the Congress for the establishment of a new department of commerce and labor that will necessitate the enlargement very much in the employment of clerks and will constitute an additional drain upon the Treasury. Many of these things, I wish to emphasize, are extravagances. We are in the era of extravagant and reckless expenditure of the public money. We are forgetting the fundamental principles of economy in Government. We are hoisting the anchor; we are letting the old ship of state drift away from economy into every extravagance conceivable to meet every demand made upon the Federal Treasury.

In this Revenue-Cutter Service we propose to increase the salaries of 221 officials, and we propose to increase the salary on the retired list of 29 persons; and while this in the aggregate amounts to about $156,000 per annum—comparatively a very small sum—yet it stands as an indication of what may be expected in the near future. It is the thin edge of the wedge entering the public Treasury toward the consummation of a plan to inaugurate in this country a permanent civil-pension list. I have here and shall print with my remarks the appropriations for the Army for the fiscal years from 1893 to 1902, inclusive, and the like appropriations for the Navy. I wish to call attention to the fact that the appropriations for the Navy for the fiscal years of 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896 were $100,390,818.41. For 1899, 1900, 1901, and 1902, $247,441,460.93. The appropriations for the same years—1893 to 1896—in the Army were $95,379,632.37. For the years 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902 they amounted to $678,380,001.18.

So that we have the total appropriations for the Army and Navy from 1893 to 1896, inclusive, of $195,770,450, and for the years 1899 to 1902, inclusive, of $925,821,000. The amount carried in the appropriation bill for the Army which has passed the House at the present session is $90,880,000, and the estimates for the Navy are $98,910,984, an increase in the estimates of more than $11,000,000 over the year 1902 for the Navy alone.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that these facts ought to demand our serious attention and our earnest consideration, and they should impress upon us the necessity of calling a halt in the extravagance of the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, I shall also ask to print with my remarks the report which accompanies the pension appropriation bill setting forth the increase in the pensions. In 1879 the appropriations for pensions were $33,000,000. In 1901 it was $138,531,483, and added to that was $3,787,693 for naval pensions, making more than $142,000,000 disbursed in one year for our pension list. Is there no lesson for us in these figures? Have we forgotten that every dollar of money in the public Treasury comes through the exactions of taxation? Have we forgotten that in the establishment of this Government our fathers rested and grounded this Government upon the great fundamental principles of simplicity of government and economy of administration? But we have lost sight of this. We have forgotten the simplicity of our fathers; we have forgotten the economy of our fathers. We have cut loose from the spirit and genius of our institutions, and we are drifting away from them into every extravagance that could characterize a Federal administration.

Opposed to this the Democratic party stands forever pledged, and I wish to call to the attention of this House and to the attention of the country and to the attention of the Administration and the responsible authorities in this House that the time has come when we should begin to practice some measure of economy, and to have in view the fact that the money we are lavishly expending is derived from taxation of the people who earn their money by the sweat of their brow, and every dollar in the Federal Treasury is an exaction from labor and toil and the products of the masses of our citizenship. To-day, like in the olden time, as every road led to Rome, it seems that in the Congress of the United States under the present Administration, every road leads into the public Treasury. Let us return to the simplicity and the economy of our fathers, and turn away from this lavishness and extravagance that would constitute every Federal officeholder a pensioner upon the public Treasury and a burden upon the labor and toil and production of the American citizens. [Applause.]

Under the pending bill the effect is to increase the salaries of the officers about 40 per cent, and it raises the salary of the retiring officer from one-half of the existing salary to three-fourths of the increased salary.

The Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year 1903, submit the following in explanation thereof:

The estimates on which the bill is based will be found on page 197 of the Book of Estimates for 1903, and amount to $139,846,480.

The accompanying bill appropriates $139,842,230.

The following statement gives, by appropriate title of expenditure, the amounts appropriated for 1902, the estimates for 1903, and the amounts recommended in the accompanying bill for 1903:

Title of expenditure.	Appropriations for 1902.	Estimates for 1903.	Recommended for 1903.

The payments on account of Navy pensions during the fiscal year 1901 aggregated $3,787,693.03, making total pensions paid in 1901 $142,219,176.57.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a member of this House I have given a patient and courteous hearing to almost every speech that has been made upon this floor. In return for that patience and courtesy I beg the indulgence of the committee for a brief while on the pending measure. I would content myself with recording my vote against the bill were it not for the fact that requests have come to me from my State urging me to support it. I believe that a Representative should give patient and respectful consideration to any request from his constituents. There is no man, though never so poor and humble, whose wishes, even though of only one sentence contained upon a postal card, I would not receive respectfully and consider carefully. In the end, however, a Representative, having examined the subject, must follow his own conscience and judgment.

The friends of the Revenue-Cutter Service have certainly been active in this matter, for, so far as I know and have heard, the only letters, petitions, and resolutions coming up to this House have been in favor of the bill. We have heard nothing from the great masses of the American people. They have been going about their business, and have not had time to analyze this bill and make known their views. They expect us to analyze the bill and to do our duty.

When it was brought to my attention that this bill, which professes to be a bill "to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service," would come before Congress for consideration, I supposed it meritorious. I know that I am in favor of promoting efficiency in all the departments of the Government service. Who is not? But what do I find in this bill, with its inviting, captivating, and misleading title? In my innocence I believe that language was made to reveal and not to conceal thoughts, and this is particularly true in regard to the titles of bills in legislative bodies. There is not one line or provision in the pending bill to improve the Revenue-Cutter Service. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, according to the advocates of this measure the Revenue-Cutter Service is the most efficient and worthy service in any department of the Government. The assertion here is that the service is practically perfect, or as nearly perfect as poor human nature can make anything. The most earnest and eloquent pleas are poured into our ears, and we are told that because of the efficiency and worth of the Revenue-Cutter Service this bill should be passed as an act of simple justice. I do not doubt that the officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service are courteous, efficient, and worthy gentlemen. I have nothing to say against them. They brave dangers and do their duty. So do thousands of other men, whether in or out of the public service.

Let us analyze this bill. Mr. Chairman, if the bill had no title and I were called upon to read it and to frame a title in one sentence that would convey a clear, definite idea of its provisions, in innocence and simple honesty, I would write this sentence: "A bill to increase the salary of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and to provide for their retirement on pay." This is the plain, simple English of this proposition. If the measure stopped at increasing the pay of these officers, we could debate it along the line as to whether we should increase the pay of Government employees. But, sir, beyond that, and of supreme importance in this discussion, is the principle involved in retiring men who are civil employees of the Government. Juggle with words as you may, justify it on what plea you will, the fact remains that by passing this bill you are creating a civil pension list. A civil pension list is obnoxious to every principle of republican government, and I pray that we may never see the day when one class of our people shall live in luxury and ease out of the public Treasury at the expense of the masses of the people, and that, too, without even the pretense that they are engaged in Government work.

Whether the civil pension list you shall create by the passage of this bill will be long or short will be immaterial. Whether the sum necessary to pay the salaries of the retired officers shall be large or small will make no difference. Whether that list shall contain 10, 500, or 5,000 men who never served their Government except as civilians, you will have a civil pension list. You will have a precedent. There are enough lawyers in this body to know the force and the power of precedent. When we go into court with a clearly established precedent, a like decision is forthcoming. Having passed this measure upon the plea of doing justice to this class of Government employees, I ask you what will be your answer when the Life-Saving Service come for similar treatment? They can say, and truthfully, too, that their lives are lives of hardship, peril, and danger. There is no smooth sailing for them. When the seas are angry and the waves are furious, and great ships laden with human souls are dashed like toys upon the rocks, the Life-Saving Service, unconscious of self, risk their lives to save others. Listen to the strong language contained in a Senate report setting forth the merits of the Life-Saving Service. The report says:

When the severe toils, bitter privations, and appalling dangers incident to their calling are considered, and when it is remembered that the spirit with which these hardships have been met has resulted in the saving of thousands of lives and an amount of property many times exceeding in value the cost of maintaining the service, while the history of their achievements has added luster to the national honor, it would seem that the higher rates would not be too great a reward to bestow on these faithful and heroic men. At all events, a substantial increase should be made.

As a consequence of their exposure many men have fallen victims to chronic ailments, some have been maimed for life by accidents, and others have perished on their beats. It is probably safe to say that there is no other class of men engaged in duties at once so tedious and perilous as those which these faithful guardians of the coast perform in maintaining the unremitting night patrol throughout the rigorous season of the year. But their labors are not confined to this routine of watch patrol and daily drill. Summoned in the dead of night, or by day in the midst of their ordinary toil to a duty higher than these, by an alarm that a vessel is ashore, they take their places at the boat wagon or apparatus cart for a supreme effort, with a courage and determination that has never yet quailed before any hazard, and executed prodigies of valor and endurance that have made them celebrated throughout the land and added to the nation's glory.

In addition to the foregoing regular routine must be added their terrible and daring labors at shipwreck. This, of course, is their crowning duty, and involves efforts almost superhuman, heroism carried to the very brink of deadly peril, and often death itself.

The soldier in this age is known and is only justified as one who professionally stakes his life in defense of his fellow-citizens. It is because he does this that, grown veteran or infirm or falling on the battlefield, we recognize his right and the right of his family to support at the expense of the public he guards. These life-saving crews—these storm soldiers—render a similar service, and no less dangerous and noble, and they deserve the same substantial recognition.

In another Senate report, made at this session of Congress, it is said that—these officers in their official routine are exposed to hardships and dangers which do not fall to the lot of the ordinary officeholder.

Measured by their merits or by the danger of their calling, the Life-Saving Service is as much entitled to a civil pension list as the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The Weather Bureau men will come asking for like treatment, and they will be able to present arguments which no man who votes for the pending measure can answer. The Revenue-Cutter men are at anchor in some smooth harbor on an average of more than three hundred days in the year; but the Weather Bureau men will be able to tell you that they work every day in the year; that their labors begin before the dawn and continue until midnight; that they must endure all climates, from Alaska to the equator. I need not stop to repeat the arguments that they will be able to make, for I find that a committee of the Fifty-sixth Congress summarized the reasons why there should be a retired or civil pension list for the Weather Bureau employees, and I can not do better than to repeat what they have said:

(1) They work three hundred and sixty-five days in a year. Their hours of duty are long. On the Pacific coast the first observation is made between 4.30 and 5.30 a. m., while on the Atlantic coast the offices can not be closed before 11 p. m., and often later. They must be on the alert at all times to detect the first premonitions of storm development, and remain constantly on duty in order to distribute warnings that may be received at any moment.

(2) They are subject to great vicissitudes of climate, being required to serve, as the exigencies of the service may require, in almost any degree of latitude, from Alaska to the West Indies.

(3) By reason of the peculiar organization of the service its employees are, like officers of the Army, in a great measure deterred from obtaining a fixed habitation or enjoying the privileges that accrue to long residence in a community. Changes of station generally operate to their financial disadvantage.

There you have it. They are not soldiers, but they serve the Government under great hardship, are always on duty, and, like soldiers, are constantly moving from place to place, are denied the social privileges and advantages accruing to long and fixed residence, and are subject to financial loss by constant change of residence. Being like soldiers, the argument is that they should be accorded like treatment.

So, Mr. Chairman, it is easy to see the drift and the tendency. Unfortunately, and, as I think, unwisely, we have a retired list of Army and Navy officers. To-day we are called upon to give the Revenue-Cutter Service a retired list because, forsooth, they perform duty like soldiers. The extracts from which I have read characterize the Life-Saving Service as "storm soldiers" and the Weather Bureau men as "like soldiers." All this is but laying the foundation to provide for them a retired list because there is an Army retired list.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is paving the way for the Marine-Hospital Service to be pensioned. He has introduced the bill (H. R. 7189) which I hold in my hand, and, while it provides for an increase in pay, it is entitled "An act to increase the efficiency," etc. I tell you, gentlemen, we must watch these titles. Judging by the title of the bill now under consideration, as well as by the title of the one which I hold in my hand, I am sure I can say without offense that if some gentlemen here were to draw up a bill to increase the salaries of judges of the United States courts, they are so thoroughly imbued with the idea of promoting or increasing the efficiency of the service that it would never occur to them to entitle their bill as a bill to increase the salary of judges of the United States courts, but I should expect a bill "to promote the efficiency of the courts."

This bill relating to the Hospital Service provides that the President may, in time of war, transfer this service to the Army. Having provided by law that this service may be pressed into the Army in time of war, you have laid the foundation to create for it a retired or civil pension list. Then, Mr. Chairman, what are you going to do about the railway postal clerks? They constitute one of the most worthy and efficient classes in the Government service. They work hard and they work constantly, and what is more, they are in infinitely more danger than the officers of either the Navy or the Army. It is a fearful thought and an appalling fact that when the railway postal clerk kisses his wife or his sweetheart good-bye he goes out from her presence with some doubt as to whether he will ever return. I have great respect for this great army of employees. I believe that of all the bills here providing for an increase of salary of Government employees—and there are bills providing for increase in salary for nearly everyone in the Government service—the bill providing for an increase in the pay of postal clerks is about the only one of merit. When you get fairly launched into your civil pension business you will find yourselves in no position to refuse to heed the arguments that will be poured into your ears in behalf of other Government employees.

The Life-Saving Service, the Weather Bureau service, and the railway postal clerks can all show that their work is as arduous as the work of the Revenue-Cutter Service. They can show you that more men lose their lives each year in the Life-Saving Service, in the Weather Bureau service, and in the railway postal service than have lost their lives in forty years in the Revenue-Cutter Service. And when you shall have yielded to the pressure that will be brought to bear from all these sources, and placed the old and the infirm and the maimed upon the retired or civil pension list, then your lives will be made miserable by the clamor of the department employees here in Washington. Why, gentlemen, do you know that an association has been formed in this city for the purpose of securing legislation providing that all Government employees, here or elsewhere, incapacitated for labor, shall be placed on a civil pension list, or a retired list, if you prefer to call it by that name? Let me tell you, if you pass this bill all the other employees of the Government will some day get similar legislation. All they want is a precedent and one class in the Government service retired on pay. Then they will come, telling you that they worked for the Government during the best years of their lives, and ask that justice be done them by according them the same treatment accorded other Government employees.

There are only two arguments in favor of this bill, namely, (1) that the employees demanding this legislation are worthy, and (2) that this legislation is necessary to equalize them with Army and Navy officers; and such will be the arguments when like bills come before this body for consideration for other Government employees—that they are worthy and that such legislation is necessary to equalize them with other favored employees.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other thing I was about to forget. The friends of this bill say that the Revenue-Cutter Service employees are subject to the call of their country in times of grim-visaged war. That is so; but so is every other man. The lawyer in his office, the plowman in his field, the operative at his loom, the merchant in his store, the miner in the earth, the fisherman by the sea, and all men everywhere are subject to their country's call in the hour of danger, and that call will be obeyed.

All this talk about justice to these overworked and underpaid employees of the Government sounds very well. These employees were not conscripted into the service. They are not in involuntary servitude. They can resign. With all the world before them, they, of their own free will and accord, with full knowledge of the work and of the pay, sought these positions and hold on to them tenaciously. There is another class to whom we should do justice, and that is those who pay the taxes. It is time to call a halt in these wild and extravagant expenditures of public money. In 1860 the entire expenses of the Federal Government were in round numbers $82,000,000. The expenses of the present fiscal year will reach $730,000,000. The total appropriations for the Navy for the years 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896 amounted to $100,000,000. The total appropriations for the Navy for the years 1899, 1900, 1901, and 1902 amounted to $247,000,000. The total appropriations for the Army for the years 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896 amounted to $95,000,000. The total appropriations for the Army for the years 1899, 1900, 1901, and 1902 amounted to $678,000,000.

Every dollar in the Treasury is exacted in the way of taxation from the American people, and these dollars represent the toil and the sweat of those who eat bread in the sweat of their faces. I wish to be parliamentary, but I must confess that I have little patience over the tears that are shed in behalf of the overworked and underpaid employees of the Government. These employees went into the Government service voluntarily, and in most instances worried their Representatives and Senators to death to get the places. I undertake to say that most of your constituents and mine work longer hours, receive less pay, and have fewer of the luxuries than the Government employees. A captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service gets $2,500 a year. This bill raises his salary to $3,500 a year, and provides for his retirement in certain emergencies on a salary of $2,625 a year for life. Compare these wages with what your people and mine back home are making, and answer your own conscience if you think it is right to tax the people to pay such salaries, and then to pay men on a retired list who do not render nor pretend to render any service to the Government more than $200 per month for life out of the public Treasury.

I have heretofore referred to the fact that there were bills pending in this Congress to provide for increase of pay for almost all the employees of the Government. I take the liberty of quoting from the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has carefully compiled the bills of this character. Bills for increase of salaries pending March 1, 1902, in the Senate and House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress:

- S. 943. To reclassify railway postal clerks and to increase their salaries.
- H. R. 27. To reclassify railway postal clerks and divide them into ten classes and to increase their salaries.
- S. 1345. To classify post-office clerks and to grant them an annual increase in salary of $100 per annum.
- H. R. 5286. To provide for the classification of salaries of clerks employed in first and second class post-offices and to increase the salaries of such clerks.
- H. R. 5597. To increase the compensation of fourth-class postmasters.
- S. 237. To increase the pay of letter carriers.
- H. R. 2575. To increase the pay of letter carriers.
- H. R. 6279. To increase the pay of letter carriers.
- H. R. 6548. To increase the pay of letter carriers in cities to $1,200 per annum and to increase the pay of rural carriers to $1,000 per annum.
- H. R. 7213. To increase the pay of letter carriers.
- S. 3267. To increase the pay of judges of the Supreme Court and other courts of the United States.

Let us not forget that the fathers who founded this Government based it upon the idea of simplicity and economical administration. In many things the tendency and the drift are away from the simple democracy of the fathers. Let us retrace our steps. Let us understand, and endeavor to make all other men understand, that men temporarily in the public service are but public servants and are no better than the men in private life. There is no place here for classes. The genius and the spirit of our institutions stand out against such legislation. If this Government is simple in its manner, economical in its expenditures, and fair and impartial in its administration, it will be strong in the affections of the people. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I think I have some knowledge of a practical nature of the service affected by this bill and know its value and efficiency, the character and quality of the men engaged therein, I rather feel bound to make some suggestions relating thereto. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], who join in the minority views against the report of the committee on this bill, apparently have given some time in investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the merits of this measure. The gentleman from Illinois informs us that he has spent about a year and a half in the investigation of this question. The gentleman from Alabama informs us in his speech that he has spent about all of his time since he has been on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in investigation of this measure.

Now, we know that to be practically true, with this exception: We do know that he has not spent the time on this measure that he has employed in conjunction with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], who sits at my right, in alternately swatting the octopus concealed in the Pacific cable proposition [laughter]; but with this exception the gentleman from Alabama has spent his time in investigating this measure. I was very much surprised to hear the gentleman from Illinois, in his second speech on this proposition, express regret because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] had seen fit to make some reference to the Navy not altogether of a complimentary character. I was surprised, because of the fact that the minority views signed by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Alabama, and the two speeches made by the gentleman from Illinois, to say nothing of the speech made by the gentleman from Alabama on four months' investigation, are simply seething and saturated with unfounded attacks and assaults upon the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Now, notwithstanding the fact that the gentleman from Illinois sees fit once in a while to say that they are courageous men, his speeches are, I say, saturated with villification of this service; and I say further, and I will reach it if I have time in the course of these remarks, that his speeches themselves show that many of his charges are absolutely without foundation. Moreover, they show further that he has distorted what he claims to be the facts for the purpose of making out what he claims as derogatory to this service. Now, what is this pending measure, and what does it do? It accomplishes, as I understand, simply four things. First, it simply makes the grades in the Revenue-Cutter Service regular and consistent with the existing grades in the Navy. Second, it makes the Revenue-Cutter officers rank next with and next after the officers in the naval service in times of peace as well as in times of war. Now, upon that proposition the minority views, the result of a year and a half investigation and four months of study, say what? Why, they say that is unnecessary and useless in time of peace, and that it would be very injurious—I want to quote them exactly—it would be “exceedingly mischievous in time of war.”

I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that the provisions of this bill, so far as they relate to this service in time of war, are simply a reenactment of existing law which had been in existence long before the civil war, and instead of that provision operating with great mischievousness during the time of the civil war and the time of the Spanish war, it operated manifestly to the advantage of both the naval and the Revenue-Cutter services. Now, I do not say that the gentleman from Illinois, after eighteen months of investigation knows that fact; but if he had spent his time to any good purpose, he would have learned that that assertion of his was entirely without foundation. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman states that that provision of this bill is simply a reenactment of existing law?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is what I say.

Mr. MANN. Then, what is the purpose of having it in the bill?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. For the purpose of making this consistent with the existing law.

Mr. MANN. What is the use of putting a provision in the bill to reenact existing law?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do you deny that it is a reenactment of existing law?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly, it is not a reenactment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I make the absolute assertion and will stand by the record.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself has an amendment prepared for the very purpose of taking the provision out of the section that he is now talking about.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman has not any such amendment prepared.

Mr. MANN. Well, he had.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He has not any such amendment prepared. Now, you notice what I talk about. Do not get unduly excited, because if you get excited at this stage, you will get annoyed later. Notice what I am talking about. I say that the law now provides that these revenue officers in time of war rank with and next after the officers that are described in this bill. I say that is a provision of the law, and it has been a provision, and I will read it:

The officers of the Revenue Service, when serving—

And this was the law prior to 1861—

in accordance with law as a part of the Navy, shall be entitled to relative rank as follows: Captains, with and next after lieutenants commanding the Navy; first lieutenants, with and next after lieutenants in the Navy; second lieutenants, with and next after masters in line in the Navy;

And the only change is to eliminate masters, and put in junior lieutenants, if I remember correctly—third lieutenants, with and next after ensigns of the Navy.

And that has been the law, I say, since long prior to 1861.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to the section of the bill itself?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Instead of saying “captains with and next after lieutenants commanding,” it says “captains with and next after lieutenant-commanders in the Navy,” which is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is that—with and next after lieutenants commanding?

Mr. MANN. With and next after lieutenant-commanders.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is simply a technical title that you call attention to.

Mr. MANN. That shows the gentleman is not informed about the law.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; it does not. It shows nothing of the kind.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no such officer as a “lieutenant commanding.”

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it shows nothing of the kind. Now, if the gentleman will just wait, as I go on I will call his attention to some other things that will interest him vastly more. I say that in substance this provision was in existence prior to 1861. I say that in substance this provision applied in 1861 and 1898, and I say that under it the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service and their vessels fired the first shot in each war, and there was not the slightest condict, difficulty, or trouble. They operated together without any difficulty or trouble.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to take the gentleman's time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, then, I hope you will not take it; but go ahead.

Mr. MANN. I suppose you hope I will not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; go right along.

Mr. MANN. The term “lieutenant-commander” is a term of rank. The term “lieutenant commanding” refers to the command of a vessel.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And in the recent war, according to the report of the Navy, there were a great many vessels commanded by officers below the rank of lieutenant-commanders.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But commanded by lieutenants commanding.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now you propose to eliminate that and make these captains subject only to lieutenant-commanders.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But superior to lieutenants commanding.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes. Was there any friction about that in the time of the war?

Mr. MANN. There was no friction, because the lieutenants commanding were always in command; but you propose to let revenue officers command lieutenants.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did a captain rank with and next after a lieutenant-commander in the Navy in the time of the war?

Mr. MANN. He did not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did a first lieutenant rank with and next after lieutenants in the Navy?

Mr. MANN. He did not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did a second lieutenant rank with and next after a master in the Navy?

Mr. MANN. He did not, so far as command of a vessel is concerned.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have just read from the statute that says he did. That simply shows that the gentleman from Illinois is a trifle off his base.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman will take care of himself on that proposition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have no doubt he will. I am very glad to see him do it. He has endeavored to take care of himself in these minority views on this bill and in these speeches he has made on this bill, and I will show the House, if I have time, how well he has succeeded in accomplishing that little job.

Now, there are two other things this bill accomplishes. And what are they, which these gentlemen are so violently opposed to? The bill gives to the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service longevity pay and the same privileges, in substance, as to retirement that are now given to officers in the Navy and in the Army.

I am not going to stop here to discuss the question of a civil pension list or the propriety of the retirement proposition in connection with the Army and the Navy. I shall assume for the purposes of what I may say here that it is the settled policy of this Government to promote and continue its policy in connection with the retiring of officers in the Navy and in the Army. The only question here pending in this bill is whether or not the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service as to services are in every substantial respect identical with those of similar officers in the Navy. If they are, they are entitled to the same treatment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman kindly yield to me?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman kindly explain what the difference is between the compensation under this bill of a captain—

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, I hope the gentleman will wait until I get to that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. What is the difference between the pay of a captain corresponding in rank to a lieutenant-commander? Will the gentleman explain that difference?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will not stop now. If I have time I will do so later. First, I will discuss something that will interest the gentleman a great deal more than these trivial suggestions about rank.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. This bill is to give equality in rank and pay.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, I want you to explain the difference between the pay of the officer in the Revenue-Cutter Service corresponding in rank to lieutenant-commander?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I decline to yield to the gentleman from Alabama at this time for that purpose. If I have time before I finish I will explain what the gentleman thinks is a mare's nest, what he said in his speech was the "cloven foot," the result, I have no doubt, of four months' reflection upon the service. I will refer to that a little later, if I have time; but I am now discussing another point in this bill, and I decline to be drawn from it.

I say if these officers stand on equal footing, are substantially identical in service with the officers in the Navy, they are entitled to the same treatment and ought to receive longevity pay and retirement that the officers of the Navy have; and I say that it now being a part of the policy of this country to give the officers of the Navy that retirement on account of their naval services, it properly withdraws and distinguishes them from the class of civil employees of the Government. I am opposed to enlarging the civil pension list. I do not believe in giving civil pensions.

The gentleman from South Carolina says that he discovered that this bill was constructed and was originated mainly for the purpose of increasing the civil pensions and the civil list, and then the gentleman from Tennessee said this morning that he saw the thin edge of a civil-pension list. It had a tendency, so he said, to in some way affect the ship-subsidy bill. In what way it was done he did not say. I do not know. It had a tendency, he said, to send the great ship of state very near the rocks and breakers. That is the thin edge that the gentleman from California is opposed to in this bill, because he did not like to open a civil-pension list; and for that reason, in his remarks, the gentleman from Indiana, whom I see near me, and whose remarks I have not seen, because he has not extended them in the RECORD, I understand is opposed to this bill, because it is a thin edge and opening up a civil-pension list. Now, I think I am opposed as much—I do not know, of course, how a man really feels from his speech—but I am, I think, as much opposed to a civil-pension list as either of these distinguished gentlemen.

I do not think there is any danger of the ship of state going on the breakers if this bill passes, because I do not believe on any fair and proper analysis, by any inspection of the provisions of the bill by ordinary human reasoning, without misrepresentation or misapprehension, that the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service can be said to be in any proper sense civil employees. I have great respect and admiration for the Navy; I think no man has more—and if there was any line or syllable in this bill that tended in any way to derogate from the honor of the officers of the American Navy, or that tended to impair their efficiency in the discharge of their duties either in time of peace or of war, I would vote against the bill. But there is nothing of the kind.

If I can demonstrate, as I think I can, that these officers stand upon a par with the officers of the Navy, they are entitled to the same treatment. I grant you that it does not answer the suggestions made by the gentleman from California or the suggestions made on the floor the other day by gentlemen who said that they were opposed to the whole retirement proposition—that they do not believe there ought to be any retired list. I do not stop to answer that proposition. That question I submit now to the consideration and judgment of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Alabama, who, as it was asserted yesterday by the gentleman from North Carolina, had never even been on the deck of a revenue cutter, and I do not know that they ever saw a revenue cutter. But as to the judgment of these distinguished gentlemen, and I make no reflection upon their intelligence, their honesty, or their judgment, I propose to submit that the great weight of authority on this question as to identity of service is against them.

I say that the great preponderance of authority does not sustain my distinguished friends in their opposition to this bill, and I propose to read from the report of Secretary Chandler, a report which I think perhaps my friends, although they spent this time and exercised their great abilities, did not succeed in unearthing. Now, what does Secretary Chandler say? I will pause right here to say that there is no officer in the Navy, small or great, renowned or otherwise, that stands to-day, either directly or indirectly, challenging the propriety of this measure or opposed to its passage. They all full well understand the relation of this Revenue-Cutter Service to the United States and the absolute parallel that exists between the two services, and there is no man in the Navy so provincial, so selfish, or so narrow as to be opposed to this measure when he knows that it is founded on the same measure of justice and the same proposition of logic that applies to the retirement and longevity pay of the officers in the Navy.

There is Secretary Chandler, and what does he say? I shall not stop here to argue that it may be that Secretary Chandler knows as much about this service and the naval service as my friend from Illinois or my friend from Alabama, or my other friend from Alabama, who the other day was so awfully impregnated with the idea of a civil pension list, that tremendous ignis fatuus that seems to climb up over the footboard during the silent midnight watches and frighten them when they think of this bill.

Here is what Secretary Chandler said in 1883:

Of the rest—

Speaking of the duties of these officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service—there is not one that is foreign to the general purpose and scope of the naval officer's profession.

Going on further, he says:

The duties of both services are identical in their general nature, only they operate in different localities. Both cruise to protect the maritime interests of the Government and to render assistance to American vessels—the one on the coast, the other, in addition, at sea and in foreign waters. One polices the shore, the other the ocean. In war both engage in naval operations.

The practical identity in the character of the naval and the Revenue-Marine Service lies in the fact that they are both nautical and both military.

Here is where they differ from civil employees.

That the Revenue Marine is a nautical service requires no proof. It is nothing if not nautical. That it is a military service was officially asserted by the Treasury Department in the report on the service for 1881, in these words:

The Revenue Marine, while charged by law with the performance of important civil duties, is essentially military in its character. Each vessel is provided with great guns and furnished with as full a complement of small arms for its crew as any ship of war. Its officers are required to be proficient in military drill and possess a thorough knowledge of the uses of both great and small arms. Its crews are required to be instructed from day to day at the great guns and in the use of the carbine, pistol, and cutlass. Commanding officers are required, while boarding vessels arriving in ports of the United States, in case of the failure or refusal of any such vessel, on being hailed, to come to and submit to the proper inspection by an officer of the service, to fire, first across her bows as a warning, and in case of persistent refusal to resort to shot or shell to compel obedience. In the performance of this work they are likely at any time to receive injuries and be subjected to the same dangers in time of peace as the force employed on naval vessels.

By the act of March 2, 1799, it is provided that "the revenue cutters shall, whenever the President so directs, cooperate with the Navy." It will be observed that the cooperation of the two services prescribed in the act above quoted is not contingent upon a state of war or other particularly perilous conditions. On the contrary, it may take place in time of peace and for pacific purposes, and when less hazard is involved in the two services than pertains to the discharge by a revenue vessel of its ordinary duties. * * * It is difficult to conceive that discrimination could be made by the law between services subjected to equally hazardous and equally important military duties, both in time of peace and in time of war. * * * Objection to granting pensions for the Revenue-Marine officers and seamen has been made on the ground that such action would be extending this bounty to civil employees of the Government, a policy to which our legislative traditions, so to speak, are opposed. But, if in legal theory they are civil employees, are they so in fact? Are they less positively a part of our military force in time of war than the Army or Navy? It is true revenue vessels are not to be ordered into action on purely military service, offensive or defensive, except the President so direct; neither are vessels of the Navy.

That Secretary Chandler is a man of intelligence and uses the English language with a full appreciation of its import and with great accuracy will not be denied, and here is what he says in comment:

The above clear and concise statement showing that the so-called revenue marine is simply a coast navy is without doubt correct and just, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman from New York extend my time for a few minutes?

Mr. SHERMAN. Will five minutes be enough?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Perhaps I can crowd what I wish to say into that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see how I can give the gentleman more.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Very well.

Now, let me quote from the language of another Secretary of the Navy, also a man of ability and capacity, and who knows something of these services, Hon. Benjamin F. Tracy. He says in a letter dated February 29, 1892:

It seems hardly necessary here to point out the practical identity of the two services.

He then quotes with approval the extract which I have just read from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. In commenting upon the extract he says:

The similarity in the two employments amounts almost to identity.

Let me go a little further and quote something a little nearer to the present date. I wish to refer to the language of a Secretary of the Navy on whom gentlemen who oppose this bill have undertaken to rely. In the pursuit of information on this subject I have taken occasion to write a letter of inquiry to Hon. John D. Long, the present Secretary of the Navy, who most worthily maintains the dignity of that office, so that it is no reflection upon men who have preceded him to say that with his distinguished ability and high and exemplary character he has reflected great credit and honor on the administration of the Navy during the time he has had it in charge. [Applause.] I wrote to Secretary Long this letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., March 29, 1902.

HON. JOHN D. LONG,
Secretary of the Navy.

DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention to the bill S. 1025, to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, which is practically identical with the bill H. R. 5796. The following amendment is proposed to be added to section 2 of the bill, viz:

"Provided further, That such assimilated rank shall not be construed to vest any officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service with the right to command any officer of the Navy or any naval vessel, nor shall any naval officer have the right to command any officer or vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service, except by order of the President."

Will you be kind enough to examine the bill with the proposed amendment and advise me whether or not the Navy Department would have any objection thereto, assuming the amendment was adopted, and, if you feel at liberty to do so, make such suggestions as you desire with reference to the propriety of the measure?

Very respectfully,

C. E. LITTLEFIELD.

To this letter I received the following reply:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 31, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 29th instant with reference to the bill S. 1025, "To promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service," which is practically identical with H. R. 5796, and requesting an examination of the bill with an amendment proposed in your communication, and advice whether or not the Navy Department would object thereto in case the amendment should be adopted.

In reply you are advised that while this measure is a matter concerning the Treasury rather than the Navy Department, the special objection to it on the part of the latter is met if, either in the form suggested by you or otherwise, it be so amended as to provide that when officers of the Navy and officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service are serving together the whole shall be under the command of the senior naval officer present, and that in no case shall officers of the said service exercise command over vessels of the Navy.

Which is precisely what the amendment accomplishes.

With regard to your further request that I make such suggestions as I may desire to submit with reference to the general propriety of this measure, I beg to add that on account of the similarity of the two services—

Mark that language—the language of John D. Long—on account of the similarity of the two services, their cooperation in time of war, and the possible future utility of the Revenue-Cutter vessels for naval purposes in time of peace in connection with the protection of American interests in foreign waters, it is clear that the Revenue-Cutter Service ought to be a branch of the naval establishment, as has frequently heretofore been proposed, and as, in the interests of a common range of service afloat, it certainly should be. Indeed, every argument in favor of the bill in question is an argument in favor of such a combination. It may be added that the bill seems to have a tendency toward that end, and if so the Navy Department would gladly approve it if amended as above suggested.

I have no doubt as to that question.

Such an arrangement, it is believed would be for the interests of the officers and enlisted of the Revenue-Cutter Service who have given many instances of skillful seamanship and great gallantry, and thus shown their aptitude for naval service; would put cognate branches under one head and thus promote harmony rather than friction and give both the same benefits; and would certainly tend to prevent the maintenance and possible gradual divergence of what has been called two navies with their separate costly organizations. I have no doubt that there may be some line of service in the Navy Department that could be properly turned over to some other department. I certainly believe that there are branches in other departments involving vessels afloat and closely allied to the naval service which on the other hand would be better if attached to the Navy Department, and that the Revenue-Cutter Service is one of them.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN D. LONG,
Secretary.

HON. CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD, House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I wish I could have about three minutes longer.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, Mr. Chairman, without any disrespect to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], I submit that the great weight of authority sustains the proposition that these two services are identical.

A word in reply to my friend from South Carolina and other gentlemen who say that the passage of this bill would be opening the way to a civil-pension list. There is no department of the Government to which such a remark could have had less pertinence than to this service. There is no clerk who could be drawn from his regular service and detailed to go upon the firing line by order of the President of the United States; no man can be taken from the Marine-Hospital Service; no man can be taken from the Fish Commission; no man can be taken from the Post-Office Department, railway-mail clerk though he may be, and very much in love with that proposition though my friend from South Carolina may be. There is no department, there is no other service that stands on a parallel with this Department in that fundamental distinction of essential military character that exists between them.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I can not stop here. I have not the time. There is no department, I say, that can stand on a parallel with this in that respect. If I had the time, I would be glad to stop and discuss the Life-Saving Service, because in the line of hazardous and dangerous encounter the Life-Saving Service does stand on a parallel with that of the Revenue-Cutter Service. One of the great duties discharged by both services is to save life at the peril of their own lives. I have time only for just one suggestion that I want to make in connection with the two speeches of my friend from Illinois. I said that the gentleman's speeches showed that he had no foundation for some of the assertions he made. I will call attention to this, and then I will leave this bill for the consideration of the members of the House. I call attention now to the assertion made by the gentleman from Illinois in his speech on Thursday last, in which he said this:

If the report of the Revenue-Cutter Service were published, it would show that no boat—no boat in the control of the Revenue-Cutter Service had its anchor weighed so much as eight days every month.

There is his record in his speech of Thursday last. I take up now and hold in my hand his speech of Tuesday last, in which he spreads himself over the RECORD to the tune of eighteen to twenty pages, and what do I find there? I find there are six boats that have a record of eight days' and more service in the month, so that there are six instances in his speech of Tuesday that show that the assertion that he, inadvertently no doubt, made in his speech of Thursday was entirely without foundation.

Now, let me go a little further. He has selected in these six instances only 21 of the 40 vessels engaged in the Revenue-Cutter Service. What of the other 19? What would they show with reference to having their anchors weighed more than eight days in any one month? I do not know, but I have no doubt the gentleman from Illinois does know. At any rate, he has spent eighteen months in investigation of this question. Now, time does not permit me, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, to indulge in longer debate upon this proposition. I simply refer to this for the purpose of sustaining the assertion with which I started out. I most certainly hope, Mr. Chairman, that this measure will have practically a unanimous passage at the hands of this House and a most worthy service receive its just, honorable, rightful, and equal reward in comparison with other like service rendered the Government. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 167. An act for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz;

S. 3437. An act to amend chapter 4, Title XIII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 4339. An act authorizing the White River Railway Company to construct a bridge across the White River, in Arkansas;

S. 4222. An act authorizing the appointment of John Russell Bartlett, a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy;

S. 3638. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel L. Leffingwell;

S. 1814. An act granting an increase of pension to Anna E. Luke;

S. 4404. An act granting an increase of pension to Otto H. Hasselman;

S. 1107. An act limiting the liability of sureties on bonds of officers of the Navy;

S. 642. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands;"

S. 1643. An act granting an increase of pension to Ellen J. Clark;

S. 4450. An act confirming in the State of South Dakota title to a section of land heretofore granted to said State;

S. 1451. An act to correct the military record of A. W., alias Washington, Huntley;

S. 3797. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver old pieces of ordnance to the Indian war veterans;

S. R. 23. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for a statue of the late Maj. Gen. Alexander Macomb, United States Army;

S. 3821. An act to extend the time for presentation of claims under the act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, and under acts amendatory thereof;

S. 4572. An act to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Charles H. Hawley;

S. 3984. An act granting land for a miners' home;

S. 4740. An act granting an increase of pension to Maria L. Godfrey;

S. 4749. An act granting an increase of pension to Eunice A. Smith;

S. 319. An act granting an increase of pension to Ida Warren;
 S. 3091. An act granting an increase of pension to Matilda R. Schoonmaker;
 S. 2289. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin S. Harrower;
 S. 4514. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Beals;
 S. 3108. An act granting an increase of pension to Inez E. Perrine;
 S. 4381. An act granting an increase of pension to John S. Robinson;
 S. 2943. An act granting a pension to Thomas S. Rowan;
 S. 181. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. David;

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will be obliged if the gentleman from Illinois will now consume the balance of his time, so that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] may have what is remaining on this side to close the debate.

Mr. MANN. I would ask the Chair how much time remains on each side?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-eight minutes on the side of the gentleman from Illinois and forty-five minutes on the side of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MANN. Then I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, there may be some similarity in service between the Revenue-Cutter Service and that of the Navy of the United States. So there is between other services that are not regarded as either part of the Navy or part of the Army. There is a transport service of the United States. It is not even in a civil department; it is under the authority of the Secretary of War, and yet I presume that the next move that will be made in this House will be to attempt to place the officers of the transport service upon the retired list with longevity pay. In fact, I can not see why these officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service should be entitled to those privileges unless you extend it to the transport service. The transport service is conducted by men of experience, and the ships therein are enormous in size compared to those that are in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Why, Mr. Chairman, when the size of the vessels that are in the Revenue-Cutter Service is known I am astonished that anybody should compare the responsibility of the officers in charge of the same with the responsibility of the naval officers. Upon examination of the list of revenue cutters of the United States I find that the very largest is one of 869 tons capacity and the smallest one of 23 tons capacity. Now, is it possible that gentlemen can seriously compare the responsibility of captains of these vessels with the corresponding officers in charge of the great cruisers and the other great vessels in the Navy of the United States? When we propose to fix the compensation of officers should we not do it with relation to the responsibilities thereof?

Why, Mr. Chairman, to compare this service to the Navy service is simply to compare something that is exceedingly small with something that is very large. The transport service contains vessels that are four, five, and six times as large as those of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I can not see why anyone who would vote for this bill would not also vote for the retirement of the transport captains, and also for the retirement of officers in other services of the Government. This measure is not like one for an appropriation of a certain sum for a completed improvement which, when once made, entails no further obligation upon the Government, but it provides for an appropriation from year to year forever, whether the revenues of the Government are excessive or deficient.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the members of this House and of the country to the enormous increase in the expenditures of this Government within the last forty years. It is appalling to think that such a difference exists between the expenditures of 1860 and those of to-day. I find, upon examination of the statements of the Appropriation Committee, that the total amount of appropriations for the year 1860 was $82,301,207. Think of it! The appropriations for this entire Government forty years ago—a time within the recollection of a majority of the members of this House—amounted to only $82,000,000 a year; and yet we find that the appropriations for this fiscal year, ending June 30, 1902, amount to $730,338,575—almost a ten-fold increase in the expenses of the Government.

The great increase in expenditures has been made only in the past few years, as the appropriations for the fiscal year 1897 was $469,499,010, while for the year 1900 they were $674,981,022, and for the year 1901 they were $710,150,862, an increase of $250,000,000 a year over what they were prior to the Spanish war.

It is true that population has increased, but not in proportion to the expenditures. I do not say this, Mr. Chairman, to charge that one party or the other is responsible for it. It seems we have some members on this side of the Chamber who are willing to vote for an appropriation whenever the opportunity occurs as well as members upon the other side; but the appalling fact exists that in the last forty years there has been an increase in the expenditures of this Government of nearly 1,000 per cent, while the increase in population has been only 150 per cent. The population of the United States in 1860 was 31,443,321, while in 1900 it was 76,303,387. The tax upon the people in 1860 was only $2.61 per capita, while now it is $9.57 for each inhabitant. These figures show that we are going at a breakneck speed in the expenditure of money, and it is time we should call a halt on a bill of this kind, where the parties in the service are better paid than in the corresponding service of private companies.

Mr. Chairman, the very fact that resignations are not frequent in this service shows that these officers appreciate that they are getting as much if not more than they could possibly get in private life. It seems to me that this question ought to be considered by members of this House as if this were a private service of our own. I should like to know how many votes this measure would get in this House if it were a private service of our own. I warrant that not 10 per cent of our votes would be in favor of giving to men over the age of 64 years a pension of $200 per month while they were rendering no service whatever.

Mr. LESSLER. Would the gentleman mind answering a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LESSLER. How many members of this House have servants in their employ who go to Alaska and rescue men and devote themselves to trips of that sort?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They may not be in this House, but there are companies that have such men, who venture into all parts of the world, and there is hardly a fraction of 1 per cent that give annuities or life pensions to such employees.

Mr. LESSLER. Do you not know, for instance, that the big railroad companies, whose employees occupy dangerous positions, are establishing pension systems?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think there are only two in the United States, the Illinois Central and the Pennsylvania Railroad. They are the only two that I know of.

Mr. LESSLER. It has got to start somewhere.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be, but it seems to me we are starting on a very high scale—three-fourths pay. If you examine the amounts paid by these companies as pensions they are insignificant. They are simply to keep people from going to the poorhouse. I understand the First National Bank of Chicago has established a similar system; but it makes every man in its service pay 3 per cent a year of his salary to create a fund. Then the fund goes to people who are retired after they reach a certain age. But the very fact that 99 per cent of the people in the commercial world do not carry out this principle shows that we would not do it under like circumstances in our private affairs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, remembering that we are here intrusted with the duty of voting other people's money away, is it possible that we should lavishly give money in every direction? We are acting in the capacity of trustees, and it is our duty to guard the Treasury and the money committed to our hands more zealously than if the money were our own. We all admire a man who becomes liberal and munificent in his gifts to people, because he is spending his own money, but we condemn him when the gifts are from the moneys of his ward. We also know that in cases of trust funds, even if our sympathy is extended, it is our duty absolutely to protect the funds, and in equity if we do not we are chargeable before a court to reimburse the fund out of our own money.

Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to extend longevity pay to the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, increasing their salaries 10, 20, 30, and 40 per cent, dependent upon their service of five, ten, fifteen, or twenty years, and to place them on the retired list after they reach the age of 64 years at a salary of $200 per month.

The pay of a captain who has been in the service twenty years will be $3,500 per annum and $576 for commutation of quarters. His compensation now is $2,500 and $480 for commutation of quarters, making a total of $2,980 per annum.

This bill does not provide for an increase of salary or pension for the sailors in the Revenue-Cutter Service, who receive an insignificant sum, but applies only to the officers, who are already receiving more compensation than they could earn in other or like pursuits.

Why should we, after giving men life positions at large salaries, then give them large pensions to retire upon? It seems that it is still true that "To them that have shall be given."

What is the service of these officers? I have not a word of complaint against them. They are probably doing what was given them to do, and doing it well, but when it is pretended that this is a "terrible service," that they are required to work "day and night" month after month, as was stated by the gentleman from New York, it is claiming too much. Ah, Mr. Chairman, that claim is not in accordance with the facts. There happens to be a little record sent by these very officers into the Treasury Department every year of the exact number of days and hours each one of these vessels is at work, and I happen to have the record of these vessels and want to call your attention to it.

I find, Mr. Chairman, that there is one boat—the Calumet, at New York—which was at anchor three hundred and twenty-five days, thirteen hours and twenty minutes in the year, and it was sailing, under way, thirty-nine days, ten hours, and forty minutes, and that is "the day and night business for month after month" that gentlemen of this House are trying to make out as such a burden to these men in this service.

Mr. LESSLER. I should like to say to the gentleman that the Calumet was up at Chicago and was removed February, 1900. The collector of the port of Chicago, with a petition from the leading merchants of Chicago, asked the Secretary of the Treasury to send her back.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I can not help that.

Mr. MANN. She was at New York when this report was made.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, we come to take another boat, the Gresham, at New York. The Gresham was 328 days in the year at anchor—328 days 9 hours and 10 minutes—and she was sailing 36 days 14 hours and 50 minutes. These are the gentlemen working day and night at all times. Take another New York boat, the Hudson. I find that the Hudson was at anchor 320 days 17 hours and 45 minutes during the year, and she was under way only 44 days 6 hours and 15 minutes. We will take the Manhattan, that is also stationed at New York.

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him—

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can not yield, my time is so limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Manhattan was at anchor 309 days 9 hours and 25 minutes, and she was under way 55 days 15 hours and 35 minutes.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the New York boats; but it is not only at New York. You take the boat at Wilmington, for instance. There is a boat that was at anchor 312 days out of the year. You take the boat at Boston, the Chandler. It was at anchor 339 days and 3 hours out of the year; and out of the list which is here collected there is not a single boat, not a single one of these vessels, but was at anchor 300 days in the year, and the number of sailing days was less than 65.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen, perhaps, did not have any orders that required them to do more work, and it was all right. I do not pretend to say but what they performed their duty well, and I do not mean to say that the officers are not good officers; but when men get up in this House and say that their service is exceedingly hard, and that they work day and night, month after month, that they go out at all hours, and that this service ought to be remunerated even more than the Navy, as one gentleman has said, it seems to me that these facts will not warrant such assertions.

This service of course is needed. It is a service that properly has been classed in the United States as a civil service. Since the foundation of the Government it has not been in the War Department nor in the Navy Department, but has been connected with the Treasury Department, and its very name—the Revenue-Cutter Service—indicates where it properly belongs. It is in the civil list at the present time, and there is no provision in this bill which transfers it to the Navy Department.

Now, when we extend the longevity pay, make a pension of $200 a month for this retired list, and justify it by claiming the service is something like that of the Navy, are we not putting ourselves in a condition that when this bill is passed nearly every other service of the Government will say, "Why, the Revenue-Cutter Service is surely a civil service; it is not in the Navy Department. You have already broken over the line in the one case, why can you not do it in ours?" The Life-Saving Service will then present their claims. It is a service that is a great deal more in need of an increase pay and of retirement pension than this service. Therefore I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this bill will be defeated. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I fully appreciate the feebleness of anything I may say in reference to this bill, especially as I know that I will be followed on the floor by the ablest orator and debater in the House, for whose judgment I have great respect and for whose ability I acknowledge that I am unworthy even to unloosen the latches of his shoes.

I warn the House against being carried away by the eloquence of appeal to be made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

It has been with diffidence that I have even advanced any views which I had upon this bill. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I may say that had I known a few days ago that I would meet the displeasure of the distinguished "constitutional expounder" of the law, I should have acknowledged my defeat and not made any speech or argument on the proposition at all. I am perfectly well aware that after the House has listened to the exposition by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] there remains nothing in the way of argument or facts to be submitted to the House. It is true that he has not devoted a year and a half of time, as he said I had, to the bill, but it is also true that with that wonderful eloquence and commanding brain of his, he only needs over night to glance at a subject to be familiar with its utmost details. [Laughter.]

A few days ago the gentleman was running from desk to desk in the House submitting an amendment to the bill which this morning he declares the bill was perfect without. The attitude of the gentleman from Maine, and my own attitude upon this bill reminds me of a story which my boy sometimes repeats: When the ark was landed on Mount Ararat and the animals under the supervision of Noah were leaving the ark, with all kinds of animals moving out of that vessel, the ant and the elephant happened to be passing out at the same time. And the great elephant from Maine said to the ant from Illinois, "Who are you a shoving off?" I am sorry that I have caused any disturbance in the masterful mind of the brilliant and eloquent gentleman who has expounded all constitutional questions upon this subject, as he has before upon the subject of the Porto Rico tariff and upon the seating of a Mormon from Utah. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, there are practically two propositions in the bill pending, and the whole solution of this question depends upon, I believe, in the opinion of the House, whether this bill shall be considered as commencing a civil pension list or whether it shall be considered as giving a pension list to men now in the military service of the Government. I have heard it stated three or four times by the advocates of this bill upon the floor of the House that the Revenue-Cutter Service was the first to fire a gun in the recent Spanish war. This statement, like many others upon the subject, is misleading and an error. The Revenue-Cutter Service did not fire the first gun at Manila. The first gun fired at Manila was fired through the negligence of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

When Dewey and his fleet were passing up the inlet to get into Manila Bay, with lights all concealed and the effort made to steal up without giving notice to the enemy of the approach, it was the revenue cutter there, the McCulloch, which gave notice to the enemy by permitting her smokestack to burn out. The revenue cutter McCulloch was in line, but the revenue cutter did not fire the first gun in the battle, if the revenue cutter's captain himself can be believed, whose report is printed in a report favoring this bill.

But I would not detract from the gallantry of these officers there. I have no doubt that the officers of the revenue cutter McCulloch at Manila were anxious to get into the fight. But they were not permitted to go into the fight; they were not in the battle at Manila Bay. They were kept on the outside as a dispatch boat, or an auxiliary boat.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the effort is made to show that in time of peace the Revenue-Cutter Service is one of great danger. This belief was exploited yesterday by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY], who said:

During the four months I have designated—December, January, February, and March—when it is sleeting and raining and freezing, these people are not even permitted to go into port except when necessary to make a report or to supply the ship with exhausted provisions or coal.

The gentleman from North Carolina stated that I had not been on a Revenue-Cutter vessel. He probably did not know whether I had or not. But whether I had or not has nothing to do with the question. The gentleman from North Carolina pretends to have great information concerning the doings of the Revenue-Cutter vessel located at his city, the city of Wilmington, N. C.; and he stated on the floor that this vessel was not permitted to go into port except when necessary to make a report or obtain supplies.

Now, I have here the report of the revenue cutter Algonquin, which is situated at Wilmington, N. C., and which is the vessel about which the gentleman was talking. This vessel, which, as the gentleman from North Carolina says, is not permitted to go into port except for the purpose of making a report or for supplies, has a record as to what it was doing during the months of December, January, February, and March. That record is on file in the office in the Treasury building, and I have here a compilation of what it shows. It seems that during December, 1900, this revenue cutter, which, according to the gentleman, is not permitted to go into port, had its anchor weighed three days and twenty hours; during January, 1901, it had its anchor weighed for a total of three days seventeen hours and twenty-five minutes; during the month of February, 1901, it had its anchor weighed for a total of four days five hours and five minutes; during the month of March it had its anchor weighed three days fifteen hours and twenty minutes. During the four months of which the gentleman speaks it had its anchor weighed not exceeding sixteen days.

Mr. BELLAMY. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BELLAMY. If the gentleman had referred to the RECORD of this morning, he would have seen that the instruction of which I spoke was issued November 26, 1901, so that the period of four months of which I spoke was December, 1901, and January, February, and March, 1902. If the gentleman has the record there, I ask him to read it.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have not the record for the last month or for this winter. But the gentleman stated that from his knowledge the Algonquin was performing the same duties a year ago that it has been performing this last winter. I asked him the question, and he said he knew it was so. During the winter before last this vessel during a term of four months was in service on the seas for a total of time expressed in days of sixteen days. That was the time when, according to the distinguished gentleman, this vessel was not permitted to go into port except to report or to obtain supplies.

And that is not all. There is no vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service which is occupied more than one-fourth of her time, if that much, in sailing on the seas or elsewhere. More than three-fourths of the time all of these vessels are at anchor. But, more than that, the whole claim made here in behalf of the Revenue-Cutter Service is that it is doing arduous duty and dangerous duty, succoring vessels or shipwrecked sailors upon the seas. Yet the very letter of instructions, which the gentleman from North Carolina has put in the RECORD, directs the Revenue-Cutter officers not to remain at sea in a gale or in a fog. The direction to the Revenue-Cutter officer is to go into port when the weather is foggy or when there is a gale.

But we have a record of all the vessels which this service has assisted. When this bill was before the House a year ago, I inserted in the RECORD a copy of the reports of the assistance rendered by the revenue cutters in 1897, which was the last report issued by this Department and printed.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Has the gentleman any statistics showing the length of time during the last year that the battle ships of the United States were at anchor?

Mr. MANN. I have not. But I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the solution of this question is not dependent upon the Navy. If there are abuses in the Navy they can be corrected in the proper way. The proper way is not by passing a bill to increase the abuses in another branch of the service.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he had put in the RECORD a list giving the service of all these cutters?

Mr. MANN. I did not so state.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Excuse me; I did not quite get your statement. Will you please repeat it?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has examined what I put in the RECORD, and his question is futile and idle.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman will excuse me—

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is taking up my time excusing himself.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I understood you to say that you were going to place in the RECORD some additional reports.

Mr. MANN. I would be glad to place in the RECORD everything which the Revenue-Cutter Service has done, and I dare the gentleman to put in the RECORD, as a representative of the Revenue-Cutter Service interests, what duty it has performed during the past year. Although this bill was before Congress a year ago, although the same opposition was then made, they have not dared to publish the report of their doings. Now, it is manifestly impossible for one member of the House to obtain all this information, but I have obtained some information in reference to this, which I inserted in the RECORD a few days ago.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman excuse me?

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not detain me too much.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will hand you the report of the Woodbury for last year if you would like it. Do you care for it?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will leave it here, if I have time to examine it I will. The gentleman is endeavoring to take a very unfair advantage.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Excuse me; I am not.

Mr. MANN. With that eminent fairness which always characterizes him of trying to get a gentleman on the floor with his time limited to read something which he holds in his hand! Why did not the gentleman, if he wanted to show fairness, submit the paper to me before, and I would have examined it when I had time?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I shall not bother you with it now.

Mr. MANN. Oh, you will not bother me with it at all. [Laughter.] It is impossible for the gentleman to bother me with it, notwithstanding his elephantine intellect. Now, Mr. Chairman, the report of the committee in favor of this bill states that this Revenue-Cutter Service assisted vessels last year which, with their cargoes—I do not want the gentleman from Maine to think that I am personal in any way—

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, that is all right. I am perfectly willing to have you personal, if you desire to be. I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. MANN. The report of the committee on this bill states that the Revenue-Cutter Service assisted vessels last year which, with their cargoes, amounted to a total of $5,125,000, and it is the intention of this report to show that the Revenue-Cutter Service was valuable, because it saved property to the value of $5,125,000. Now, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] says that his vessel, the Algonquin, is out cruising all the time, in sleet and rain and freezing weather, for the purpose of rescuing distressed vessels. I have in the RECORD a compilation, not selected because they were favorable to my side of the question, but I selected all cases where the value of the vessel and cargo amounted to as much as $75,000, and I have shown in the RECORD out of the $5,000,000, which they claim was saved, the entire circumstances relating to about four and a half million dollars.

The only case where the vessel from Wilmington, the Algonquin, represented by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] appears is in the rescue or assistance rendered to the vessel Star Cross on June 29 and 30, 1901. The captain reports: "Light-house in plain sight; sea smooth." There was no difficulty, no sleet, no rain, no freezing weather. The only case occurred in June, with a smooth sea, and then the vessel helped some tugs or wrecking vessels to pull a vessel off where it had struck the shore or struck bottom. I wish to call the attention of the House and I ask the gentlemen, if they wish to take the trouble to examine each one of these cases—I call attention to the fact that there is not a single one where the Revenue-Cutter Service incurred any danger; not one. There are but few cases. The first case they report on the condition of the weather and tide: "State of tide and sea: Smooth sea; gentle, southerly swell."

What danger they were undergoing! The next case they report, "Smooth sea." The next case occurred in a harbor, where the sea could not be other than smooth. The next case occurred within a harbor, and consisted only in sending some men on shore to arrest a man whom they claimed had mutinied. The next case, "State of tide and sea: Flood tide, smooth sea." The next case occurred in San Francisco Harbor, where the sea was smooth. The next case occurred in the Yukon River, where the sea was smooth, and this case that I have referred to now is but a sample of the assistance rendered by the Revenue-Cutter Service, so far as assisting vessels is concerned, and I propose—it is very short—to read to the House the detailed statement of the casualty, showing the nature and extent of service rendered by the revenue cutter in that instance:

Vessel assisting, Nunivak.
Vessel assisted, steamer Leon.
Date, June 22, 1901.
Value of vessel with cargo, $2,600,000.

Here is one-half of the property that was saved in the year, and you would suppose from the report that this was saved by arduous labor and at the risk of life on the part of the Revenue Cutter officers and men.

Detailed report: Arriving at Aphoon, mouth of Yukon River, June 22, 1901, found steamer Leon short of provisions for passengers and crew, she having been detained here a week by ice and her supplies exhausted. No prospect of ice clearing up for several days. None of the other vessels could assist her, as they, too, were running short, and no supplies within reach on the river. Loaned her from ship's rations 800 pounds flour, 50 pounds coffee, 72 pounds butter, to be replaced in kind at St. Michael.

Now, I grant that it was a desirable thing that the revenue cutter there should loan these provisions to this vessel Leon. I do not criticize them for what they did, but I insist that there was no arduous duty, no danger, no risk of life in loaning 800 pounds of flour to a vessel, and when they claim that they saved valuable property or assisted a vessel, the value of which amounted to $2,600,000, it is utterly misleading.

The next report was in the Yukon River also, where they loaned in that case 200 pounds of flour, and take credit for saving property to the value of $75,000. There is not a single case in these reports, which are taken from the head of the list, embracing $4,500,000 out of the $5,000,000—there is not a single case where a rowboat could have been turned over by the waves of the sea.

Oh, yes; valuable service! I do not believe that anybody can find out what the Revenue-Cutter Service actually does, outside of boarding vessels and examining their papers. It seems to me that they do not show any arduous labor in time of peace which entitles them to be placed on the pension roll.

As many men have been killed in a year—during the last fiscal year—in the Railway Mail Service in the discharge of their duties as have been killed in the Revenue-Cutter Service during forty years of time. More men are killed in the Life-Saving Service in a year than have been killed in the Revenue-Cutter Service in forty years' time. As many men lost their lives in the Life-Saving Service a few days ago as have been killed in the Revenue-Cutter Service in forty years of time. More men lost their lives in the Railway Mail Service in a wreck down here a few days ago than have lost their lives in the Revenue-Cutter Service in forty years' time. I do not say that that is any reflection upon the Revenue-Cutter Service. Far from it. They have no occasion to come into great danger.

But, oh, they say, in time of war! Mr. Chairman, the Revenue-Cutter Service is not a fighting force in time of war. It is simply a dispatch service. It is not on the firing line in time of war.

Mr. MAHON. They can be sent there at any time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; they could be sent there, but they are not sent there. They do not receive injury. Why, here is a case, probably, of great gallantry at Cardenas, when Ensign Bagley and those on his naval vessel were being shot to pieces, when half of the men on the naval vessel were killed; it is true that a revenue cutter, the Hudson, pulled the naval vessel away. It is true also that half the men on the naval vessel were killed, and that no man had his skin scratched on the revenue cutter.

Mr. MAHON. They must have been pretty close when they pulled the boat off.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania would suggest that it may have been an accident. It is a peculiar accident that not an officer has been injured in the Revenue-Cutter Service in time of war for many years.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. How many men were killed in the naval battle at Santiago?

Mr. MANN. I believe one only, but a number were injured, and no revenue cutter was in the fight.

Mr. MAHON. How many at Manila?

Mr. MANN. There were several injured there, I think, and I believe there was one killed. One died of apoplexy. But no revenue cutter was in the fight at Manila.

Mr. MAHON. The first boat that went in was a revenue cutter.

Mr. MANN. That shows that the gentleman is not informed as to history. I have not time to argue about facts of history.

Mr. MAHON. A revenue cutter went in to look for the torpedoes.

Mr. MANN. The first boat that went into Manila was not a revenue cutter.

Mr. MAHON. The McCulloch.

Mr. MANN. It was not the McCulloch. The Revenue-Cutter Service is not a fighting force in time of war. But, Mr. Chairman, if it were, its officers would be no more than the volunteers. The State which I represent in part had more than 800 men in the Navy as volunteers during the Spanish war. They are not put upon the retired list. They went into the Navy, losing their positions and salaries at home. They are not asking to be placed upon the retired list. They were in the fighting ships; they were not on dispatch boats; and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others have constituents who were in the Navy, fighting in the Spanish war, and they are not asking to be put upon the retired list, and if they were the request would not be granted.

Mr. MAHON. Some of them have been put on the pension roll.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but nobody has been put on the pension roll on account of being injured in the Revenue-Cutter Service. There was no officer injured during this Spanish war, injured in the service. There were two who died from apoplexy, but none were injured, and if injured they would have been entitled to pension.

Now, Congress has since recognized anything which the Revenue-Cutter Service did during the war with Spain. They retired the captain of the McCulloch at full captain's pay. They gave a gold medal for the gallantry displayed by Lieutenant Newcomb at Cardenas. And now the other officers of that service are here endeavoring unjustly and unfairly to fatten on the deeds of those two men. A letter has been read by this distinguished son of Maine from the Secretary of the Navy.

This letter says that this service ought to be put under the Navy. I agree with that. I believe it ought to be a part of the Navy. It absolutely has nothing to do at present. I would be willing to transfer this service—men, officers, and vessels—to the Navy, where it might be made a part of a system. But here is a bureau intended to be a new navy of itself; and when Secretary Long says in the letter read that this is the first step toward putting it in the Navy I beg to disagree with him. If this bill passes, the Revenue-Cutter Service will for all time remain by itself, enlarging its force, increasing its number of vessels and its officers, but it will never go to the Navy. It will, on the other hand, be a handle for the passage of a civil pension list for every branch of the service.

Why, gentlemen, we have to meet that question soon. There is a committee in Washington engaged here for some time preparing a bill for introduction in this Congress to put a retired list into every branch of the public service. It claims that they have responses from more than 20,000 Government employees. Now, I put it to you fairly. You know very well that if this bill passes it passes because of the insistence here of the men and officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service itself. If Congress can not resist 215 Revenue-Cutter officers, what chance is there to resist 20,000 or more employees of the Government? There is no man in this House but has Government employees in his district. I do not say that a retired list is improper. I have been inclined to the opinion that a proper retired list or a civil pension list might be a good thing. I think that every man who loses his life or is injured in the Life-Saving Service or in the Railway Mail Service ought to be covered by the pension list.

I am not sure but what the old men in the Treasury ought to be put on the retired list. But I would never propose a civil pension list that begins with $200 a month, as this does. Here is a proposition commencing a civil-service pension list at $200 a month. If we can not draw the line between the Navy and the Revenue-Cutter Service, how will it be possible to draw the line between the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Life-Saving Service? How will it be possible to draw the line between the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Railway Mail Service? There is such small gradation or degrees of gradation between the different services of the Government that once you place one branch of the service on a pension list you will have commenced that which must end with all branches of the service. I appeal to this House to be careful before it commences a civil pension list. There is no end; when you open the door it is open for all the employees of the Government for all time. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if the time of the opponents of the bill has been entirely exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. HEPBURN. How much remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-five minutes remains to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to congratulate the gentleman from Illinois upon the condition of mind when he is prepared to express disapprobation because a larger number of American citizens have not been slaughtered in war. It is an unhappy frame of mind, I would suggest to the gentleman, if I was permitted; and I am glad to believe that there are but few of his colleagues that sympathize with him in the expressions that he has made in that part of his speech.

We have wandered a long way, Mr. Chairman, from the real questions presented in this bill. We have a service known as the Revenue-Cutter Service. It consists of a little more than 200 officers, and something more than 1,100 enlisted men, of about 40 vessels armed with seventy-odd guns. These vessels with their armament, modern in character, fully up to date, presents an infinitely more formidable naval force than the Government of the United States had at the date of 1835. There never was a time up to that date—in war or peace—when the naval power of the United States was so formidable as is this much contemned and sneered service—the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The propositions of this bill are mainly to place the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service more nearly upon a par with the other branch of the maritime naval service. It proposes to do so by the reviving of an old law relating to the relative rank of the officers of the two services, made necessary in part because of a change in the name of certain of the naval officers, and with the addition of one grade to the Revenue-Cutter Service since that enactment was made.

It next provides for the retirement of these officers on a par with the officers of the Army, not with the officers of the Navy. There is a distinction and a broad one, and the Revenue-Cutter officers and their friends have not asked that the more valuable retirement provision of the Navy should be made applicable to them. These officers, if retired, will be retired in the grade in which they served at the time of retirement. Not so with the naval officer. He is retired in a grade above that that he holds at the date of his retirement, and he has the pay and emoluments of that higher grade.

Again, officers of the Navy may be retired at least four grades—captains, commanders, lieutenant-commanders, and certain lieutenants may be at any time retired, not after thirty years of service, not after forty years of service, not after they have arrived at the age of 64, but at any time. Under the provisions of an act that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] voted for only a little while ago they may be retired. Again, an officer of the Navy may be retired although the cause of disability has had no relation whatever to his service, and although it may be the result of his own vicious habits. Not so with the Army or with the retirement that is proposed to be given to these officers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are some of the objections made to this bill? The first fifteen minutes occupied by the opponents of it—by the gentleman from Illinois—were devoted to this complaint: The bill ought not even to be considered, because the Revenue-Cutter Service have not made that character of report that the act of 1898 required them to make. The act of 1898 requires no report from any officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service. It requires a report of expenditures from the Secretary of the Treasury. The gentleman knew why that was not made. He had the information why its failure had occurred. He had it at the time that he made that complaint and this charge of criminality against the Revenue-Cutter Service. He said that it was because they dared not make that report; because they were afraid to make it. He had, from the Secretary of the Treasury, a letter stating why it was not made and explaining why the error occurred—a true statement, that evinced no dereliction of duty, a mere mistake, and yet it was such a one as passed the scrutiny of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, not friendly to this bill, who went on making the appropriations just as though it had been made, with all the information that was needed.

The gentleman from Illinois was unwilling to support this bill because he had not information. Your attention has been called to the year and a half that he expended in this vain search for knowledge, and yet he knows, and I know, because he was compelled by his own sense of fairness ultimately to acknowledge it, that all the information possessed by anyone was laid before him and that he was furnished by an intelligent clerk with the books of the Department, with every facility for acquiring all of the knowledge that he could want with regard to an intelligent understanding of the relation of this body of men to the Government of the United States. The Secretary says that he was misled by a marginal note on the page opposite the section requiring this report; that he understood that it was a detailed statement of estimates that was to be made. That is all there is in that.

The gentleman then found fault, and seriously insisted that this bill ought not to pass, because there was not a list of the employees of the Revenue-Cutter Service on the Blue Book. He regarded that as an offense that they had omitted to put their names there, notwithstanding that most American citizens are glad to have their names there, and rather, I am informed, seek the opportunity. But when we come to investigate we find that the names are there. Everyone connected with the Revenue-Cutter Service is found where it should be, under its appropriate head, on that Blue Book. That ought to remove the gentleman's second objection.

The third one that was urged is, and that one was more strenuously urged by the gentleman from Tennessee, that this is to establish a civil pension list. That depends, Mr. Chairman, upon the relation that this service bears to the General Government. Is it civil in its character or is it military? The gentleman from Pikes Peak, perched pleasantly upon the summit of that vast mountain, taking in that comprehensive view that from that point he may survey the military and naval establishment of the United States, does not hesitate to say that it is civil. [Laughter.] Then my friend from Tennessee, from his home by the side of that magnificent spring in Huntsville, so wonderfully adapted to nautical pursuits [laughter]—

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to lose my identity entirely. The gentleman ought to know that I am from Alabama.

Mr. HEPBURN. I intended to compliment the gentleman first, but now since my attention is called to it I will compliment the State of Alabama by making the correction. [Applause.] The gentleman from that beautiful spring so adapted to nautical pursuits has determined that this is a civil service, that there is nothing military about it; and both of the gentlemen in furtherance of their arguments have said that one of the reasons why they came to that conclusion was that the Revenue-Cutter Service never fought except in time of war. [Laughter.] Why, my God, my friends, when would you have them fight? [Laughter.] Do you want them so organized as is my friend from Illinois, who is ready to fight all the time and everything? [Laughter.] When I have observed that peculiarity upon the part of my friend from Illinois I have thought that if the theory of transmigration of souls is true and he hereafter appeared as a later incarnation, he would have the semblance of a mule with four hind legs all in active operation. [Great laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen fight only when the other soldiery of the United States fight. And in time of peace they are put to other duties.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will my friend—

Mr. HEPBURN. I would rather the gentleman from Tennessee would not interrupt me.

Several MEMBERS. Alabama! [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. My apologies all around are duplicated. Without disparagement of our naval establishment, in which we all take pride and for which we are all willing to do all that may be necessary to make it reach up to the highest standard of completeness, what do they do in times of peace? The objection which these hypercritical gentlemen make with regard to the Revenue-Cutter Service being pacific in times of peace can be made against the naval establishment much more forcibly. After hearing these authorities, the gentleman from Colorado, and the gentleman from Alabama, and the gentleman from Illinois, who know nothing about the subject, vociferating so earnestly that these Revenue-Cutter officers are a civic body, I would like to call attention for a moment to the opinion of a man who knows something about the subject. I read from a report of a Secretary of the Navy—not of the Treasury, but of the Navy:

The service of the cruising cutters is strictly naval.

Will the gentleman from Colorado listen to that?

The duties of the officers are not distinguishable in kind from those of the naval officers.

Will the gentleman from Alabama note that?

The discipline is naval, as far as naval discipline can be carried on outside of the Naval Department. The cruising cutters carry armaments of from one to four guns. The crews are armed with small arms. Broadside guns are furnished by the Navy Department. In time of war these vessels have always been pressed into the naval service.

Will the gentleman from Illinois note that? This is from one of the most distinguished of all the naval secretaries, in my judgment, that we have ever had; a man to whose efforts we owe largely the Navy we have to-day; a man whose influence, more than that of any other living man, has made our naval establishment the splendid feature that it is of our civilization.

A MEMBER. Who was he?

Mr. HEPBURN. That was Secretary Chandler. I now read from the report of another Secretary of the Navy:

Now, as I understand, the objections of officers of the Navy to this bill—

A bill largely similar to this—they have come to be practically merely sentimental. In the first place, they say it is not a military service. My answer to that is that whether it is a military service or not depends entirely or very largely on the officer who commands the ship. It is certainly a military force. It has commanding officers, inferior officers, and men—privates who are subordinate. It is organized; its organization is a military organization.

Why, sir, at the very beginning of the career of the cadets they take a military examination. So far as the studies are concerned, before they enter the service they must have those attainments that will entitle them to the prospects of success. Throughout their whole two years at school the studies are of that character. The higher mathematics—all that pertains to drill—everything that they study is in its nature fit for military training and military service.

Every one of these vessels of later construction is armed. Every day there is a military drill of the crews. They are drilled in the use of the cutlass, the use of the revolver, the use of the carbine, the use of the broadside. It is all military, and they have been able to show with what alacrity they can assume the sterner duties of war.

I was sorry to hear my friend from Illinois attempt to belittle the service of these men. It is not so comprehensive, it has not been so broad a school, as are the performances of the Army or the Navy. Why? Because of the limitations of the number of men and of ships. But everywhere where they have had opportunity they have reached up to the full measure of valor that is expected of American soldiery.

Reference has been made to the affair at Cardenas, and sneeringly to the part performed by the Revenue-Cutter Service on that occasion. What was that? Three vessels were sent in shoreward for a purpose. They came within the range of powerful masked batteries. One of the vessels was disabled. Her commander was either wounded or killed. The next officer in command was disabled. More than half of her crew were weltering on her decks in their own blood. She was in the extremest peril, drifting inward toward the battery and on to the shoals.

There was another naval vessel with her. The little flotilla consisted of two naval vessels and one revenue cutter. I have no criticism to make upon the conduct of one of those naval vessels, yet when the time of trial came, when the time of rescue came it was the Hudson, the revenue cutter, that responded, while the others sought safety at sea. [Applause.] And there, as the Secretary of the Navy tells the story, for more than an hour, in the very vortex of that terrible fire, this vessel labored to secure a hawser to the naval vessel, in order to carry her out, and after securing it the hawser parted, and again the labor had to be undergone, and for an hour this condemned revenue cutter stood there at her post, every man doing his duty, and finally she brought to safety the naval officers and men. [Loud applause.]

I say that in all the records of the last war, in all the naval stories that I have ever read, there is not one to be found where more of heroism was exhibited than by these officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service; and, Mr. Chairman, on all occasions wherever they have been called upon, they have met the full measure of duty.

Now, the studies of all the officers are military. Military tactics are taught them and they have a daily military drill. They wear the uniform of the Navy. Their ships are armed as are naval vessels. They have all the skill that the naval vessels have, and on all occasions when the Navy is engaged in war, they are engaged in war, and yet gentlemen set up the pretense that this is a civil employment, and that these men are civil officers.

Mr. Chairman, it stands to reason that these officers, man for man, are more valuable than are the naval officers. I do not hesitate to make that assertion. They spring from the same source; they are our American boys; they have the same culture, except in perhaps some of those things that many of us would say were not necessary to fit them for purely military duty. They have the same drill, the same instruction as soldiers; they are familiar with the same kind of weapons. They have all of the experience that the others have in times of war, and then they are kept upon the sea, the gentleman from Illinois to the contrary notwithstanding. The naval officer has his tour of sea duty and then a like period on shore. These men are always upon the sea, they are always upon the sea when seamanship is most needed, and when opportunities are ripest for seamanship to be acquired.

It is when the storm comes, I say; when there is danger along the coast, I say; when the naval vessel seeks the security of the port if she can, that these men go out to rescue life and to render assistance. It is in the storm that they are bred and that they study their seamanship; and so I say that, man for man, in my judgment, when the officer has reached the age of 40 or 45, all of the probabilities are in favor of the Revenue-Cutter officer being the better, the more experienced, the wiser, and the safer navigator and commander of his ship. I do not think that it ought to be contended that this is a civil service. Gentlemen have said that the title of this bill is deceptive; that it is said to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, while there was nothing to be found in its provisions except provisions promoting the interests of certain of the membership of that service.

Mr. Chairman, there are to-day 14 officers who have served long and faithfully in this service who have reached the age that brings incapacity, or who are suffering now from the vicissitudes of service to that degree that they can not perform their duties. They can not be retired. We are in the condition that twice before has confronted the Congress. Some eight or ten years ago, or perhaps a little longer, it was found that there were nearly 20 of these officers, all filling the highest ranks, that were incapable of service. One of them, I remember, was then 84 years of age. Several of them had passed the age of 70. Yet there was no method by which they could be replaced, and so an act was passed limited to them, however, that authorized their retirement. Four, five, or six years ago the same condition was found to exist, and again an act was passed so that perhaps 15 more were retired, and now there are 23 men, I think, on this retired list.

There are fourteen or sixteen who are to-day in the condition that their comrades were at the period of this legislation. Will it not promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service to relieve it of those incapacitated men? Will it not promote the service to give promotion to those that remain, to let them see that there is some hope of advancement in the service of their choice? Does not the doing of justice to one stimulate a little more, a good deal, perhaps, to more efficient service, to more of zeal. We are apt to take deeper interest in those who have an interest in us and manifest it by good deeds than those who do not, and these men would only be human if some such thought sometimes crossed their minds, so I can see that there is in this bill provision for promoting the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and that the bill is not deceptive and that it ought to pass.

I have taken the liberty of reading the opinions of some gentlemen whose opinions were worth while. As early as 1872 Mr. Boutwell, then the Secretary of the Treasury, advocated the passage of a somewhat similar bill to this. In 1873 Secretary Richardson recommended the same. In 1876 Secretary Morrill made a somewhat lengthy report and argument in favor of the passage of a relief measure of this kind. In 1881 Mr. Folger made the same recommendation; and right here I would like to put the opinion of a Secretary of the Treasury whose duty it was to know against the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois on this subject:

In view of the constant activity required of them in time of peace as well as war and of the hazard involved in their service—activity and hazard involved in their service, their cruising being mostly upon the shallow waters and dangerous courses near the coast, subjecting them during the inclement winter season to extreme hardship and danger, their claim to pensions seems to be well founded.

Will the gentleman please note the words I have taken the liberty to emphasize?—

Ah, how these adroit and cunning fellows of the service have pulled the wool over the eyes of the Secretaries, and how grateful some benighted Secretary will be to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for having devoted his eighteen months to unearthing all these frauds and bringing these reptiles of the sea into full view!

But again, Mr. Folger, not content with his argument in 1881, repeated what he had to say in 1882, and then in 1894 Mr. Carlisle had something to say on the subject. I do not know whether that distinguished gentleman is an authority upon the other side of the House now or not, but he discussed this subject. He devoted considerable time to it, occupying more than a page in his report, in which he used this language:

There is no branch of the public service which in time of peace requires such continuous, laborious, and hazardous service as this, nor is there any other branch in which the compensation is so inadequate. The duties imposed upon the officers engaged in this service often subject them to great exposure and hardship, and require the exercise of a high order of skill and discretion, and it is therefore of the first importance that the mental and physical qualifications of the force should not be impaired by the retention of old, infirm, or otherwise disabled officers.

Well, my Democratic brethren, listen to that! This ought to be good authority.

Mr. Chairman, if I can not succeed in attracting the attention of members on the other side to the utterances of John G. Carlisle, I wish you would try and keep order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Gentlemen standing in the aisles will kindly take their seats.

Mr. HEPBURN. Again, in 1896, Mr. Carlisle called attention to this branch of the public service.

Mr. Gage, in 1897, called the attention of Congress to a bill substantially similar to this in his report, occupying more than a page of that report. Again, in 1898, and again, in 1899, he devotes two pages to the subject. Again, in the report of 1900, he devotes a page and a half to it, and again, in 1901, most earnestly calls the attention of Congress to the subject.

Two Presidents of the United States have urged upon Congress the performance of this duty. President McKinley especially challenged the attention of this body and the other to the report of the Secretary, and indorsed the arguments that he made, reiterating his recommendation and doing all that he could to challenge attention to the subject.

Gentlemen, it is and has been a vexed question. It is a justice that has been long delayed. Yet I take it it is none the less just because we have failed to respond to this demand of duty. I have no hesitation in affirming that these men are entitled to this tardy justice, that they are entitled to it now, and that the measure of justice we propose to mete out to them is that which this House has meted out to others situated as they are with no more of demand, with no more of the pleadings of justice in their behalf. I think that we owe it to our old comrades. There are to-day in the naval service of the United States, I am told, ten veterans who served in naval warfare during the war of the rebellion. All ten of those men are to-day rear-admirals in the Navy of the United States.

There are 30 men or more now in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, no one of them ranking higher than a captain, and not more than four or five drawing half the pay of the admirals. The one survivor of that most memorable of naval battles that took place in Hampton Roads in 1862 between the Monitor and the Merrimac is now in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States. His comrade died only a little while ago, and was one of those survivors who stood by the side of Worden, directing the movements of his ship when he received his disabling wound, the one for all these years a rear-admiral, the other simply a lieutenant and captain in the Cutter Service.

Gentlemen, it is unworthy of the American Congress, and I ask you now to right the wrong so long permitted, to bring about that justice so long delayed, by passing this most meritorious and just bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed by the order of the House for general debate having expired, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the passage of this act the commissioned officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be as follows: Captains, first lieutenants, second lieutenants, third lieutenants, captain of engineers, chief engineers, first assistant engineers, second assistant engineers, and constructor; and the captain of engineers, chief engineers, first assistant engineers, second assistant engineers shall have the rank of captain, first, second, and third lieutenants, respectively; and the constructor shall have the rank of first lieutenant.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1, after the word "lieutenant," in line 11, by adding the following: "Provided, however, That there shall be no increase in the number of officers upon the active list over the present number in each class or grade."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HEPBURN. I think there is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the amendment?

Mr. MANN. I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will vote with you for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause.

Mr. HEPBURN. I raise the point of order against that motion, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. That would leave the bill in an entirely incomplete form. The motion to strike out all after the enacting clause must be an entirety—the bill—and not a single section of the bill. That is one of the methods of terminating the consideration of a bill, one of the parliamentary methods, to strike out all after the enacting clause. That ends the measure; and the motion is used only for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. My motion was to strike out all after the enacting clause.

Mr. HEPBURN. I know; and that does not subserve that parliamentary purpose.

Mr. MANN. That does not subserve that parliamentary purpose and is not intended to subserve that parliamentary purpose. Does the Chairman wish to hear me further on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. A motion to strike out the enacting clause under the rules and practice of the House is, if adopted, fatal to the bill. It is expressly declared in Rule XXIII, section 7, that such a motion, if carried, shall be considered equivalent to the rejection of the bill. The proposed amendment, however, is to strike out not the enacting clause, but that portion of the section or paragraph following the enacting clause. What effect the striking out of that part of the paragraph will have upon the bill is for the committee, and not for the Chair, to determine. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not see why this section is put in the bill. There is no change, as I understand, made as to the number of Revenue-Cutter officers in section 1. It does not destroy the harmony of the bill at all if it is stricken out. It simply, so far as I can see, reenacts the existing law, which now provides who Revenue-Cutter officers shall be. Now, here is a section, and I invite the attention of gentlemen to the fact, the only change and the only purpose of any change in this section is to enact the present law, is to take the engineers out of the engineer force and make them line officers.

Now, I have no objection to that in one respect. I voted for the naval personnel bill in the House, supposing that that was the only thing in the bill. My information is, and whether it is correct or not I do not know, that that bill has not been a good thing for the Navy; and if this section is enacted into law as to the Revenue-Cutter Service of the country it simply means that the warrant machinists and the machinists do all the engineer work and the engineer officers on a line with the other officers attend to the duties of the other officers. If there is any need of engineer officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and I take it there is, then we ought to leave these engineer officers.

There is no use, unless it is a purely social distinction, in saying that the chief engineer shall have a certain rank with the other officers, that the chief engineer shall have rank as first lieutenant. What is the meaning of that part of the bill? The engineer officer would not be placed in command of a vessel. What is the object? In the bill there is no other change of existing law. This simply defines who the officers shall be in the Revenue-Cutter Service. The law now provides for that. The amendment which has already been adopted to the bill, if the section remains, provides that there shall be no increased number of officers. That section as read would have granted an unlimited increased number of officers. I can see no reason for keeping this section in the bill at all. It does not destroy or affect the harmony of the bill in any other respect whatever.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the section of the Revised Statutes which provides for Revenue-Cutter officers provides that each boat shall have one captain, one first lieutenant, etc. This does not change that law, so far as that is concerned, but this will preserve in some degree the symmetry in the law. It provides in one single statute all there is in the Revised Statutes in reference to the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MANN. How does it affect the symmetry of the bill? I do not know.

Mr. SHERMAN. It puts into this one statute all the law relating to the officers which is contained in sections 2749, 2950, and 3059 of the Revised Statutes. It puts them altogether into this one act. It consolidates the law.

Mr. MANN. You mean it simply takes two consecutive sections of the Revised Statutes and puts them in one?

Mr. SHERMAN. It does that, and does more.

Mr. MANN. I would like to understand, if I may, what more it does, if the gentleman can inform the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to strike out all the first section after the enacting clause.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said commissioned officers shall rank as follows: Captains with majors in the Army and lieutenant-commanders in the Navy; first lieutenants with captains in the Army and lieutenants in the Navy; second lieutenants with first lieutenants in the Army and lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy; third lieutenants with second lieutenants in the Army and ensigns in the Navy; Provided, That whenever forces of the Navy and Revenue-Cutter Service shall be serving in cooperation pursuant to law (section 2757, Revised Statutes), the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall rank as follows: Captains with and next after lieutenant-commanders in the Navy; first lieutenants with and next after lieutenants in the Navy; second lieutenants with and next after lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy; third lieutenants with and next after ensigns in the Navy.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I am advised by the committee that they withdraw the amendment they suggested, and I now offer in lieu of that an amendment that is drawn to accomplish the same purpose, but in different language. It was drawn by Admiral Evans, of the Navy, and therefore is more satisfactory to the objections of the Navy from a technical point of view.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the bill does not show any committee amendment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then there is no necessity of withdrawing any amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine offers the following amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 2 the following:

"Provided further, That no provision of this act shall be construed as giving any officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service military or other control at any time over any vessel, officer, or man of the naval service, nor shall any naval officer exercise such military or other control over any vessel, officer, or man of the Revenue-Cutter Service, except by the direction of the President."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine showed me the amendment which has been offered, but since he showed it to me I would like to call his attention and the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to a fact. This amendment is a concession, as I understand it, and provides that a Revenue-Cutter officer shall not have command of a naval vessel where the naval vessel and the Revenue-Cutter vessel cooperate. Would not it, on the same line, be advisable to insert after the word "Navy" the word "Army," because this bill would place the military force of the Government under the control of the Revenue-Cutter officer if they happen to be serving in cooperation, as might be the case?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I am not thoroughly advised as to the relations that may exist between the two services. Admiral Evans suggested that this would be entirely sufficient for the Navy.

Mr. MANN. Yes, as to the Navy; but the gentleman understands the reason of making the relative ranks of the Army and Navy is to determine who shall have command when they cooperate. Here is a proposition that will leave the Revenue-Cutter officer in command if he cooperates with the captain of the Army.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So far as I am advised, I do not know that anyone interested in or representing the Army establishment has made any complaint or raised any objection to this. I do not undertake to say that there may not be something in the gentleman's point.

Mr. MANN. Nobody has spoken to me from the Navy on the subject.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine a question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Very well.

Mr. LACEY. As I read the amendment, it prevents any officer of the Navy taking command over a revenue cutter unless directed to do so by the President.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is correct.

Mr. LACEY. So if the revenue cutter came into line, he would have to wait and telegraph the President of the United States before the Navy could use that ship in evolutions about to be performed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The Revenue-Cutter Service does not cooperate with the Navy except under the direction of the President of the United States in the first instance. So the condition suggested by the gentleman from Iowa is not likely to occur.

Mr. LACEY. We already have a law for that. Here is a provision where if a Revenue-Cutter vessel comes to the aid of a naval officer you make the proposition that the naval officer shall not take command over the revenue cutter unless you get the direct action of the President of the United States upon that proposition. Now, it seems to me that this is an unnecessary limitation. If we are going to put the cutters upon the open water with the Navy because they are needed in war, why should they not be commanded by officers of the Navy with whom they are to cooperate?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I move to strike out the last word in order to answer the gentleman from Iowa. I will say that this amendment, not in the precise language that this is drawn, was submitted to the Secretary of the Navy, and was approved of by the Secretary of the Navy, also by Judge-Advocate-General Lemly, and takes care of the conditions referred to by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is there any desire on the part of the friends of the bill to place the captain of the Army under the direction of the captain of the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. What harm would there be in inserting after the word "Navy" the word "Army."

Mr. HEPBURN. Why should that be done? Can the gentleman point to an instance where the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Army ever served together, so as to bring about the possible collision that is spoken of? In point of fact, this is simply a matter of sentiment. There has never been, I am told, a conflict of any character with regard to who should command when revenue cutters and naval vessels were serving together. During a hundred years that occasion has never happened. Yet for the purpose of yielding to a sentiment we have consented to this provision. As appeared from an extract which I read, and which gentlemen will remember, there was some sentiment on the part of certain naval officers on this subject; but there never has been a contention of any kind with reference to the Army. The gentleman from Illinois is simply encumbering the bill by undertaking to provide for a condition that never has been heard of and probably in the nature of things can not be heard of until our Army becomes webfooted. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Now, I think the gentleman, if I can have his attention, will acknowledge his mistake. There has never been, up to the present time, any condition of existing law which could possibly place a Revenue-Cutter officer in command over an Army officer. But here we have a bill which, if enacted into law, will say that a Revenue-Cutter officer shall rank with certain Army officers. That provision might place the Revenue-Cutter officer in command. Such a condition never has occurred before, because it could not under the law as it has heretofore existed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I do not believe that the careful attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the wording and force of this bill ought to be accepted by the friends of the bill. I take it that he will not vote for the bill, and that his care and attention and zeal as to the precise meaning of the language is not exactly in the direction of a fatherly interest for the outcome of this legislation. I presume that if we confirm all his suggestions he will yet vote against the bill upon the great question that he has been fighting about here for three or four days. I think the friends of the bill had better amend it as they see fit, if they have sufficient numbers to pass the bill, and take the responsibility for its passage as they want it, and not as some of its enemies want it.

Mr. MANN. I do not expect the friends of this bill to insert anything in it because I want it; but if I could appeal to the reason of some gentlemen here, except the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who probably will not be reasoned with, it might not hurt them. The question is as to the merit of any proposition which may be offered. I do not expect to vote for the bill, but I believe that if it passes it ought to be made as good as possible, and that we ought to remove as many of the objections as we can.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. LITTLEFIELD was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the commissioned officers of the United States Revenue-Cutter Service shall hereafter receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are now or may hereafter be provided by law for officers of corresponding rank in the Army, including longevity pay.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest and, I frankly admit, with a great deal of instruction to the discussion upon this very important bill. I have heard the distinguished gentleman from Maine, in a matchless manner, style, and spirit, not unusual to him, speaking of those who have given but little time or thought, according to their opportunity, to an investigation of the merits or demerits of this bill. I have learned, Mr. Chairman, in the affairs and controversies of life, intellectual or otherwise, that it takes something more than the earnest declaration of "the pronoun I" to make an argument. Some gentlemen may vainly believe that such is argument, but common-sense, plain people do not accept it exactly that way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question involved in this bill, and it is one on which I base my opposition principally, is, first (and there has been no explanation on this point made even by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, for whose opinion I have so high a regard on all subjects), Why is it that this Congress should be called upon to take an officer upon waiting orders or on the retired list who is getting $1,250—an officer unable to render any service—and give him under the provisions of this bill $2,500? That is a question that has not been explained or answered in any way whatsoever during this entire discussion.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] made the statement in his remarks that I was entirely mistaken about the section of the Revised Statutes which I had read applying to the pay of commanders, lieutenant-commanders, etc., in the Navy. Just such mistakes as the gentleman from North Carolina made have occurred, I think, throughout this discussion. I examined the personnel bill passed by Congress on March 3, 1899, and found that the gentleman from North Carolina omitted to read the latter part of it, which says:

And provided, That no provision of this act shall operate to reduce the present pay of any commissioned officer now in the Navy.

Hence it was the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] that was mistaken, as clearly appears from the proviso just read to the act of Congress of March 3, 1899.

And yet he says that I was mistaken about the statute. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that some of the gentlemen who made such broad declarations about it and engaged "in pyrotechnics," as did the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], ought probably to have given more time and attention to the bill and examination of it than they did. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have objected to this bill on another ground. Why is it that in section 3, when the bill proposes to make revenue-cutter officers equal in rank to the naval officers and claim that they should be a part and parcel and belong to the Navy—why do they take the Army as a basis of compensation? It is plain and unmistakable what is meant by it, and the revenue officer to-day, without conditions or qualifications, under this bill will receive a greater compensation than the lieutenant-commander in the Navy, and there is no denial of it and there can not be. That is the plain provision of the bill.

I object to it again, Mr. Chairman, because I have read and seen that every Secretary of the Treasury, as has been alleged, and as is true, I presume, has favored this legislation. Why is it, I ask, that the gentlemen in favor of the bill have not been able to find Secretaries of the Navy that have favored it? I read to the committee that ex-Secretary Tracy, of the Navy, indicated that he would have agreed to a bill on this line only on condition that it transferred the Revenue-Cutter Service to the Navy absolutely. That was substantially the condition that Secretary Long made. Why, Mr. Chairman, if we are to take the opinions of Secretaries of the Treasury on a subject of this kind, why would not the opinion of a lawyer be just as well upon the question of whether or not a man had the yellow fever? Why would not his opinion be just as valuable upon a question of sickness on feeling the patient's pulse?

Let us go to the Navy, of which they propose to make this service a part, and let them answer the question as to whether this Revenue-Cutter Service shall be made an independent branch of the Navy—yea, whether the revenue officers shall receive more pay than officers of the Navy of corresponding rank receive. That is the unjust and unfair discrimination that this bill makes. Ah, Mr. Chairman, we ought to pause and consider this reckless increase of the tax burdens of the people. Is it right to take a man who has retired on a waiting list at $1,250 per year, and without an additional act on his part retire him for life on a salary of $2,500 per year? The people will not fail to scan carefully and critically the drift of such a bill as this, and will demand of the gentlemen who support it a clear, convincing, and satisfactory explanation as to why we should create a civil pension retirement list. The clamor will be long and loud from other Government employees, if this bill becomes law, "Give!" "Give!" "Give!"

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment which I will ask the Clerk to read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "Army" in line 18, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the word "Navy."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, it is peculiar that this service should be continually referred to as similar to the naval service, and then when it comes to a question of pay that it should be put upon the same footing as the Army service. I say it is peculiar, and there must be some reason why instead of following the line of the Navy pay, which would be natural, the bill should fix the Army pay, when the service of the revenue cutter is entirely different from that of the Army.

I shall attempt to show, Mr. Chairman, why this discrimination is made and why it is in favor of the Revenue-Cutter Service. If this service is so similar to the naval service, why should they not have the pay of officers of corresponding rank in the naval service? But we find that there is a provision in the law of the United States which says that when a naval officer is performing shore duty his salary shall be subjected to a discount of 15 per cent as long as he remains on shore duty. Now, evidently the friends of this bill must have wanted to give the Revenue-Cutter Service officer that amount of money, which would be 15 per cent more than the naval officer gets. Let us see how this works in the case of a captain.

According to this bill a captain who has served twenty years will get a salary of $3,500. Now, in case he does shore duty he still gets that $3,500, but the naval officer does not get it. He is subjected to a discount of $525 upon his salary, and consequently it is placing the Revenue-Cutter officer in a position which makes him $525 better off in his year's salary than the naval officer. Not only that, but we find that the members of this Revenue-Cutter Service are stationed on shore just like the officers in the naval service; and if the salary of the naval officer should be discounted 15 per cent, why should not that of the Revenue-Cutter Service officer be also discounted a like amount?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do you understand that the Revenue-Cutter officers alternate in shore and sea duty like the naval officers?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand that right now there are 40 officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service that are assigned to shore duty.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That, I beg leave to suggest, I do not think is true.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I was so informed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have got a list that I will read to you, which shows there are but eighteen.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well, eighteen.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. My question is this, whether you understand the Revenue-Cutter officers alternate between shore and sea duty; that is, say, three years on sea and three years on shore.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether there is any length of time designated, but no matter what the length of time may be you are going to have the naval officer come in here and say, "We are discriminated against; you give an officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service $525 a year more for the corresponding work than you give us." You will then find that this House will increase the salary of the naval officers to that amount. Now, it seems to me that when we take that into consideration we ought to fix the same salaries for the corresponding officers of the two services. The reason the word "army" has been inserted in this bill instead of the word "navy" is because the Army is always on shore duty and consequently there is no discount on their salaries by reason of the fact that they serve in one particular place or another.

But in the case of the Navy you can readily see that it is important that there should be a difference. All of the Navy would be seeking shore duty and all of these officers will be seeking shore duty if you adopt this measure by which they get the same salary when they are doing shore service as when they are doing duty at sea. Consequently, it seems to me that it is eminently proper that if this service is the same as the naval service the pay should be the same as the naval pay. I therefore contend that this amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] to say that there were only 18 Revenue-Cutter officers on shore.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I gave the list that was given to me. That is all I know about it.

Mr. MANN. I have a statement here from the Chief of the Revenue-Cutter Service, which statement is only a few days old, and according to this there are 9 officers on special duty on shore; 12 officers on construction and repair duty on shore; 12 officers on live-saving service duty on shore, and 8 officers on waiting-order duty on shore, sick, which makes a total of 41, I believe, if I can count correctly.

Mr. HEPBURN. But the gentleman ought in all fairness to remember that twelve of those, those on construction and repair duty, are officers who are expected to be on shore. Their place is on shore. They are engaged in construction, in the building of ships.

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining about these gentlemen being on shore. It is eminently proper that all of them should be on shore. They are all engaged on shore except the eight on waiting orders, and there are undoubtedly good reasons for them, in that they are sick; but all of these officers are engaged in duty on shore, and why should they not be paid Navy wages on shore?

Mr. HEPBURN. Eight of those you speak of are the old and infirm that are on shore because they can not serve.

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman says—the old and infirm. I notice that two of them are second assistant engineers. They can not be very old. I do not know how infirm they are.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will give the gentleman from Illinois the benefit of the authority on which I made the statement:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
DIVISION OF REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE,
Washington, March 31, 1902.

HON. CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD, M. C.,
The Hamilton, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will remember that this comes out of my time, and the gentleman can just omit the names.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly; the second or two that it took to read the names will be taken out of my time.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLEFIELD: I hand you herewith the names of officers on shore duty at this time, 18 in all.

Seven of the officers, employed in the construction and repair of vessels, will go to duty on board ship as soon as the vessels building are finished.

There would be under ordinary conditions, with no vessels under construction, including the chief and engineer in chief of the service, on shore duty in the Revenue-Cutter Service, about 12 officers.

If you desire any other data I will be glad to respond in person or by letter, as you wish.

Very truly, yours,

C. F. SHOEMAKER.

Now I will put into the RECORD, if the gentleman pleases, the names of the officers:

OFFICERS ON SHORE DUTY CONNECTED WITH REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Capt. Charles F. Shoemaker, chief Division Revenue-Cutter Service.

Capt. of Engineers John W. Collins, engineer in chief.

Capt. L. N. Stodder, supervisor of anchorages, New York.

Capt. R. M. Clark, inspector of clothing.
First Lieut. D. P. Foley, in charge general store, Pacific coast.
Second Lieut. P. H. Brereton, temporarily at Department.

IN THE CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR OF VESSELS.

[Assignments in these cases are all temporary.]

Capt. Russell Glover, Capt. O. C. Hamlet, Capt. Geo. E. McConnell, Second Lieut. G. C. Carmine, Chief Engineer James A. Doyle, Chief Engineer D. McC. French, Chief Engineer James H. Chalker, Chief Engineer E. G. Schwartz, First Asst. Engineer C. A. McAllister, First Asst. Engineer John Q. Walton, First Asst. Engineer Carl M. Green, Second Asst. Engineer C. A. Wheeler.

That is the authority on which I made the statement. I know nothing about it personally.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have the authority of the Chief of the Cutter Service, Mr. Shoemaker also, giving 41 in a schedule which I will put in the RECORD.

The schedule is as follows:

Table showing the distribution of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service March, 1902.

Grades.	In command.	Attached to vessels other than commanding.	On special duty.	Construction and repair.	On duty Life-Saving Service.	Lieutenants in command.	On waiting orders.	Sick.	Total.
Captains	23		3	3	5	3			37
First lieutenants	18	3	3		5	11			37
Second lieutenants	31	2	1		2				36
Third lieutenants	23								24
Cadets	12								12
Captain of engineers		1							1
Chief engineers	29		4						35
First assistant engineers	14		2				1		17
Second assistant engineers	16		1				2		19
Constructor			1						1
Total	23	143	9	12	12	11	8		219

Mr. MANN. Now, I am not criticising these gentlemen for being on shore at all; but if the naval officers of the same grade on shore have 15 per cent less pay, why should these gentlemen have higher pay? You know that it will mean that the Navy officers will insist that their pay be increased. Perhaps that is true. If so, increase them both at once.

Mr. MAHON. You give these men less pay when they are retired than naval officers receive, and you want to cut down their pay on shore.

Mr. MANN. No, sir; this bill proposes to give them the same pay on the water as the naval officers and 15 per cent more pay on shore than the naval officers.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me ask the gentleman if he understands this matter as I do. You propose by this amendment to place them on retirement on the same ground as the naval officers.

Mr. MANN. No; this is their pay for active service.

Mr. HEPBURN. But that fixes the retirement pay.

Mr. MANN. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; that fixes the retirement pay, and your proposition would retire each one of them with a grade higher. Of course that would not affect captains, because there is no grade higher, but it would affect all lieutenants. Is that what you want to do?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is now endeavoring to discuss the retirement feature of this bill. We are endeavoring to discuss the pay in active service under the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. The retirement pay is based on the active pay.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants to pay revenue-cutter officers in active service 15 per cent more than the naval officers of the corresponding grade receive. There is no question about it, and the gentleman admits it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, let us not vote until we know what we are voting about. I would like to ask my colleague, who is fully acquainted with all the facts, if the same corresponding rank in the Army and Navy have the same pay. Is that correct?

Mr. HEPBURN. What does the gentleman mean by corresponding rank?

Mr. LACEY. That is, a man who has corresponding rank with a captain of the Army, would his pay be the equivalent of the pay of a captain in the Army? Is that correct? I mean, a man who had the corresponding rank with a captain in the Army would draw pay equivalent to the pay of a captain in the Army; but if he was in the Navy, with the same identical rank, he would draw 15 per cent less when on shore duty.

Mr. HEPBURN. Where do you find that?

Mr. LACEY. I am trying to find out the facts.

Mr. HEPBURN. The pay of the Navy is based on the pay of the Army. When the pay of the Army was fixed, there was no Navy; but when the naval establishment came into existence their pay was based on the pay of the Army, and that is the condition to-day, as I understand it.

Mr. LACEY. And if that is so, the naval officer on shore draws 15 per cent less than when he is at sea, but the revenue officer will draw precisely the same as he would when at sea. If that is true, it ought not to be, and we ought not to vote upon it until we find out the facts. If that is correct, we ought to adopt the amendment; and when we come to give them retirement simply say that they shall not be retired one grade higher, as in the Navy. From the statement made by my colleague, this amendment ought be adopted.

When an officer of the Navy is on shore he gets 15 per cent less, and this bill would give the revenue men the full pay. That would be the legal effect of it if this amendment is not adopted. I was simply trying to get the facts. I have thus far been listening to this debate without taking any part in it. If these be the facts, we ought to adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman understand that a captain of the Revenue-Cutter Service ranks with a captain in the Navy?

Mr. LACEY. I am talking about the assimilated rank, as in the Navy.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This does not say "assimilated" rank, but corresponding rank.

Mr. LACEY. Corresponding rank has practically the same meaning. So that the rank being the same, the Revenue-Cutter officer will get 15 per cent more pay than the naval officer does when he is on shore.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. When the naval officer is on shore?

Mr. LACEY. The most of them are on shore.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What, the Navy?

Mr. LACEY. The Revenue-Cutter Service officers.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. They are always at sea.

Mr. LACEY. Over 40 of them are now on shore, and those 40 would draw 15 per cent more than Navy officers do when they are on shore duty.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But that 40 includes those on the retired list, does it not?

Mr. LACEY. If there was only one of these instead of 40, it is wrong. The proposition is unworthy. We ought to be just to the Navy. In trying to make the Revenue-Cutter men equal to the Navy we should not put them on a better plane.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think my friend does not understand what he is talking about.

Mr. LACEY. I am endeavoring to get the facts.

Mr. HEPBURN. You have been opposing the bill?

Mr. LACEY. I have never spoken against the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). And therefore I doubt very much your sincerity in this matter.

Mr. LACEY. I do not question the gentleman's sincerity.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). Especially in view of the section—

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will not impugn the motives of fellow-members.

Mr. HEPBURN. I was not impugning the motive; I was stating a historical fact.

Mr. LACEY. Well, then, it will become history that my friend has put into the RECORD what I expected to put there a little later when I shall record my vote against the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. The act of March 3, 1899, provides, in section 12, that—

After June 30, 1899, commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps shall receive the same pay and allowances except for forage as are or may be provided for by or in pursuance of law for officers of corresponding rank in the Navy.

Mr. LACEY. For officers of the corresponding rank of the Army.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well.

Mr. LACEY. Now, how about the other provision about 15 per cent less on shore?

Mr. HEPBURN. The pay of the Navy has always been based on the pay of the Army, and we have based this in pursuance of all precedents.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But there is the 15 per cent difference in the pay when the naval officer is on shore.

Mr. HEPBURN. We will consent to it if the House says so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But that says that the pay shall be 15 per cent less on shore.

Mr. HEPBURN. We do not agree to have the enemies of the bill fix it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. We have at last got at the fact, as I understand it, and that is this: While the rate of the pay is the same, a man that has the corresponding rank in the Revenue-Cutter Service has the same pay as a like officer in the Navy. We have got at last the fact that is important for us all to know. If that is true, why should we make a provision that these Revenue-Cutter officers shall not have their pay discounted while on shore the same as a naval officer? The amendment of the gentleman from Colorado simply puts the Revenue-Cutter officer on the same footing as the naval officer instead of upon a better footing. I am surprised that my colleague in his zeal should insist on giving 15 per cent more to the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service than to the officers of the Navy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to a letter from the Paymaster-General of the United States Navy, in which he answers the question, What would be the pay of a lieutenant-commander of the Navy, both on shore and on sea service? And here is his answer:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1903.

SIR: The Bureau is in receipt of your letter of the 24th instant, requesting the rate of pay of a lieutenant-commander in the Navy who has a service of twenty years, both for sea duty and shore duty; and in reply thereto begs to inform you that an officer of this rank and service receives, while at sea, $3,500, without any allowances, and on shore, in the United States, $2,975 and quarters. If quarters are not furnished in kind, he is entitled to commutation thereof at the rate of $48 per month.

Respectfully,

A. S. KENNY,

Paymaster-General United States Navy.

HON. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

There is a statement of the Paymaster-General of the Navy made on the 26th of February of this year, in which he says that the difference between the pay of an officer of the Navy holding the rank of lieutenant-commander at sea and on shore is 15 per cent more at sea than the corresponding officer would receive on shore, and that ought to settle it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me in view of that fact there ought to be no objection whatever to the passage of this amendment which substitutes the pay of the Navy as applied to this service instead of the pay of the Army. It would be a discrimination against the Navy to say that these officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service for the same identical shore duty should receive 15 per cent more salary than the corresponding officers of the Navy.

Mr. Chairman, it will result without the peradventure of a doubt in a bill coming into this House, and result in the passage of a bill increasing the pay of the naval officers on shore duty to correspond to the pay of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service on shore duty. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but from the standpoint of the best service there ought to be a distinction between shore duty and sea duty. If a Revenue-Cutter officer gets the same pay on shore that he gets for sea duty, unquestionably he will always be seeking shore duty, and the result will be that men will not voluntarily go to sea when they can get the same pay by staying in port. Therefore it seems to me in the best interests of the service, in the interest of having uniformity in the Revenue-Cutter Service and in the naval service, that the amendment I have offered striking out the word "Army" and inserting the word "Navy" should be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not controvert the statement of the gentleman from Colorado as to what the statute is; but when you apply it to practice you come to a very different condition of facts. The highest grade in the Revenue-Cutter Service is that of captain, and that officer corresponds to lieutenant-commander in the Navy. The pay of such officer (lieutenant-commander) is $3,500, and yet when the naval officer is assigned to shore duty, when he is brought here into the Department, when he is placed at the head of a bureau, I think the gentleman will find that there is not an exception that that officer is made a rear-admiral.

He takes the rank of a rear-admiral when he is placed in the Navy Department at the head of a bureau. His pay is thus increased $1,000 a year. So, in fact and in practice, Mr. Chairman, although the law is as the gentleman from Colorado states it, in practice the naval officer when assigned to shore duty has increased pay rather than decreased pay.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Iowa to say that one-half of the naval officers were on shore duty all the time. I know there are a great many rear-admirals, but I did not suppose one-half of the officers of the Navy were rear-admirals. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. My purpose was to vote for this measure. I do not presume there is any man on the floor of this House that has a deeper interest in the Navy than I have myself, for all I have on earth is in the Navy. Yet I am willing to vote for this measure if the measure can be treated fairly and honestly.

I do not believe those who are opposing the measure are dishonest, neither do I believe those who are in favor of it intentionally intend to mislead the House; but I say to you it is a fact, and it is a fact that can not be controverted by the gentleman from New York, that when a naval officer leaves the sea and comes upon shore duty he loses 15 per cent of his pay. Now, that distinction is absolutely in the statutes; and if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] had only read one line further he would have exposed the truth of that fact.

The pay of the Navy is based upon that of the Army, and when the naval officer is on shore his pay is 15 per cent less. And now you propose to step in here and do this for the Revenue Service: You propose to give these officers 15 per cent extra above that of the Navy, while you make no reduction upon the pay of the Army.

The gentleman says that when naval officers come ashore they are always assigned to service in the Navy Department. I beg leave to differ with the gentleman decidedly; and I want to tell him that naval officers have no allowance for quarters. If there are quarters for them at the navy-yard or elsewhere they get them; but otherwise they go into the city and rent their quarters and pay for them. That is the naked truth about the matter.

Let gentlemen treat this question fairly and honestly before the House. With the amendment now proposed, I will cheerfully vote for this bill. I have been lobbied, it is true, by both sides on this question, but I will say that I will vote for the bill cheerfully if you give us the amendment asked for by the gentleman from Colorado, which I believe is right and just; otherwise I will not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado, which is to strike out the word "Army," and to insert in place thereof the word "Navy."

Mr. ROBERTS. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on this proposition, it seems to me there is another phase of the question which should be fairly understood by this committee. It is said here that in supporting the section as proposed by the committee we are discriminating in favor of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service; and instances of officers of the Navy having their pay reduced on account of shore service are cited in proof of that statement.

Now, let me say right here, Mr. Chairman, that the benefit of this sea pay will only accrue permanently to two officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. One is the chief of the service; the other the chief engineer of the service. Under the law those two officers are detailed to shore duty for a certain specific purpose; that is, to manage the affairs of that Bureau and to undertake or supervise the designing and construction of all the vessels built for the use of that Department.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when the Secretary of the Navy assigns men to shore duty at the head of similar bureaus, those men are advanced in grade, which means an increase of pay. If you adopt the amendment proposed here by the gentleman from Colorado, you in effect impose a penalty upon the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who are detailed ashore for this construction duty.

The statement of the chief of the service is that under normal conditions there may be in all 12 officers of this service on shore duty at one time; but 10 of these, being those outside of the two I have mentioned, are on shore merely for a day, a week, or a month or two; they are not stationed on shore for three years at a time, as are officers of the Navy. They are brought on shore for a very short time, at the expiration of which they go back to their ships. They do not get a permanent location on shore where they can locate their families, where they can hire a house and settle down. It seems to me that when we take this view of the matter, it is proper that these officers should get the full sea pay.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. ROBERTS. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. NORTON. Does not the gentleman make a mistake when he undertakes to advise the House that naval officers are three years at sea and three years on shore? There is no such law as that at all.

Mr. ROBERTS. I have not stated that such is the law; I have stated that it is the practice of the Navy Department—a naval regulation which has the force and effect of law. And it must be within the observation of the gentleman from Ohio that when a naval officer is assigned as the head of a bureau he stays there at least during the continuance of the political administration that puts him there, and in many instances he stays there much longer, and being promoted he receives an increase of pay. Let me give you a concrete case. Take, for instance, the case of the recent Chief of the Bureau of Construction in the Navy Department. Prior to his advancement to the position of Chief of that Bureau he was a naval constructor. When he went up from the position of naval constructor, where, I believe, he ranked as a lieutenant in the Navy, he at once became a rear-admiral, drawing a rear-admiral's pay, this being compensation to him for the extra duty imposed on him by reason of this assignment.

Mr. NORTON. What about the thirty or forty or fifty men under him, that are out in the other departments, that are not at the Department—where do they get their rank?

Mr. ROBERTS. Those men are getting an equivalent.

Mr. NORTON. What is it?

Mr. ROBERTS. In almost every instance they are getting commutation in cold, hard cash for their quarters aboard ship.

Mr. LESSLER. I understand the naval constructor has no sea duty.

Mr. NORTON. Certainly not; we do not claim he has.

Mr. LESSLER. That is what you ask.

Mr. NORTON. No; I do not claim the naval constructor has any sea duty.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then will the gentleman kindly tell me what officers of the Navy are under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Bureau of Construction? I mean by that sailors, men who are supposed to be out on ships, and who are on shore—seamen. What officers of the Navy come under the Chief of Construction?

Mr. NORTON. I do not think there are any.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then there is no relevancy to the question of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield a moment?

Mr. ROBERTS. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Ohio, who I think is on the Naval Committee—

Mr. NORTON. No; I am not. I wish I were.

Mr. HEPBURN. He is akin to the Navy.

Mr. ROBERTS. He has a kin in the Navy.

Mr. NORTON. So I have, and I am proud of it, too.

Mr. ROBERTS. So am I, and I wish there were more of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is one provision of the law the gentleman from Ohio did not read. My statement was absolutely correct. A further proviso reads that no provision of this act shall operate to reduce the present pay of any commissioned officer now in the Navy, and in any case in which the pay of such an officer would otherwise be reduced he shall continue to receive pay according to existing law.

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. What becomes, then, of your 15 per cent?

Mr. NORTON. Read the second provision.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have; and I say that there is no reduction, no 15 per cent reduction, of the pay of any officer in the Navy at the time of the passage of this bill.

Mr. NORTON. I do not know as to the time of the passage of this bill. I know this bill gives him 15 per cent reduction.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman—

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. MANN. The friends of the bill will not help it in that way. There can be no possible question as to the reduction of pay on shore duty from sea pay. The personnel bill which the gentleman from Iowa referred to, as I understand it, provided that that bill should not operate to reduce pay. There is no possible question about there being a number of officers on shore. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] made a suggestion which, it seems to me, the friends of this bill ought to adopt. I should be glad, although not intending to vote for the bill itself, to vote for an amendment to the bill which would give to the chief of the Revenue-Cutter Service and to the captain of engineers higher salaries. I am frank to admit that I do not believe that Captain Shoemaker and Captain Collins receive salaries fairly proportionate to the responsibilities which are placed upon them. As chiefs practically of a bureau, even under this bill they would receive only $3,500 a year and commutation for quarters. I believe their salaries ought to be higher, but I can see no reason for giving higher salaries to other officials on shore than naval officers would receive in like positions.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] just allow me to take his attention a moment? You say that there is no law in existence now that deducts 15 per cent from the pay of a naval officer.

Mr. HEPBURN. Two officers of the Navy who were officers on the 3d of March, 1899—

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. How do you construe, then, section 1556 of the present statutes of the United States, which says that lieutenant-commanders—

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the date of that?

Mr. MANN. It is prior to 1899.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yet it is in existence under the personnel act which you have just read—under the proviso. This is the law that is in existence.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, no; I read the statute—the proviso exempting all officers in the Navy at the date of the passage of that act from the operation of that 15 per cent discount.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, the whole question is about this personnel act, and I undertook to read the proviso in the first few remarks that I made this afternoon, which was that it should not apply to the pay of naval officers as the law now exists. Now, what is that law that exists to-day? The personnel act did not repeal the question of compensation, and here is the law as I understand it:

Lieutenant-commanders during the first four years after date of commission, when at sea, $2,800; on shore duty, $2,400; on leave or waiting orders, $2,000; after four years from such date, when at sea, $3,000; on shore duty, $2,600; on leave or waiting orders, $2,200.

And, Mr. Chairman, that is the law to-day, and there has not been any contradiction or denial of the fact that a captain to-day in the Revenue Service, under this bill, who has corresponding rank and pay with the officer in the Navy, as I have just read, does get larger pay than a lieutenant-commander in the Navy. That is the statute as it exists, just as I have read it, and it applies to officers all down the line, and when they are on shore duty 15 per cent is deducted from their pay. Is that deduction in any way made in the case of a captain in the Revenue Service, corresponding with the rank of a lieutenant-commander in the Navy? No man can say that it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendment be closed in one minute.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. NORTON. I ask the gentleman to yield that one minute to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendment close in one minute.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LACEY. Division.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LACEY. Division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded. Those in favor of the motion will rise.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. I understood the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] before recognizing the call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] was on his feet demanding a division, but the Chair did not distinctly hear him until he spoke the second time.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, nays 36.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, no matter what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] may say, we have a letter from the Paymaster-General of the Navy which says that in the month of February he was paying officers of the Navy on shore 15 per cent less than he was paying Navy officers on sea duty. It seems to me that ought to settle the question whether we can now turn to the particular statute that authorizes it or not.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] says that we are discriminating against the Revenue-Cutter Service by the adoption of this amendment. Why, Mr. Chairman, we are increasing the pay of a captain who has had twenty years' service 40 per cent, giving him $3,500 a year and a commutation of quarters of $576 per annum, when he has had heretofore a salary of $2,500 a year and commutation of quarters of $480 per annum. We are increasing his compensation for quarters by giving him $48 per month instead of $40 per month. That is not discriminating against the Revenue-Cutter Service. It is giving them a large and liberal increase of compensation. If we make a difference between the compensation of the Navy and Revenue-Cutter officers there will continually be a quarrel as to their salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] to strike out the word "Army" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Navy."

The question being taken on a division (demanded by Mr. SHERMAN), there were—ayes 75, nays 76.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. SHAFROTH and Mr. SHERMAN.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 76, nays 89. Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which will be read by the Clerk.

Mr. LACEY. It is to be added to the section as a proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 3 the following:

"Provided, That the same reduction of pay shall be made for shore duty as in corresponding grades in the Navy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that precisely the same amendment, only in different phraseology, has just been voted down.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have voted what the pay should be. We have voted that it should be Army pay. This amendment provides that it shall be Navy pay. That is precisely the same question upon which we have just this moment taken a vote by tellers.

Mr. LACEY. And we voted it down on the mistaken statement of gentlemen that there was no shore reduction. Now, here is a proviso that if there is shore reduction in the Navy there shall also be shore reduction in this service. If there is no shore reduction, then, of course, the proviso will not hurt them. It is an entirely different provision, even if the legal effect should be the same.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, it does not make any difference whether the gentleman voted under a misapprehension or not; this is precisely the question that was voted down. It is the very same amendment, simply changing the phraseology, and nothing else.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion just voted down was the motion of the gentleman from Colorado to strike out the word "Army," and insert in lieu thereof the word "Navy." The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is to add at the end of the section the following words:

Provided, That the same reduction of pay shall be made for shore duty as in corresponding grades of the Navy.

The language of the pending amendment is certainly very different from that of the amendment already rejected. The Chair can not say, from anything appearing in the bill or anything that has been submitted, that it is the same amendment. In terms it is a very different amendment. What the effect may be of adopting the amendment is for the committee to consider and not for the Chair to decide. The point of order is therefore overruled. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LACEY. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 89.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That when any officer in the Revenue-Cutter Service has reached the age of 64 years he shall be retired by the President from active service; and when any officer has become incapable of performing the duties of his office he shall be either placed upon the retired waiting-orders list or dropped from the service by the President, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 4 of the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this section provides for these officers being put upon a civil-pension list. That is all that it amounts to. You may call it a retirement list or you may call this list anything that you want to, but in the end it puts civil employees on a retirement list, where they will receive three-fourths pay for the balance of their lives after they have ceased to work for the Government. Now, since the beginning of this Government this Revenue-Cutter Service has been in existence. There is no man on this floor that denies that it has been an efficient service; there is no man on this floor who denies that under existing law we have been able to obtain the services of competent and efficient men to serve the Government.

We hear gentlemen on this floor quote in this debate from Secretary this and Secretary that, what the Secretary of the Navy has to say, and what the Secretary of the Treasury has to say, and what a retired Secretary has to say, and what an active Secretary has to say; we hear from Admiral this and Admiral that, and Paymaster this and Paymaster that, and what he thinks we should do in this matter. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come when the American Congress ought to be able to legislate on its own judgment, and not have to run like messenger boys to a department to ascertain how they shall vote. There is no man here that can deny the present efficiency of this service or seeks to deny it. There is no man in this House who has asserted that the efficiency of this service is going to be increased one jot or one tittle by giving this civil-retirement list to these officers. Not a man in the debate that has taken place, not one man, has asserted that you are going to improve the service by putting this provision in this bill.

Every gentleman who favors the bill has lauded the service; has told us what an efficient service it was. Well, now, instead of asking rear-admirals, vice-admirals, and retired admirals and active admirals how we shall vote in this matter, suppose we in our consciences ask our constituents as to whether they want to adopt and put on the statute books a civil-retirement pension list for service that admittedly does not need it. Shall we pay these men this money after they have retired, when every man admits that the service is efficient now? What can you say to your constituents as the reason for giving to officers of this service this bonus if the service is as efficient to-day as you say it is? And if you can not, why then you are going to open the public treasury and give a lot of pleasant gentlemen, because they lobby with you, and ask you to do it—you are going to give them this increase of pay without any return to the National Government.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, just a few moments. I more than agree, after listening to the gentleman from Alabama and hearing the reasons that he gives for the conclusions at which he arrives, that he cares but little about the language of this bill.

He says that it does not make any difference how this bill reads, and I am rather inclined to think that is a fact. It does not make any difference what anybody says about it or what anybody thinks about it; it means exactly "what I know" and "what I say" and "what the gentleman from Alabama says it means."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman deny that it makes a retired list?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; the gentleman does not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman deny the efficiency of the service now?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not at all. I say it makes a retirement list. Does the gentleman know, and does the gentleman suppose that just because he says he does not want to inquire of the Secretary of the Treasury, nor does he want to inquire of the Secretary of the Navy, nor does he want to have this admiral or that advise us that no one else cares to do so. His hypothesis is that the less a man knows the better he is qualified to exercise his judgment as a representative of the American people. That is his proposition. Do not investigate a question, do not, in God's name, ask anybody who knows anything about it—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Maine assumes—

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do not trouble yourself about the gentleman from Maine; the gentleman from Maine will look out for himself. The gentleman from Alabama said he would not bother about admirals or about Secretaries of the Navy; he would look out for himself. I do not suppose he would even read or let himself be informed, because the less information a man has the more intelligent he is. Undoubtedly when he undertakes to act on a question he would consult his constituents. That is what he would do. It would be very unfortunate if hereafter a question arose in this House that required immediate action if the gentleman from Alabama did not have time to consult his constituents [laughter], because if he does not have the time he would not know how to vote. It would not do to ask the head of a department; it would not do to ask any representative of a department, because he may know what he is talking about; and if he did ask him he might get some information, and then he might act intelligently upon the information. [Laughter.] It is a mighty sight better to act upon misinformation or absolutely no information.

The gentleman asked me if the section does not provide for retirement. Of course it does; that is how it reads. No matter how it reads or what anybody says about it, he says, but I think it means what it says, and it reads that way.

Then the gentleman says that this is the first time that any attempt has been made to put these men on the retired list. Oh, this awful bugbear of a civil pension list; this terrible picture that they have conjured up, this "cloven foot," as my other friend from Alabama called it—the cat under the meal, and with no meal hardly over the cat. [Laughter.] What is the effect of it? The gentleman knows, or he would have known if he had listened to my friend from Iowa, that on two several occasions it has been necessary for the American Congress in the exercise of its wisdom to pass a retirement bill without consulting its constituents. Now, I do not know but there may be a constituent of the gentleman from Alabama that has consulted more than was necessary for the welfare of this bill from his point of view.

But on two occasions the American Congress, in its wisdom, has found it necessary to retire by special act men in this Revenue-Cutter Service. Why? Because they were considered not civil employees, but a part of the naval establishment of this Government, distinctly naval in their character, and that by reason of their service, its peculiar character, and the fact that men once enlisted and trained in that service are in a sense unfitted for other services, on two occasions it has been necessary to relieve the congestion by a special act of Congress and place these men on the retired list because they were incapacitated for further service.

No crack of doom, so far as I know, has opened itself wide to ingulf either the American Congress or destroy the American people by reason of those two special acts, and the ship of state has not drifted anywhere near the rocks by reason of those two special acts of Congress. Nor was there, so far as I have been informed, any upheaval on the part of the constituents. This simply provides by general law for the retirement of these men under precisely the same circumstances, and would make it unnecessary hereafter for the Congress to pass this special legislation to relieve this congestion in this service.

Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, that the suggestion of the gentleman should hardly be adopted by the members of the House, because the bill places these men not on a par even with the Navy, as is well suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]; because in many important particulars and respects the law now relating to retirement is vastly more favorable to the naval officer, with which I make no complaint and with which I find no fault, than is this bill to the revenue-cutter officer, but it provides a way of placing them upon this list. If it did constitute a thin entering wedge, if it was a civil-pension list, I would agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] and be glad to follow his lead on this proposition, but I respectfully disagree with his conclusions, and I submit, under a fair analysis of the situation, it seems to me that no proper consideration of facts can justify the suggestion that the Revenue-Cutter Service is in any fair, proper sense a civil employment and is not entitled to the same treatment that the Navy receives in this respect.

Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman rise to a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section and amendment be closed in two minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate upon the pending section and amendment be closed—

Mr. SHERMAN. I will make it two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. In two minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (called for by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were—ayes 77, noes 66.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. SHERMAN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 65. So the motion to close the debate in two minutes was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the committee has seen fit to cut off debate on this proposition. After what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] has seen fit to say in his exceedingly humorous and funny speech, I have little to say. The gentleman from Maine has played many parts in this House. I think it is the first time that I have ever seen him assume to play the rôle of the cap and bells; but he performs his part well, there is no doubt about that. [Laughter.] On the other hand, my friend from Maine states that I assume to know it all. Well, now, I do assume to know something, and probably I did assume to know it all until the gentleman from Maine came to this House [laughter]; but ever since the gentleman from Maine has been a member of this House I have found that he was not only capable of knowing it all, but of telling it and giving advice not only to his own party, whether they agreed with him or not, but to this side of the House as well. [Laughter.]

As the gentleman from Maine has never seen fit or necessary to go to anybody else for advice, except himself, I was therefore rather surprised when the gentleman objected to some few of us on this side consulting our constituencies rather than high admirals in authority. Now, as to the real merits in the case, the reason I say we should not go to admirals or Revenue-Cutter officers or persons of that kind for advice as to how we should vote, is simply from the fact that every one of those men are interested in some degree in the decision of the House in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Whereas we and our constituencies are only interested in good service to the Government and the revenues in the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to strike out the fourth section of the bill.

The question was taken; on a division called for by Mr. UNDERWOOD, there were—ayes 44 and noes 97.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question being taken, and the demand for tellers, they were refused, 19 members, not one-fifth of a quorum, rising in support of the demand.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of the President, shall from time to time assemble a Revenue-Cutter Service retiring board, composed of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service and medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service, consisting of not less than five commissioned officers, two-fifths of whom shall be selected from medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service, for the purpose of examining and reporting on such officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service as may be ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury to appear before it; and the members of said board shall be sworn, in every case, to discharge their duties honestly and impartially, the oath to be administered to the members by the president of the board, and to him by the junior member or recorder; and such board shall inquire into and determine the facts touching the nature and occasion of the disability of any officer who appears to be incapable of performing the duties of his office, and shall have such powers as may be necessary for that purpose; and when the board finds an officer incapacitated for active service it shall also find and report the cause which, in its judgment, has produced his incapacity, whether such cause is an incident of service, whether due to his own vicious habits, or the infirmities of age, or physical or mental disability. The proceedings and decisions of the board shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall by him be laid before the President for his approval or disapproval and his orders in the case.

Mr. MANN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 5, line 4, page 3, by striking out the words "revenue cutter" and inserting the word "navy."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the futility of endeavoring to amend this bill against the objection of the gentlemen who have it in charge. This is an amendment which would, under ordinary circumstances, be accepted as proper, but I have no hope that they will accept it now when it is offered to them in this way.

Mr. Chairman, I was not able to hear the entire argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] this afternoon, because I felt the need of inner refreshment. During my absence from the Hall the gentleman, in a facetious tone, referred to me, saying that if there were anything in the theory of the transmigration of souls, "the gentleman from Illinois," referring to myself, "would at some future day be reincarnated and appear as a mule with four hind legs, all in vigorous operation." [Laughter.]

My remembrance is that the theory of the transmigration of souls is one which is held in the far East, in India, among the Hindoos. I do not pretend to have great knowledge in reference to that theory or great knowledge, indeed, in reference to any other subject; but the gentleman having compared me to a Hindoo, I may say that I feel very much like the Hindoo described in a rhyme which some of us have heard:

The poor benighted Hindoo,
He does the best he kindo.
He sticks to caste from first to last;
And for clothes he makes his skindo.

[Laughter.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MANN, it was rejected.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, while I intend to vote for this bill, I shall not do so under any misapprehension of its true relation to the Government of the United States. The Revenue-Cutter Service is not a part of the War Department of the United States, neither is it a part of the Navy. Its incidental connection with the Spanish-American war no more justifies the crediting of the Revenue-Cutter Service to either of those departments than does the fact that bakers, butchers, printers, merchants, and lawyers fought in that war justify the placing of those engaged in those employments under the care of those departments. The regular duty of the revenue cutters is not in the line of war, and the employees of that service render aid in time of war for reasons but slightly different from those which summon all citizens to bear arms.

The attempt to pass this bill under the guise of legislation for the War or Navy Department is one that disposes me against it; but I believe that the measure has merits which justify it as legislation for our civil service.

My vote is for this bill on the same grounds that it would be for the pensioning of a policeman, a fireman, or a school-teacher who had grown old in the public service, and I do not propose to resort to the subterfuge of saying that the Revenue-Cutter crews are in the Navy. They are employed in most dangerous service, and will, of course, be serviceable in times of war. But they are not in the employ of the War or Navy Department. Their pay rolls are in the Treasury Department, and they are under the control of that Department. The trend of the age includes protection and support for those who grow old and incapacitated in service, and this whether the service is public or private. The great corporations of the country are moving in this direction, and it will make for the betterment of their relations with their employees. The dangers of a "retirement list" have been very much exaggerated, and if the civil service of this country could be so reformed as to abolish sinecures: if the Government could be placed in a position that it was called upon to pay only for work rendered, higher, better service would be promoted by a "retirement list," properly started and properly guarded. The trouble now is that the civil pay rolls of the National Government are, to an alarming extent, "retirement lists," upon which are found the names of those who render little or no service. Purge the civil lists of these names and the people will be willing to see a civil-service "retirement list" passed by any Congress. To those who are advocating this bill, but declaring that they would not do so if it could be shown to open the way to a civil-service "retirement list," I beg to say that they are not deceiving even themselves. A good measure does not need the support of unsound pleading, and in casting my vote for the bill I desire to utterly reject the proposition that it is a measure connected with the Army or Navy Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn. The Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That when a board finds that an officer is incapacitated for active service, and that his incapacity is the result of an incident of service, or is due to the infirmities of age, or physical or mental disability, and not his own vicious habits, and such decision is approved by the President, he shall be retired from active service and placed upon a retired waiting-orders list. Officers thus retired may be assigned to such duties as they may be able to perform, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 6 by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided, That no officer shall be placed on the retired waiting-orders list because of infirmity of age who has not served in the Revenue-Cutter Service at least forty years, and no officer shall be placed on said waiting-orders list by reason of physical or mental disability who has not served in the Revenue-Cutter Service at least twenty years, unless said physical or mental disability is the result of injury incurred in the line of active duty in the service."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the present provision is that a Revenue-Cutter officer must enlist in the service or enter the service as a cadet in the line before he is 23 years old. That is the regulation. The law, I believe, is 25 years. This amendment would prevent his retirement for age unless he had been in the service forty years, either in the Revenue-Cutter Service or in the Navy and the Revenue-Cutter Service combined. It seems to me that in addition to that it is a fair proposition that no officer in the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be retired for disability which is not incurred in the service unless he has been in the service for twenty years.

We know very well, every member of the House knows perfectly well, that the moment you permit a board of Revenue-Cutter officers to retire Revenue-Cutter officers we shall have the conditions in the Revenue-Cutter Service which Secretary Root says now exist in the Army service, and which Congress has been endeavoring to remedy in the Army service.

A retiring board of Revenue-Cutter officers has the incentive at once to retire officers in order to make places for the junior officers below them, and unless there is a limitation of some kind placed in the bill there will shortly be more Revenue-Cutter officers on the retired list than there are upon the active list.

The Secretary of War is now recommending that some provision be inserted covering the present trouble in reference to the Army retired list, and it occurs to me that it will not harm anybody to say that they shall not be retired for age short of forty years' service or for incapacity caused other than by injury in the service short of twenty years. I do not see how the gentleman can make any objection to that provision.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, this is a discrimination that applies to no other branch of the service, and is manifestly an attempt to fasten an unfriendly amendment upon the bill. I hope it will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That when any commissioned officer is retired from active service, the next officer in rank shall be promoted according to the established rules of the service, and the same rule of promotion shall be applied successively to the vacancies consequent upon such retirement: Provided, That all promotions shall be subject to examination to determine the professional qualifications of the candidates, and such examination shall be wholly written before a board of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and their physical qualifications shall be reported upon by a board of medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service; and such board shall be convened by the Secretary of the Treasury whenever the exigencies of the service require.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which will be reported by the Clerk.

Mr. MANN. I do this even at the risk of incurring the displeasure of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 8, line 19, page 4, by striking out the words "according to the established rules of the service."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if anybody can tell me what the "established rules of the service" are, I shall be very much delighted to hear him. Here is a proposition absolutely taking out of the control of the President or of Congress, or out of the control of the law, any question in regard to the promotion of officers. They shall be promoted according to the "established rules of the service"—rules which may be established now or rules which may be established hereafter. It is a queer provision to put in the law, notwithstanding the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who, with that versatility which he has, stands pat upon a proposition without regard to its reasoning.

I suppose the gentleman from Ohio is getting himself in preparation for forcing this side of the House to vote exactly as he demands that they shall vote upon the proposition for reciprocity with Cuba. It looks dangerous to see anybody offer an amendment to a bill, and I suggest his attitude as a fine example for the humorist from Maine, who, to his title of "expounder of the Constitution," has now added that of the "funny man from the Northeast." [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out, after the word "service," the remainder of line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to amend the amendment by striking out, after the word "service," the remainder of line 18.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, this is clearly an unconstitutional law that we are passing. I am not surprised to see gentlemen laugh at the suggestion of the Constitution. "What is the Constitution, anyhow, between friends?" as has been suggested by a statesman.

A MEMBER. That suggestion originally came from the other side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa kindly send up his amendment?

Mr. LACEY. It is simply to strike out all after the word "service" in line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that that should be offered as an independent amendment, rather than as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LACEY. It is a part of the same proposition. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if he will accept the amendment?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the provision is.

Mr. LACEY. The amendment is to strike out the provision which requires the President to always promote the next man in rank.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be considered, but otherwise the Chair would have to rule it out of order at this time.

Mr. LACEY. No one has made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. As there is no objection, the amendment will be considered.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that he was endeavoring to explain the point of the Constitution, and this was unconstitutional. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has the opinion of the gentleman from Maine upon the Constitution? [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. I think we can get at that by leaving out the constitutional question.

Mr. MANN. If you leave out the Constitution, there is no use of our considering the constitutional question.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I may not get the attention of the gentleman from Maine, but the Chair is a constitutional lawyer, and I will address him, and over his head the members of the committee. Here is a proposition that the next officer in rank shall in all cases be promoted, so that the next man is entitled to his promotion, without any reference to the fact that the Constitution of the United States, which creates so much amusement among some gentlemen here now, gives the appointing power to the President of the United States. I do not believe that we can constitutionally enact a law compelling the President of the United States in all cases to select the next man in rank for any office.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, this is the law of the country in regard to promotions in the Army and Navy, and has been for more than a hundred years; and the idea that the gentleman has fallen upon is a law of Congress attempting to compel an appointment by the President where no provision of law is made to appoint a certain man or a man of a certain rank. But the army organization to-day provides, and always has, that up to the rank of brigadier-general the next in seniority of service shall be promoted. "Shall be" is the language and always has been. That constitutional question that the gentleman presents does not come into this question in any way whatever.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MANN. Not in reference to that point, but in reference to another point in the same connection, which says that the promotion shall be subject to examination. That is in section 8. Now, I call the gentleman's attention to this point. Undoubtedly it is the design that the examination, both mental and physical, shall be reported upon favorably. The bill does not so state, and I do not know whether that section as it stands is in conformity with the law relating to the Army and the Navy or not, though it may have a construction that way. It says it shall be subject to examination.

Mr. GROSVENOR. All promotions in the Army and Navy are made after examination.

Mr. MANN. I understand they are. "Subject to examination" is put in here. The law requires that the board shall report favorably both upon the mental and physical qualifications. Here it only says he shall be examined, but does not require that the examination shall be favorable.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman is not serious in that.

Mr. MANN. I am serious.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am sorry if the gentleman is. That is always implied.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman can not answer—

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is implied, as a matter of course, that the examination for promotion shall result favorably. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 9. That all officers borne upon the retired or permanent waiting-orders list at the date of the passage of this act, or hereafter, shall receive 75 per cent of the duty pay, salary, and increase of the rank upon which they have been or may be retired.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 9 the following:

"Provided, That no such longevity increase of pay shall be allowed for any length of service after retirement."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, this matter was discussed the other day on the Army appropriation bill, and the attempt was made to embody this provision in that bill, but a point of order was made that it changed existing law. It was conceded by everybody—

Mr. SHERMAN. The committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 9 by striking out, after the word "officers," in line 5, the following: "Borne upon the retired or permanent waiting-orders list at the date of the passage of this act, or hereafter," and insert in place thereof the following: "hereafter placed upon the retired or permanent retired or waiting-orders list."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have just offered is aimed at one of the worst features of this bill—a bill, Mr. Chairman, whose supporters seem recklessly determined to pass it just as it is, regardless of consequences. Section 9 is in the nature of an ex post facto law. It is retroactive. It seems to me that it is a very rare emergency that makes it necessary for a law to be retroactive. Now, what occasion, what justice and fairness is there in framing this section as it reads and making it relate back to those on the "retired and waiting orders list" who now receive the handsome annuity of $1,250?

These officers are simply incapable of rendering the Government any service. This law, retroactive as it is, goes back to those who are now on the retired list—the halt, the maimed—those whose health is gone, and takes men by the hand and brings them up and gives them the full benefit of the proposed law regardless of any service whatsoever. These men on the retired list are not complaining. Their compensation is ample. They are content with their labors and their pay, but to satisfy a vain and empty pride and ambition the Congress is asked to thrust its hand into the pockets of the taxpayers of this country and grant this unjust and unreasonable demand for increased pay on a civil pension list.

This section of the bill is offensive, Mr. Chairman, in every respect and in defiance of those great principles and dictates of common justice and common sense prevailing in the minds of the people of this country that a law or statute ought not to be retroactive; it ought not to go back and put a man in a far better position pecuniarily to-day than he was when he accepted retirement of his own volition and on his own application. That is what this section means. It reads "upon which they have been or may be retired."

Why, Mr. Chairman, what justification can we give for that? Have these men on this retired or waiting-orders list given any additional reason since their voluntary retirement why they should be made the recipients of this generous bounty? They are not capable of rendering any service. Is this any reason for paying them a higher salary than when they were on the active list? Is it for services that they have rendered in the past? If so, then the law has already paid them. They are now on the "retired list on waiting orders." This section is really one of the most objectionable features in the whole bill. I know, Mr. Chairman, that some of the supporters of this bill apparently are careless and indifferent as to its real purport. This is a Senate bill that we are considering, and when this House passes it, as it seems determined to do, the chances are that it will become a law of the land. It will not be the last of it. It will come back to us in the shape of numberless demands to place other just as worthy, just as courageous and efficient servants and employees of the Government on a retired civil-pension list for life. I can see them now in the future coming in troops to this Capitol.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when the naval personnel bill was passed, this identical question was presented which the gentleman from Alabama presents by his amendment. We have heard all this talk about placing the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service on a par with the Navy. The personnel bill excepted the officers of the retired list of the Navy so that under that bill the officers of the Navy who had been retired prior to that time received no benefit from the passage of that bill. But here is a proposition to increase the pay of the captains of the Revenue-Cutter Service now under permanent waiting orders, placed there at their own request, to increase the pay from $1,250 to $2,625 each year.

Now, when this House refuses to pass a pension bill above $72 a month—and I think there has been only one of that kind—they propose to increase by more than $100 a month the retired officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service, who are already there at their own request. What is the justice of that? These men are retired; they are placed on the permanent waiting-orders list under an act of Congress which they petitioned for themselves. We refused to do it for the Navy. We ought not to do it now for the Revenue-Cutter Service.

It is easy for the gentleman from Ohio to say that those of us who are opposed to the passage of the bill ought not to have anything to say about the amendments; that is within the power of the majority of the House. It is within their power to prevent us, but it is not within their power to prevent our expressing reasons which, if they overcome by votes, they will find will come back to plague them in the future.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to speak in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I desire to favor the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid my friend has not read this section. It reads:

That all officers borne upon the retired waiting-orders list at the date of the passage of this act, or hereafter, shall receive 75 per cent of the duty pay, salary, and increase of the rank upon which they have been or may be retired.

I do not understand that that increases the pay of the man that has been retired.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HEPBURN. For what purpose?

Mr. MANN. To ask a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask him whether the word "rank" is not the word referred to by the words "have been?"

Mr. HEPBURN (reading):

Shall receive 75 per cent of the duty pay, salary, and increase of the rank upon which they have been or may be retired.

I think that must refer to the pay. You can not get 75 per cent increase of rank, and therefore you have to take 75 per cent increase of pay that they receive at the time they were retired.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, this is rather a small matter. There are only a few of these old men. They are very old men. All of them were retired a good many years ago. They were not retired upon their own request, but they were retired because for a long time they had been incapacitated for service. They were retired upon a bill passed upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, in order that these incapacitated men, incapacitated at that time largely from age, give place to younger men. I doubt if there are any of these men under 70 years of age. I think there are but 23 in all, and they have served more than forty years, the greater number of them. I think the gentleman, with his zeal, might at least take his rough hand off from these old men and let them get into their graves with something of comfort. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I have just as much sympathy for the "old men" as has the gentleman from Iowa. In fact, I believe I am somewhat older, at least in spirit, than the gentleman, and therefore ought to have more sympathy for the "old men." I cheerfully concede that I can not equal the gentleman from Iowa in enthusiasm, while I am inclined always to lean upon his elder judgment.

But let me say that many of these men on the permanent waiting-orders list are not old men. I have before me the record of one who was born September 17, 1862—not an old man—retired upon the application of Revenue-Cutter officers who asked Congress to pass an act retiring him on a fair salary. He was retired before he had ever performed much service. Why should he be paid any better than the veterans of the civil war whose cases we now quibble about when it comes to paying them a pension of any size?

Mr. HEPBURN. That man was retired because he was insane, was he not? And he receives, I believe, $900 a year.

Mr. MANN. I do not know for what he was retired. He was a second assistant engineer. There are three second assistant engineers on this list, and a number of other officers below the rank of captain and chief engineer, who are not retired on account of old age at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, as I understood the argument of the chairman of the committee, the closing part of his statement was that these men who are on the retired list will receive the increased pay under this bill, as originally stated by the gentleman from Illinois. In other words, if we pass this bill there are a number of men now retired from this service and receiving $1,250 a year to whom, without rhyme or reason or excuse, we are going to pay for the balance of their lives, without requiring any service from them, $2,500 a year from the Treasury of the United States. This is something that has never been known before, I warrant, in the history of the legislation of this country. Under the guise of a bill "to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service," we are to take a number of men who have been retired from that service, upon whom the Government has no claim, and upon whom it never expects to have any claim in the future—men who have been retired under former law by former Secretaries, and who have been receiving $1,250 a year—we are to take those men, and, simply because they have friends in this court, to pay them $2,500 a year out of the public Treasury. That is a fair sample of this bill. It is about all there is in it.

While this is denominated "a bill to increase the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service," it carries a fraud in its title, because that is not its object. There is not a man on this floor who has risen in advocacy of the bill who has not contended that this is now the most efficient service in the United States. But along the same line, we propose to give these retired gentlemen, who are now out of this service, earning their living, perhaps, in some other way and having control of their own time, $1,250 a year as a bonus out of the Federal Treasury, that belongs to your constituents and mine. We propose to treat these gentlemen thus munificently because they have some good friends here who want them to get this increase. That is about all the merit there is in the bill, so far as I can see, from beginning to end, because, as I have said, not a man who has advocated the bill, so far as I have heard, has contended for one moment that "the efficiency of the service" is going to be increased by the measure. The friends of the bill have spent their time on this floor telling us how efficient this service has been under the law in the past.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will give me a moment or two.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I make it one minute.

Mr. MANN. Let me have two or three minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to close debate in two minutes.

The motion of Mr. SHERMAN was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill the meaning of this language used in the pending section: "Duty pay, salary." What is the difference between "duty pay" and "salary?" What is the reason for putting this language in the bill? There must be some reason for it. What does the language mean? Does it mean that "duty pay" is one thing and "salary" another thing—something additional?

Mr. SHERMAN. The language is precisely the same as that used in the Navy bill.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I understand not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand it is. I am so advised by a member of the Naval Committee, a member who was very much interested in the drafting and passage of the naval personnel bill.

Mr. MANN. I was informed by an officer in the office of the paymaster of the Navy and the Army both that there was no such thing in either the Army or the Navy.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am differently informed.

Mr. MANN. Well, what does it mean? The gentleman must know whether "duty pay" means so much money, and "salary" means so much more, and "increase" so much more. We know what increase means; it means 10 per cent additional for each five years' service. But I would like to know if the gentleman is willing to acquaint us as to whether "duty pay" and "salary" are two different things, and what they are. If the gentleman does not understand this bill, why he might give some of the rest of us an opportunity to explain, without cutting off debate. I yield to the gentleman the balance of my time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I—

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I withdraw that for the moment, Mr. Chairman. I want to offer it after the vote on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, to strike out certain words and insert certain other words.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 9, after the word "retired," in line 9, insert the words: "Provided further, That officers on the waiting list shall be retired at 75 per cent of the rate of pay and allowance to which they were entitled when placed on the waiting list."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 9 by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided, That no person by reason of the provisions of this section shall be paid at the rate of more than $100 per calendar month."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHAFROTH) there were ayes 36, noes 92.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 9, line 8, by striking out the words "duty and salary."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk then continued and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the motion temporarily, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by striking out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the enacting clause in the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division, called for by Mr. MANN, there were—ayes 44, noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1025) and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on the bill and amendments to passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the previous question on the bill and amendments to passage.

Mr. MANN. The hour of 5 o'clock having been reached, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 115.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

After counting the House, the Speaker announced 189 members (a quorum) present.

Accordingly the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] to order the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, they will be submitted to the House in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill. Mr. MANN. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill. The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN demanded a division.

Mr. GLENN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 134, nays 49, answered "present" 19, not voting 153, as follows:

YEAS—134.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania for three days, on account of important business.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriations for fortifications and other works defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes. I desire to serve notice that immediately after the Chinese-exclusion bill is disposed of I will call it up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana reports from the Committee on Appropriations the fortification appropriation bill, which will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I present the following report on an urgent deficiency bill (H. R. 13360) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reports an urgent deficiency bill. Does the gentleman desire to call it up to-night?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think I will let it be printed, and ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

CHINESE-EXCLUSION ACT.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that I will endeavor to get the House to take up the Chinese-exclusion bill to-morrow.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that members who have spoken on the Revenue-Cutter bill be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD within five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that members who have spoken on the Revenue-Cutter bill have leave to extend their remarks, for five days, in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment relative to the retirement with the rank of lieutenant-colonel of the ordnance storekeeper, with the rank of major, now on duty as disbursing officer and assistant to the Chief of Ordnance, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I present a proposed amendment to the bill known as the Chinese-exclusion bill; and that it may go into the RECORD I ask to have it read.

The amendment was read and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. PLATT of Connecticut to the bill S. 2930, "To prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent."

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That all laws now in force prohibiting and regulating the coming of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent into the United States, and the residence of such persons therein, be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect until the 7th day of December, 1904, and so long as the treaty between China and the United States, concluded on the 17th day of March, 1894, and proclaimed by the President on the 8th day of December, 1894, may be continued in force by virtue of the extension thereof in accordance with the provisions for such extension therein contained."

DANISH TREATY.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that an order be made to reprint as a Senate document the message of the President and the report of the committee relating to the cession of the Danish islands in the West Indies. The number of copies heretofore printed has been exhausted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order asked for by the Senator from Massachusetts will be granted.

STATUTES RELATING TO PATENTS, ETC.

Mr. PRITCHARD submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 600 copies of the report of the commissioners to revise the statutes relating to patents, trade-marks, etc., as revised, with index, be printed for the use of the said commissioners.

ROBERT S. WOODBURY.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3910) granting an increase of pension to Robert S. Woodbury.

ABBIE GEORGE.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1872) granting an increase of pension to Abbie George.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11353, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11353) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the amendments of the committee may be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Current and contingent expenses," on page 2, line 2, to increase the number of agents of Indian affairs from 41 to 44.

For payment per capita, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to certain Creek Indians, or their heirs, who removed themselves from east of the Mississippi River to the Creek Nation, in the Indian Territory, and subsisted themselves for one year, in accordance with the twelfth article of the treaty with the Creek tribe, proclaimed April 4, 1832, $12,230, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, before payment is made, require satisfactory proof that each of said Indians is entitled to the same under the provisions of said treaty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Indians at Blackfeet Agency," on page 15, line 13, before the word "Reservation," to strike out "Blackfoot" and insert "Blackfeet."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Iowas," on page 15, line 19, after the word "first," to strike out "eighteen hundred and ninety-eight" and insert "nineteen hundred and two," so as to make the clause read:

For interest in lieu of investment on $57,500, balance of $157,500, to July 1, 1902, at 5 per cent per annum, for education or other beneficial purposes, under the direction of the President, per ninth article of treaty of May 17, 1854, $2,875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Spokanes," on page 25, line 4, after the word "of," to strike out "said agreement" and insert:

Agreement with said Indians, dated March 18, 1887, ratified by act of Congress approved July 13, 1892.

So as to make the clause read:

For pay of a blacksmith and carpenter to do necessary work and to instruct the said Indians in those trades, $1,000 each, per sixth article of agreement with said Indians, dated March 18, 1887, ratified by act of Congress approved July 13, 1892, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

For the purchase of heifers and bulls for the Indians on the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation, $28,000; for the construction of wire fence around a portion of said reservation, $7,150; in all, $35,150: Provided, That the expenditure of this money shall be under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall purchase the cattle, regulate their distribution, and construct the fence, according to such rules and regulations as in his discretion he may deem best.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 11, before the word "Dakota," to insert "South;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Ponca Indians, including pay of employees, $15,000: Provided, That this amount shall be divided pro rata among all the members of said tribe in Oklahoma Territory and in Nebraska and South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 7, before the word "in," to strike out "Hualpais" and insert "Hualapais;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of subsistence and other necessities for the support of the Hualapais in Arizona, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 13, after the word "agency," to insert "in the State of Washington;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Yakimas, and other Indians at said agency, in the State of Washington, including the pay of employees, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 23, before the word "lands," to insert "suitable;" in line 25, after the word "Interior," to strike out "may at any time, in his discretion," and insert "shall as soon as practicable;" in line 8, on page 32, after the date "1887," to insert "Provided, That such allotments shall be made;" and in line 12, after the word "Interior" to insert:

For the payment of the expenses of a commission of 3 citizens of the State of California, to be appointed by the President, to aid in the selection of said tract of land, which expenses shall not exceed the sum of $1,000, and;

So as to make the clause read:

For the support and civilization of the Mission Indians in California, $100,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That out of said sum the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase a suitable tract of land in southern California and to locate thereon such Mission Indians heretofore residing or belonging on the Rancho San Jose del Valle, or Warners Ranch, in San Diego County, Cal., and such other Mission Indians as may not be provided with suitable lands elsewhere as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to locate thereon. And the Secretary of the Interior shall as soon as practicable cause the land so purchased to be allotted in severalty to the Indians located thereon, under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," approved February 8, 1887: Provided, That such allotments shall be made in such quantities and to such classes as he may deem expedient: Provided further, That of said amount a sum not exceeding $30,000 may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the payment of the expenses of a commission of three citizens of the State of California, to be appointed by the President, to aid in the selection of said tract of land, which expenses shall not exceed the sum of $1,000, and in the removal of said Indians to the said tract, and in the purchase of such building materials, agricultural implements, harness, subsistence supplies, and other necessities, as may be required to properly establish the Indians at their new location.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 5, after the word "agencies," to strike out "$8,000; in all, $15,000," and insert:

Including 1 clerk for Mission Tule Agency, Cal., at $720 per annum, $8,720; in all, $15,720.

California: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, including traveling expenses of agents and support and civilization of Indians at the Round Valley, Hoopa Valley, and Tule River agencies, $7,000; and pay of employees at same agencies, including 1 clerk for Mission Tule Agency, Cal., at $720 per annum, $8,720; in all, $15,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous," on page 35, line 12, before the word "commissioners," to insert "four;" in line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided further, That said Commission shall exercise all the powers heretofore conferred upon it by Congress.

So as to make the clause read:

For salaries of four commissioners appointed under acts of Congress approved March 3, 1898, and March 2, 1895, to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, $20,000.

Mr. STEWART. In the printing of the bill as it came from the House there is an omission of a proviso on page 35, line 16, which should appear in the print of the bill with a line drawn through it, so as to show that the committee have reported in favor of striking it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words which have been omitted in the printing will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The words omitted from the print of the bill are:

Provided, That the number of said commissioners shall hereafter be three.

Mr. STEWART. The insertion of those words puts the bill in the correct form in which it came from the House. They should appear, as I have stated, with a line drawn through them, to show that the committee recommend that they be stricken out.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is a mistake in the printing of the House bill, as I understand.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; in printing the House bill, after it came to the Senate, the words which have been read at the desk were left out.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But, all the same, we want to strike out those words.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; we want to strike out those words, but we do not want to leave them out of the print of the bill as it is reported to the Senate, so that when the bill goes back to the House the House can see exactly what portion of its bill has been stricken out.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then the words referred to are to appear in the print crossed out of the House bill, and then the entire provision is to be stricken out?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it will be entirely sufficient, Mr. President, if the Secretary be instructed to correct the print of the bill so as to make it correspond with the House bill, and then let the entire provision be stricken out.

Mr. STEWART. All I want is to correct the printing of the bill as it came from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the committee desire the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; let the amendment be stated as it should properly appear by putting in the words which were omitted.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 16, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out:

Provided, That the number of said commissioners shall hereafter be three: Provided further, That said Commission shall exercise all the powers heretofore conferred upon it by Congress.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 35, after line 18, to insert:

That the decisions of the commissioners of the Five Civilized Tribes heretofore rendered shall be final as to all matters of appraisement and allotment of lands unless disapproved by the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the passage of this act or within thirty days from the date of decisions hereafter rendered; and the decisions of said commissioners determining the right of citizenship in any of the Five Civilized Tribes heretofore rendered shall be final: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall have power at any time within sixty days from the passage of this act to review any such cases which in his opinion have not been correctly decided; and all decisions hereafter rendered by said commissioners determining the right of citizenship in any of said tribes shall be final, unless an appeal therefrom to the Secretary of the Interior shall be taken within thirty days from the rendition thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 10, before the word "of," to strike out "Expenses" and insert "For expenses;" and in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-eight" and insert "ninety-three;" so as to read:

For expenses of commissioners and necessary expenses of employees, and $3 per diem for expenses of a clerk detailed as special disbursing agent by the Interior Department while on duty with the Commission, shall be paid therefrom; for clerical help, including secretary of the Commission and interpreters (act of March 3, 1901, vol. 31, p. 1074, sec. 1), $93,000; contingent expenses of the Commission (same act), $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 6, after the word "defined," to strike out "not later than July 1, 1902," and insert "as early as practicable;" and in line 17, after the word "sites," to insert the following proviso:

"Provided further, That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person to lay out, survey, or plat any tract of land into town lots for a town site in either the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, or Cherokee Nation, in the Indian Territory, except with the permission of the Secretary of the Interior, prior to the delivery of the deed or patent conveying full title to said tract from the tribe to the Indian allottee; and any person violating the foregoing provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $500 and may be imprisoned for not exceeding three months: Provided further, That after the passage of this act, where tracts of land are set aside for town sites on lines of railroads now in construction or to be constructed, all lands embraced in such tracts shall be sold at public auction, and parties entering upon such tracts prior to such sale shall acquire no rights by reason of such occupancy: And provided further, That any park laid out and surveyed in any town shall be duly appraised at a fair valuation, and the inhabitants of said town shall, within one year after the approval of the survey and the appraisement of said park by the Secretary of the Interior, pay the appraised value to the proper officer for the benefit of the tribe or tribes entitled thereto."

So as to make the clause read:

To pay all expenses incident to the survey, platting, and appraisement of town sites in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Cherokee nations, Indian Territory, as required by sections 15 and 29 of an act entitled "An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1898, and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, $50,000: Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior may, whenever the chief executive of the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations fails or refuses to appoint a town-site commissioner for any town, or to fill any vacancy caused by the neglect or refusal of the town-site commissioner appointed by the chief executive of the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations to qualify or act, in his discretion, appoint a commissioner to fill the vacancy thus created: Provided further, That the limits of such towns in the Cherokee, Choctaw, and Chickasaw nations, having a population of less than 200 people, as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, should be established, shall be defined as early as practicable by the Secretary of the Interior in the same manner as provided for towns having over 200 people under existing law, and the same shall not be subject to allotment.

That the land so segregated and reserved from allotment shall be disposed of, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, by a town-site commission, one member to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and one by the executive of the nation in which such land is located; proceeds arising from the disposition of such lands to be applied in like manner as the proceeds of other lands in town sites: Provided further, That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person to lay out, survey, or plat any tract of land into town lots for a town site in either the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, or Cherokee Nation, in the Indian Territory, except with the permission of the Secretary of the Interior, prior to the delivery of the deed or patent conveying full title to said tract from the tribe to the Indian allottee; and any person violating the foregoing provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $500 and may be imprisoned for not exceeding three months: Provided further, That after the passage of this act, where tracts of land are set aside for town sites on lines of railroads now in construction or to be constructed, all lands embraced in such tracts shall be sold at public auction, and parties entering upon such tracts prior to such sale shall acquire no rights by reason of such occupancy: And provided further, That any park laid out and surveyed in any town shall be duly appraised at a fair valuation, and the inhabitants of said town shall, within one year after the approval of the survey and the appraisement of said park by the Secretary of the Interior, pay the appraised value to the proper officer for the benefit of the tribe or tribes entitled thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUARLES. I wish to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 25 on page 39. It occurs to me that after the word "any" and before the word "person," in that line, there should be inserted the word "such." I wish the chairman would look at it.

Mr. STEWART. I think that that word "such" should be inserted. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 25, on page 39, after the word "any," it is proposed to insert the word "such;" so as to read:

And no part of this appropriation shall be used for the deportation or removal of any such person from Indian Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 40, line 2, before the word "Creek," to strike out "Chickasaw, Choctaw;" in the same line, after the word "Creek," to strike out the comma; in line 8, after the word "be," to strike out "three hundred and twenty acres for each member of the Chickasaw Nation, three hundred and twenty acres for each member of the Choctaw Nation;" and in line 12, before the word "acres," to strike out "one hundred," and insert "eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of removing intruders and placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and to be immediately available, $15,000; in all, $100,000: Provided, however, That it shall hereafter be unlawful to remove or deport any person from the Indian Territory who is in lawful possession of any lots or parcels of land in any town or city in the Indian Territory which has been designated as a town site under existing laws and treaties, and no part of this appropriation shall be used for the deportation or removal of any person from Indian Territory: Provided, That the just and reasonable share of each member of the Creek and Cherokee nations of Indians, in the lands belonging to the said tribes, which each member is entitled to hold in his possession until allotments are made, as provided in the act entitled "An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be 160 acres for each member of the Creek Nation, and 80 acres for each member of the Cherokee Nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 13, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, through some official or employee designated by him for that purpose, to pay from the funds in the Treasury belonging to the Cherokee Nation of Indians outstanding warrants not exceeding in amount the sum of $80,000: Provided, That before any of said warrants are paid the Secretary of the Interior shall satisfy himself that such warrants are a valid and subsisting obligation of said nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 14, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be allotted, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved February 28, 1891, to each and every child born of a recognized member of any of the tribes of Indians located on the Klamath Reservation in Oregon since the completion of allotments to said tribes, 80 acres of agricultural or 160 acres of grazing land within the reservation of said tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 15, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to allot from the land on the Walker River Reservation in Nevada susceptible of irrigation by the present ditches or extensions thereof 20 acres to each head of a family residing on said reservation, and when a majority of the heads of families on said reservation shall have accepted such allotments and consented to the relinquishment of the right of occupancy to land on said reservation which can not be irrigated from existing ditches and extensions thereof and land, which is not necessary for dwelling, school buildings, or habitations, such allottees shall receive the sum of $300 each to enable them to commence the business of agriculture. And when such allotments shall have been made, and the consent of the Indians obtained as aforesaid, the President shall, by proclamation, open the land so relinquished to settlement, to be disposed of under existing laws. And the money necessary to pay said Indians is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 9, to insert:

To enable the President to cause the agricultural and grazing lands of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., to be allotted in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and the act of February 28, 1891, amendatory thereof, including the necessary surveys and resurveys, $10,000 (reimbursable).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 17, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to allot Nay may puck, Ka ka keese, and Ka kee ka kee sick lands in severalty on the ceded portion of the Red Lake Reservation, Minn., not to exceed 100 acres each, such allotments to conform to the public surveys and to be subject to the provisions of the act of Congress of February 8, 1887 (24 Stats., p. 388).

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think that the allotment act described in lines 14 and 15 on page 43, in the amendment which has just been stated, is correctly quoted. I think there is more in the title of the act than is there included. The full title of the act is "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes." The last part of the title is left out in the citation of the title of the act referred to in the amendment. It ought to be added. The Secretary can do it.

Mr. STEWART. Let the title of the act be corrected.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment on page 43, line 25, after the word "Indians," by inserting "on various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes;" so as to read:

An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. There seems to be a similar mistake in quoting the title of the act for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians in lines 7 and 8 on page 42.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think I am not mistaken about the correct title of the act.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that if the change should be made in one place it ought also to be made in the other.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to putting in the full title wherever the act is referred to. It might as well be done.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will look it up.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to be the same statute referred to in both cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will insert the proper title, in the absence of objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, at the top of page 44, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to allot Onab Ogamaybeck, a Red Lake Chippewa Indian woman, an allotment of unappropriated lands on the ceded portion of the Red Lake Reservation, Minn., not to exceed 100 acres, such allotment to conform to the public surveys and to be subject to the provisions of the act of Congress of February 8, 1887 (24 Stats., p. 388).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 9, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to Nora G. Hazlett, a Caddo Indian, for not to exceed 80 acres of the 160 acres of land heretofore allotted to her in the Territory of Oklahoma, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said land are hereby removed: Provided, That it shall appear that such tract of land has been duly allotted to said Nora G. Hazlett.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 2, to insert:

For temporary employment and support of the Indians of Pima Agency, Ariz., $40,000, to be expended for their benefit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion may deem best.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 10, to strike out:

That the following sums, placed upon the books of the Treasury by the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stats., 1062, 1068), to the credit of the tribes named, being in full for permanent annuities guaranteed by treaties to said tribes, shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1902, viz: Seneca fund, $73,800; Eastern Shawnee fund, $20,600; and a sum sufficient to pay the interest on the same for the fiscal year 1903 is hereby appropriated. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to pay per capita to the members of the Eastern Shawnee and Seneca tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory the principal of these sums placed to the credit of said tribes on the books of the Treasury.

And insert:

That the following sums, placed upon the books of the Treasury by the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. L., pp. 1062 and 1068), to the credit of the tribes named, being in full for permanent annuities guaranteed by treaties to said tribes, shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1902, namely: Chickasaw national fund, $90,000; Seneca fund, $73,800; Eastern Shawnee fund, $20,600: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, per capita, immediately upon the passage of this act, to the members of the Eastern Shawnee and Seneca tribes of Indians entitled thereto, all moneys placed to the credit of said tribes upon the books of the Treasury and all trust funds held for said tribes by the Government in lieu of investments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 2, to strike out:

That the following sums placed upon the books of the Treasury by the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stats., 1062 and 1068), to the credit of the Chickasaw tribe, being in full for permanent annuities guaranteed by treaties to said tribe, shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from July 1, 1902, namely, Chickasaw national fund, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 11, to strike out:

That the surplus or unallotted lands of the Confederated Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw tribe of Indians, and of the Western Miami tribe of Indians, in the northeastern part of the Indian Territory may be sold on such terms and conditions as the president and the adult members of said tribe may mutually agree upon, the proceeds thereof to be paid per capita according to ownership, as set forth in the act approved March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

And insert:

That so much of the act approved March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory, and for other purposes," which inhibits the sale of their surplus lands for twenty-five years from said date, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That before any distribution per capita shall be made of the proceeds of any sale thereof among said Western Miami Indians there shall first be paid such sum or sums as the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be due for services rendered or expenses incurred by any of the delegates or officers of said Western Miami tribe since the 31st day of March, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 14, to reduce the appropriation to maintain at the city of Omaha, Nebr., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian service, from $10,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. After line 22, page 49, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

To maintain at the city of St. Louis, Mo., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian service, $8,000.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire if that is recommended by the Department?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been. I saw the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he said it was absolutely necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, after the amendment just adopted, to insert:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to allow, in the settlement of the accounts of the disbursing officers in charge of the warehouses for Indian supplies, such sums as may have been disbursed by them during the fiscal years 1901 and 1902 in payment of clerks appointed to clerkships in such warehouses and detailed for duty in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in Washington, D. C.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Let the amendment be passed by temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over, at the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was on page 50, line 13, before the word "be," to insert "when necessary;" so as to make the clause read:

That the $10,000, or so much thereof as may be available, reserved by act of March 3, 1901, out of the amount appropriated for payment of the judgment in favor of the New York Indians, to pay expenses necessary to ascertain the beneficiaries of said judgment, may when necessary be used for the employment of the clerical force necessary therefor in the Office of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 15, to strike out:

For the resurvey and marking of the southern and western boundaries of the Utah Indian Reservation from the initial point on Green River to the intersection of said boundary line with the range line between ranges 6 and 7, east of Sac and Lake meridian, Utah, an estimated distance of 135 miles, at $40 per mile, and for the field examination of said resurvey, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 22, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent thereto of the majority of the adult male Indians of the Utah and the White River tribes of Ute Indians, to be ascertained as soon as practicable by an inspector, shall cause to be allotted to each head of a family 80 acres of agricultural land which can be irrigated and 40 acres of such land to each other member of said tribes, said allotments to be made prior to October 1, 1903, on which date all the unallotted lands within said reservation shall be restored to the public domain: Provided, That persons entering any of said land under the homestead law shall pay therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any mineral lease which has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or any permit heretofore issued by direction of the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with said Indians for a mineral lease; but any person or company having so obtained such approved mineral lease or a permit to negotiate with said Indians for a mineral lease on said reservation, pending such time and up to thirty days before said lands are restored to the public domain as aforesaid, shall have the preferential right to locate under the mining laws not to exceed 640 acres of contiguous mineral land, except the Raven Mining Company, which may locate 100 mining claims of the character of mineral mentioned in its lease; and the proceeds of the sale of the lands so restored to the public domain shall be applied, first, to the reimbursement of the United States for any moneys advanced to said Indians to carry into effect the foregoing provisions, and the remainder, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be used for the benefit of said Indians. And the sum of $70,064.48 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the Uintah and the White River tribes of Ute Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STEWART. In line 16, page 51, after the word "or" I move to strike out the article "a" and insert "such."

The SECRETARY. On page 51, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the article "a" where it occurs before the word "permit" and insert in lieu thereof the word "such."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to:

Mr. STEWART. After the word "Interior" in the tenth line, page 52, I move to insert "to be immediately available."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Ought there not also to be a clause like this: "in fulfillment of treaty obligations;" for that is what the money is paid for as I understand? I do not care anything about it. It can be fixed in conference. But I understand it is to pay the Indians what they claim we have not paid them under our treaty obligations.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think those words need be in there. Although the Indians did not consent to the treaty, the Government took the land and allotted it. The treaty was not ratified. It was a treaty on one side, but the Government availed itself of it. It amounts to a treaty obligation as we have considered it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not ask to have it go in.

Mr. ALLISON. Before this amendment is finally disposed of I hope the Senator from Nevada will give some explanation as respects the details. On its face it looks like a very important amendment, although it may not be.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to call the chairman's attention to the fact that the agent who has gone out to negotiate the treaty told me it was quite important that the bill should separate the two items—$10,000 under the agreement of May 24, 1888, and $60,064.48 under the treaty of January 8, 1898. I have not been able to see the chairman since.

Mr. STEWART. Has the Senator prepared an amendment making that separation?

Mr. CLAPP. I have not one prepared. I can prepare one.

Mr. QUARLES. This is a very important matter, and I ask that the amendment be temporarily passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. That will do.

Mr. STEWART. I think that is the best way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). The amendment will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. RAWLINS subsequently said: I ask that we may be permitted to return to the amendment just passed over. I would suggest an amendment which I think would be satisfactory, and we may then dispose of the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the amendment had been passed over until the conclusion of the reading of the bill; but, of course—

Mr. STEWART. It has been passed by temporarily and will be called up again. Some of the Senators who wanted to hear an explanation of the amendment have left the Chamber. So we had better not act on it now.

Mr. RAWLINS. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 52, after line 16, to strike out:

To enable the President to cause to be allotted, under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," the lands in said separate reservations, as provided in said act, including the necessary resurveys, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 6, to increase the appropriation for the equipment and maintenance of the asylum for insane Indians at Canton, S. Dak., for incidental and all other expenses necessary for the proper conduct and management of that asylum, etc., from $12,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 9, before the word "the," to strike out "$48,000, to be used and expended under the direction and within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, in" and insert "For;" in line 15, after the word "hundred," to insert "$48,000, to be used and expended under the direction and within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of the right, title, and improvements of certain settlers within the external boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona, as set out in the communication of the Secretary of the Interior to the President, dated January 5, 1900, and printed in Senate Document No. 68, of date of January 10, 1900, $48,000, to be used and expended under the direction and within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 13, before the word

"special," to strike out "one" and insert "such;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of 1 special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, $1,500, and for necessary traveling and incidental expenses of such special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 2, to insert:

For the construction and repair of bridges and approaches thereto on the Omaha and Winnebago Agency, in the State of Nebraska, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 5, to strike out:

For the construction of 2 bridges, 1 over Big Soldier Creek and one over Little Soldier Creek, on the Pottowatomie Indian Reservation, in Jackson County, Kans., $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 9, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase additional land from an Oneida Indian allottee or allottees of Wisconsin for the use of the Oneida Indian school, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid to said allottee or allottees; and the allottee or allottees from whom said land may be purchased are hereby authorized and empowered to sell and convey the same to the United States for said purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 17, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the claims of the members of the Lower Brule band of Sioux Indians for loss of property resulting from their forcible removal from their homes south of White River, in South Dakota, in the year 1893, and to determine what amounts they may be justly and equitably entitled to for the loss of such property, and to certify the same to the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay such sums so certified to him by the Secretary of the Interior to members of the Lower Brule band of Indians as aforesaid. And the sum of $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 5, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of the right of way through the allotted lands of the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado for irrigating ditches to the extent of the ground occupied by the water in said ditches and such number of feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof as may be necessary in maintaining and operating the ditches: Provided, That no application for such right of way shall be granted unless accompanied by the consent, in writing, of the allottee or allottees whose land may be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 16, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall make investigation as to the practicability of providing a water supply for irrigation purposes to be used on a portion of the reservation of the Southern Utes in Colorado, and he is authorized, in his discretion, to contract for and to expend from the funds of said Southern Utes in the purchase of perpetual water rights sufficient to irrigate not exceeding 10,000 acres on the western part of the Southern Ute Reservation and for annual charges for maintenance of such water thereon such amount and upon such terms and conditions as to him may seem just and reasonable, not exceeding $150,000 for the purchase of such perpetual water rights and not exceeding a maximum of 50 cents per acre per annum for the maintenance of water upon the land to be irrigated: Provided, That after such an investigation he shall find all the essential conditions relative to the water supply and to the perpetuity of its availability for use upon said lands such as in his judgment will justify a contract for its perpetual use: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, upon making all such contracts, shall require from the person or persons entering upon such contract a bond of indemnity, to be approved by him, for the faithful and continuous execution of such contract as provided therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to page 58. In view of the fact that there is a preceding proviso, the amendment ought to read, in line 12, "Provided further." That is the usual form.

Mr. STEWART. That is right. Let it be inserted.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, line 12, after the word "Provided" it is proposed to insert the word "further."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 59, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to pay per capita to the Omaha Indians entitled thereto the sum of $100,000 from their principal now to their credit in the Treasury of the United States and derived from the sale of their lands in Nebraska under section 3 of the act of Congress approved August 7, 1882 (22 Stats., p. 341), under such regulations as may be prescribed by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 9, to insert:

That of the principal sum of $168,335.10 now in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sioux Indians of the Crow Creek Reservation in South Dakota, drawing interest at 4 per cent per annum, $20,000 may be used for the purchase of stock cattle, $25,000 may be paid pro rata in cash, and $83,335.10 may be used in the purchase of cattle fence wire, in the construction of storage reservoirs, in the improvement of their allotments, and in any other manner that will best promote their welfare and civilization, all in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 22, to insert:

For payment to the attorneys who, under a contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, represented the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States in the litigation provided for by act of Congress to determine the title of the said Indians to the lands of the former Wichita reservation, in the Territory of Oklahoma, 6 per cent of the value of said land as decreed by the Court of Claims, the sum of $43,332.93, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available: Provided, That the said sum shall be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 11, to insert:

For payment to James R. Goss, of Billings, Mont., in full settlement of his claim for legal services rendered by him during 1898 in defending two Indian policemen and the interpreter of the Crow Agency, Mont., charged with assault in the local courts of said State, $150, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 17, to insert:

For payment to Robert F. Thompson, for compiling laws relating to Indian affairs and digesting correspondence of the land division of the Indian Office, under provisions of the Indian appropriation act approved March 17, 1882, $3,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 23, to insert:

To reimburse Emmet Cox for the value of the improvements made by him and surrendered to the United States on the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation, as per the award of the board of appraisers appointed under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $3,875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 4, to insert:

For payment to the several persons and firms herein named, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, their several claims for private improvements on the Round Valley Indian Reservation, in Mendocino County, Cal., on March 3, 1873, when said lands were reserved for Indian purposes; and being the several amounts as appropriated and allowed by the Hons. Jed Lake, Arthur A. Smith, and Arthur Twineham, commissioners appointed by the President of the United States on December 13, 1892, to appraise the value of Round Valley Indian Reservation lands and the private improvements made thereon and existing on March 3, 1873, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the reduction of the Round Valley Indian Reservation in the State of California, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, as follows:

To J. N. Rea and D. T. Johnson, $800; to estate of Fred Bourne and estate of D. T. Johnson, $150; to estate of D. T. Johnson, Fred C. Handy, and Percy W. Handy, $500; to Martin Corbitt and Whitcomb Henley, $225; to Charles H. Hurt, $1,625; to Henry Marks, $4,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 7, to insert:

For payment to Huff Jones, of Oconto, Wis., his heirs or legal representatives, the sum of $1,226.39, in full for money expended under an agreement with William T. Richardson, United States Indian agent at Green Bay, Wis., in November, 1872, by which agreement Huff Jones was to cut pine on the Menominee Indian Reservation, in Wisconsin, and build shanties, stables, and roads, and a supply road 5 miles in length, when he was ordered to stop work by Indian Agent Boardman, who succeeded Agent Richardson; and said buildings and roads were subsequently used by Agent Boardman in cutting and hauling lumber on the reservation for a number of winters, and the said Jones has never been reimbursed any part of the amount he so expended under the said agreement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 23, to insert:

For payment to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota entitled thereto, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the money now to their credit in the Treasury of the United States derived from stumpage on dead and down timber cut on ceded Indian lands under the act of June 7, 1897 (30 Stat., p. 90).

Mr. STEWART. After the word "payment," in the first line of the amendment, I move to insert "per capita;" and after the word "as," in the next line, to strike out "he" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

For payment per capita to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota entitled thereto, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, etc.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course the latter amendment is correct, but why insert that this payment shall be per capita? It may be that some of it should be used by the Secretary of the Interior collectively.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Minnesota is familiar with the situation there. What does he suggest?

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest omitting the first amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; let it be omitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the first amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be withdrawn.

Mr. CLAPP. And the second amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the second amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suggest whether there should not be a specific appropriation of money here. I do not know whether the phrase "the money now to their credit" would be sufficient to pay it out.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] is familiar with this particular item. I will ask him if there ought to be a specific appropriation of money.

Mr. CLAPP. This is an amendment which my colleague prepared. I do not think a specific appropriation would be necessary. The money is tied up there. However, there is no objection to passing over the amendment for the present.

Mr. STEWART. I think we had better pass it over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be passed over temporarily.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 63, after line 5, to insert:

For payment to the trustee or executor or administrator of the estate of Eli Ayres, deceased, the sum of $155,200, the same being the amount of the purchase money paid by the said Eli Ayres in his lifetime for 194 sections of land situate in the State of Mississippi, at $1.25 per acre, the price agreed upon, to the Chickasaw reservees, the owners in fee of said lands, under and by virtue of the treaty made by the United States with the Chickasaw Indians in 1834, upon the sale and conveyance to said Eli Ayres by said reservees of said lands in conformity with the requirements of said treaty, and which said lands were subsequently appropriated, sold, and disposed of by the Government of the United States without authority of law and without regard to the rights acquired by said Eli Ayres by virtue of said purchase in and to said lands, and with knowledge of the fact that said Indian grantors of said Ayres had already sold and deeded said lands to him under the terms of said treaty: Provided, That such payment, when made, shall operate as a settlement in full between the said representatives of the estate of said Eli Ayres and the United States, and shall further operate to forever quiet all such land titles in the State of Mississippi conveyed to the said Ayres affected by reason of the premises. (Reimbursable.)

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that this amendment be passed over until the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is present.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. As I may not be present I wish now to say that I desire to make a point of order on the amendment. It may be passed over, but I wish to give notice of a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over temporarily and the next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, line 7—

Mr. MONEY. I did not understand whether any action was taken on the amendment last read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that the amendment was laid aside. The Senator from Connecticut made a point of order against it, and, of course, it goes over with the amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was on page 64, after line 6, to insert:

Whereas, on the second day of July, 1861, it was agreed by treaty that the United States should receive from the sale of lands belonging to the Delaware Indians the sum of $286,742.15, and which by said treaty the United States agreed to pay to the Indians in gold coin; and

Whereas said money was received by the Government of the United States on account of said Delaware Indians on July 18, 1862; and

Whereas the payments to said Indians arising from this fund from 1862 to 1878, both inclusive, were made in currency which was of less value than gold;

Therefore the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to ascertain the difference between the currency value of each payment made from said fund to said Indians from 1862 to 1878, both inclusive, and the value of a like amount of coin with which the United States was chargeable under said treaty for said Delaware Indians, and if found impracticable to ascertain the gold value of each payment he shall ascertain the average yearly difference between gold coin and the currency paid to said Indians during the period in which payments were made to them from the said fund, and calculate the amount of money necessary to make such payments for each year equal to payments in gold coin, and he shall pay to said Delaware tribe of Indians, residing in said Cherokee Nation, in the Indian Territory, as said tribe in council shall direct, the amount so ascertained and found to be due; and the sum of $130,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury such information from his Department as may be required to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make said computation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 19, to insert:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall also pay to the Chippewa Indians of the Mississippi and Lake Superior the sum of $18,670.89, heretofore found to be the difference in value between coin and the currency paid to said Indians during the years from 1863 to 1876, inclusive, said payments having been made under treaty stipulations which provided for payment in coin.

Mr. ALLISON. This seems to be one long amendment here. These separate paragraphs are agreed to, are they not, as the paragraphs are reached?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has treated them as separate amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. Going back to page 64—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair treated the amendment in regard to the Delawares as one amendment and the amendment for payment to the Chippewas as another amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I would be very glad to have that part of the treaty read which requires us to pay in gold coin, if the Senator has the treaty at hand.

Mr. STEWART. Article 3, treaty of 1860, 12 Statutes at Large, on page 1130, provides for the sale of the Delaware lands and payment therefor in gold and silver, as follows:

ARTICLE 3. The Delaware tribe of Indians, entertaining the belief that the value of their lands will be enhanced by having a railroad passing through their present reservation, and being of the opinion that the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, incorporated by an act of the legislative assembly of Kansas Territory, will have the advantage of travel and general transportation over every other company proposed to be formed which will run through their lands, have expressed a desire that the said Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company shall have the preference of purchasing the remainder of their lands after the tracts in severalty and those for the special objects herein named shall have been selected and set apart, upon the payment into the United States Treasury, which payment shall be made within six months after the quantity shall have been ascertained, in gold or silver coin, of such a sum as three commissioners, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall appraise to be the value of said land.

Treaty of 1861, 12 Statutes at Large, page 1181, referring to the same subject-matter, contains the following:

Whereas by the treaty of Sarcoxville, amended by the United States Senate, and finally ratified by the President of the United States on the 22d day of August, 1860, a principal object of both parties was the construction of a certain contemplated railroad therein named; and to that end the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company were to pay into the United States Treasury in gold or silver coin a sum of money, afterwards ascertained to be $286,742.15, as the appraised value of the certain lands in Kansas belonging to the Delaware tribe of Indians.

This $286,742.15, which was received in gold coin by the Government, was paid to the Indians, contrary to the terms of the treaty, in currency, as shown by the reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as follows:

†Principal.

Mr. ALLISON. That money was paid into the Treasury by this railroad company?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. And probably paid in currency?

Mr. STEWART. No, it was paid in coin.

Mr. ALLISON. By the company?

Mr. STEWART. By the railroad company.

Mr. ALLISON. And it is now standing to the credit of these Indians. What has become of the principal fund?

Mr. STEWART. Some of it has been paid out. There has always been some confusion about this matter because when this fund was put in the Treasury it was sent from the Interior Department and consolidated with other funds and paid out as the funds were payable. It was not payable in any specific currency, but the Interior Department took from this fund as the items were sent in by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be paid. There have been two payments made. The obligation was recognized that the Government should pay in gold, but the fund was not ascertained. However, by taking the records of the Interior Department, the Comptroller says there is no difficulty, from the reports of the Commissioners sent in, in ascertaining and figuring up the money to be paid out.

Mr. ALLISON. My attention was called to the amendment from the fact that I see that there is in the midst of it a long whereas. Of course, the Secretary of the Treasury in undertaking to adjust these accounts will be obliged to assume that these whereas are true. I suppose they are true.

Mr. STEWART. They are copied from the treaty. However, they might be stricken out.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. Is not the case in a nutshell simply that the United States received gold to be paid to these Indians and paid them in depreciated currency?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. QUAY. Is not this exactly the case which was met in the urgent deficiency bill passed some six weeks ago where the State of Pennsylvania and some other States claimed from the United States the difference between the gold advanced for the use of the Government and the currency received in return for it, the justice of which claim was admitted by the Senate?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like just to ask to what extent the rule applied here is to be extended?

Mr. STEWART. It is not to be extended at all. There were four cases where the Government received gold and was to pay out gold. There are a great many cases, many involving many millions, where they were paid right along out of their funds in currency. In the absence of a special contract the Government can pay in legal tender, and it incurs no legal obligation. A good many claims have come in before the committee where it was said there was an implied obligation to pay in gold because the currency was depreciated, but the courts have decided that the Government can pay its debts in its own legal tender, and the Government is supreme in that respect; there is no appeal from it. But where the Government contracts to pay in gold, of course the Government is bound the same as private individuals would be bound in such a case.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has this case been tested in court?

Mr. STEWART. A similar case between private individuals, but not this case. It was conceded in the other cases, but there was difficulty in this case growing out of the fact that the fund was consolidated in the Treasury Department with other funds, and there was no way of separating it until the Commissioner of Indian Affairs said that they had a record of the amounts at the times they were sent to the Treasury right along from this fund, and the Comptroller says with that information he can compute the amount.

Mr. ALLISON. The fact is that these funds were sent to the Treasury and mingled with others?

Mr. STEWART. They were mingled after they were sent in.

Mr. ALLISON. They were not all for the same purpose?

Mr. STEWART. No; they were sent in to be paid to different Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] likens this case to the case of Pennsylvania. I wish to say that there was a very substantial difference in the case of Pennsylvania. The United States Government, as I remember it, agreed to pay all the expenses incurred by the States in the prosecution of the war of the rebellion, or the civil war, whatever it may be called at this time, and the State of Pennsylvania issued bonds, payable, principal and interest, in gold, for the purposes of troops of Pennsylvania, and paid the interest on it for fifteen or twenty years, and in the payment of that interest claimed that they had paid out an additional sum; in other words, that paying the interest in gold made the interest cost the State of Pennsylvania more than 6 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. Buying gold with currency?

Mr. ALLISON. Buying gold with currency. The Court of Claims, I believe, in that case decided that whatever sums were paid out by the State should be reimbursed by the Government of the United States. I am not criticising this matter. I suppose that the committee have very carefully considered it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order to dispose of the amendment now under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside pending the disposition of the amendment on pages 64 and 65 of the Indian appropriation bill now under consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask whether the consideration of that is expected to take any great length of time?

Mr. STEWART. It will not, if the Senator from Iowa does not desire to occupy the floor any longer.

Mr. ALLISON. I have nothing further to say on the subject.

Mr. PENROSE. All right.

Mr. ALLISON. If the treaty requires these sums to be paid in gold coin, I think the United States ought to meet the obligation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment will be considered as agreed to, and the following amendment, on page 65, which has been read by the Secretary, providing for payment to the Chippewa Indians, will, without objection, be considered as agreed to.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President—

Mr. CLAPP. Owing to some confusion when the bill on page 35 was read, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary may read after the word "commissioners"—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Chinese-exclusion bill was temporarily laid aside to complete the pending amendment. The unfinished business was laid aside only for that purpose.

Mr. CLAPP. There was no amendment pending there.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is now before the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. But I ask unanimous consent—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business was laid aside temporarily by unanimous consent to complete the amendment on pages 64 and 65. The amendment having been completed, the unfinished business, which is the Chinese-exclusion bill, is again before the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. I still submit that the Senate might by unanimous consent permit this to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course, if the Senator desires to make that request.

Mr. CLAPP. No; I do not care to press it, Mr. President.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator from Iowa is here, and I ask unanimous consent that we may go back to the amendment which was temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is again obliged to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the Chinese-exclusion bill is before the Senate. The Indian appropriation bill has been temporarily laid aside, and the Chair is about to recognize the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], who gave notice of his desire to address the Senate at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 1011) granting an increase of pension to John S. Raulett;

A bill (H. R. 1706) granting an increase of pension to John E. White;

A bill (H. R. 2120) granting an increase of pension to Horatio N. Warren;

A bill (H. R. 2124) granting an increase of pension to De Witt C. McCoy;

A bill (H. R. 3084) for the relief of bona fide settlers in forest reserves;

A bill (H. R. 3180) granting an increase of pension to Edward S. Dickinson;

A bill (H. R. 3418) granting a pension to Dennis Dyer;

A bill (H. R. 5413) granting an increase of pension to Alfred H. Van Vliet;

A bill (H. R. 6029) granting a pension to Mary E. Kelly;

A bill (H. R. 6466) granting a pension to Josephine M. Dustin;

A bill (H. R. 6713) granting an increase of pension to Freeman R. E. Chanaberry;

A bill (H. R. 7990) granting an increase of pension to Uriah Reams;

A bill (H. R. 9301) granting an increase of pension to Barbara McDonald;

A bill (H. R. 9821) granting a pension to John W. Moore;

A bill (H. R. 10044) granting an increase of pension to William Larzalere;

A bill (H. R. 10193) granting an increase of pension to John Hollister;

A bill (H. R. 11375) granting a pension to Charles F. Merrill;

A bill (H. R. 11381) granting an increase of pension to Abraham N. Bradfield; and

A bill (H. R. 11409) to authorize the construction of a traffic bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah to Hutchinsons Island, in the county of Chatham, State of Georgia.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8327) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories," asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MOODY of Oregon, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. HALL managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2371) granting a pension to Andrew J. Felt, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CALDERHEAD, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. NORTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee to attend the ceremonies incident to the transfer of the remains of Gen. William S. Rosecrans from California to the cemetery at Arlington, Va.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. Before the Senator from Oregon proceeds, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read by paragraphs for consideration of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the bill may be read by paragraphs for amendment, the committee amendments to be considered first. Without objection the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania is agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I assume at the outset the time is past when argument is longer needed in support of the policy of the exclusion of Chinese laborers from this country. It has become one of the great policies of the country, as firmly supported and almost as thoroughly acquiesced in by all political parties, as the Monroe doctrine. It is a policy based on the doctrine of the general welfare; on the principle, not only of protection to the American laborer and American labor, but upon the still broader doctrine of protection against noxious infection of those institutions of our country, which in the grand aggregate go to make up American civilization. I shall not, therefore, detain the Senate with any very extended remarks, recounting reasons and submitting arguments in favor of the exclusion from this country of Chinese laborers. This I have done heretofore on many different occasions since I have been a member of this body. I shall therefore confine myself, in the main, at this time to some remarks explanatory of the provisions of the pending bill.

This bill has for its basic principles those embodied in the existing legislation of the country, with such additions and elaborations as experience in the administration of existing law by the Treasury Department, the Department of Justice, and the courts has suggested, not only as being wise, but of manifest importance and necessity; and also such necessary additions as the changed conditions in our country have made necessary in order to include within its provisions our insular territory. It has been the aim of the framers of this bill to so construct it as to make it as perfect and effective as possible as a restrictive measure in its application to Chinese laborers and laborers of Chinese descent, and at the same time, while keeping steadily in view all necessary means of protection against fraud, to liberalize, so far as possible, those provisions relating to the exempted classes, namely, officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity and pleasure.

Experience in the administration of the existing law has led to numerous decisions, not only of the Treasury Department, but of the Federal courts, and opinions of the Attorney-General, which have fully demonstrated the necessity of incorporating into the statutes the more important of the principles thus definitely settled. This, it is believed, is necessary, in order the better to prevent frauds and make the legislation efficient and effective for the purpose intended.

It may therefore be said at the outset there is no real departure in the provisions of this bill, in the principles enunciated, or in its administrative machinery from those of the statutes now in operation, as defined and construed by the Treasury Department, by the Department of Justice, and by the Federal courts.

The bill is, in a word, as so well stated by Mr. Edward J. Livernash, one of the California commissioners, in his able argument before the Committee on Immigration—virtually a codification of the existing law on the subject-matter to which it relates, except in so far as it liberalizes present law and regulations concerning Chinese persons who are not laborers, and in so far as it is intended to prohibit movements of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent from the Philippine Islands to Hawaii and the American-mainland territory of the United States.

There is included in this bill all that is believed to be applicable and best and which may with propriety be embodied in a statute of the provisions found in the acts of Congress of 1882, 1884, 1888, 1892, and 1893, and of our treaty with China of December 8, 1894. Also numerous provisions, embodying settled principles and adjudications in existing Treasury rules and regulations, opinions of the Attorney-General, and decisions of the courts.

It may be further stated it has been the aim of those concerned in the preparation of the pending bill, and of the various amendments proposed by the committee, while seeking to present a measure which will be effective in the exclusion from this country of Chinese laborers and laborers of Chinese descent, to carefully avoid doing anything which may give just cause for offense to the Chinese Empire, with which it is hoped we may continue on the most friendly relations, and which good relations it is believed will tend to the enlargement and extension of our mutual interests to the continued and ultimate benefit of both countries. It will therefore be seen, on a critical examination of the provisions of this bill, that so far from restricting and imposing impediments, its provisions having reference to the exempted classes—officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure—have been liberalized.

It may be said further that this proposed legislation does not in any respect invade any of our treaty obligations with China, and by no rule of international law or of the comity of nations are we under any obligation whatever, either legally or morally, constitutionally or otherwise, to await the consent of China to the enactment of this legislation. The right to determine what persons or class of persons, either from China or from any other foreign country on the face of the globe, shall come here and participate in the grand upbuilding of our nationality and in the advancement and perpetuity of American institutions, is one of those inalienable rights that attach to us as a sovereign and independent people.

And if, in the judgment of the lawmaking power of this Republic, it is not for the best interests of our institutions, or of our Republic, or of our people that a certain class or certain classes of the people of any foreign country shall be permitted to come and reside here, then the same in alienable right attaches to us to exclude them, as does the right and duty upon our part as a nation to exclude anarchists, criminals, paupers, insane persons, and other similarly objectionable classes.

By the first section of this bill it is provided that from and after its passage the coming, except under certain specified conditions, of Chinese laborers from any foreign country to the United States, or to its territory, or to any territory under its jurisdiction shall be absolutely prohibited; and as to this there is no limit as to time. This provision, it will be observed, is only different from the existing law in these two particulars, that it prohibits the coming of Chinese laborers to the territory of the United States, and to any territory under its jurisdiction, and there is no limit as to time.

By section 2 of the bill it is provided that from and after its passage the entry into the American-mainland territory of the United States of Chinese laborers coming from any insular territory of the United States shall be absolutely prohibited, and it is provided that this prohibition shall apply to all Chinese laborers, as well to those who were in such insular territory when the same was acquired by the United States as to those who have come there since, and it shall also apply to those who have been born there since, and also to those who may be born there hereafter. By this section the same prohibition of entry is made to apply to Chinese laborers coming to one island of the United States from any other insular territory of the United States, except territory of a group whereof such island is a member.

And it is also provided in this section that the privileges of transit provided by another section of the bill in favor of other Chinese persons are given to Chinese laborers in all territory of the United States, subject to certain provisions relating to transit provided in other portions of the bill. This, of course, is new legislation, the effect of which is to make the exclusion as to Chinese laborers applicable to our insular territory and to inhibit Chinese laborers from going to one island of the United States from any other insular territory, except as I have just stated, to the island of a group whereof such island is a member. This, it will be observed, is in line with the policy adopted by Congress in dealing with the Hawaiian Islands.

By joint resolution of July 7, 1898, United States Statutes 1897-98, page 751, it is provided as follows:

There shall be no further immigration of Chinese into the Hawaiian Islands, except upon such conditions as are now or may hereafter be allowed by the laws of the United States, and no Chinese by reason of anything herein contained shall be allowed to enter the United States from the Hawaiian Islands.

While by section 101 of the act approved April 30, 1900, it is provided as follows:

That Chinese in the Hawaiian Islands when this act takes effect may, within one year thereafter, obtain a certificate of residence, as required by "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese into the United States," approved May 5, 1892, as amended by an act approved November 3, 1893, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese into the United States,' approved May 5, 1892," and until the expiration of said year shall not be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States if found therein without such certificate: Provided, however, That no Chinese laborer, whether he shall hold such certificate or not, shall be allowed to enter any State, Territory, or district of the United States from the Hawaiian Islands.

The great purpose of the legislation excluding Chinese laborers and laborers of Chinese descent from this country being to protect the laborer of this country from ruinous competition with the cheap labor of Asia, it would be a rather strange commentary upon both the prescience and the consistency of our nation if, while striving strenuously to close the door against Chinese laborers from China, we at the same time left the door wide open to the hundreds of thousands—if, indeed, not millions—of Chinese laborers and laborers of Chinese descent in the Philippine Archipelago. It is said there are at present in the Philippine Archipelago about 1,750,000 Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent—the greater portion of them, it is true, being half-breeds, or persons of Chinese descent.

The proposed legislation does not prohibit a Chinese laborer from going from one island of the Philippine Archipelago to another island of that archipelago, nor from one of the Hawaiian Islands to another island of that group of islands, but it does interdict the coming of a Chinese laborer from one of the Philippine Islands to one of the Hawaiian Islands, or to Porto Rico, or to one of our Danish West India Isles—when they shall become ours and they doubtless will at a very early date—as well as to the United States. As to the constitutionality of an act restricting the privilege of locomotion in this respect, as applicable to this class of persons, I have no serious doubt, although that may possibly be questioned by some. In any event Congress has, as I have already shown, committed itself fully to this doctrine in its legislation in regard to Hawaii.

This restriction, it will be observed, is also made applicable not only to persons born in our insular territory, but to those who may hereafter be born in such territory. This has led to the query from certain sources, believed to be hostile generally to the policy of exclusion, whether these persons, especially those born in our insular territory hereafter, are not citizens of the United States, and that, therefore, this provision would be unconstitutional, as coming in conflict with the fourteenth amendment.

This legislation, however, proceeds upon the theory which, it is believed, has been announced by the highest judicial tribunal of this country, that our insular territory is not a part of the United States, but, on the contrary, is territory belonging to the United States. It is believed, therefore, that the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is not applicable to this class of persons born in this portion of our insular territory. That amendment provides as follows:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

Hence, to bring a person within the protection of this amendment two of three things must concur. He must be either born or naturalized in the United States and be subject to the jurisdiction thereof. By section 3 of the bill a definition is given to the term "laborer" as used in this bill. It is the same definition in substance and effect and in almost the identical language given by the existing law as construed by the decisions of the Department, and it is construed to mean both skilled and unskilled manual laborers, Chinese persons employed in mining, fishing, huckstering, peddling, or laundry work, and those engaged in taking, drying, or otherwise preserving shellfish or other fish for home consumption or exportation. And it is provided in this section that every Chinese person shall be deemed a laborer, within the meaning of this bill, who is not an official, a teacher, a student, a merchant, or a traveler for curiosity or pleasure.

This, I concede, is a provision not in specific terms in the existing legislation, but fully justified, both by the terms of the treaty and by the language of the law. This is clearly manifest, as will be seen from a critical examination of the various provisions of the treaty with China of December 8, 1894; and such, also, is the construction placed by the courts on the term "Chinese laborer," as used in this treaty and as employed in the Geary acts. It is in no sense, therefore, in antagonism either to the letter or the spirit of either treaty or existing legislation. In this connection it is well to inquire what is meant by the term "Chinese laborer" as used in our treaty with China of 1894 and as used in existing legislation prior to that treaty, and which was assented to and recognized by the treaty.

The recognized theory of the legislation upon the subject and of the treaty stipulation is not that all Chinese persons who are not prohibited may enter this country. Upon the contrary, the legislation proceeds upon the theory that only those are allowed to enter who are especially allowed. This rule is clearly laid down by Attorney-General Griggs in his opinion of July 15, 1898, in which he says:

The true theory of the Federal law is not that all Chinese persons may enter this country who are not forbidden, but that only those may enter who are expressly allowed.

Moreover, in the case of Ah Fawn (57 Fed. Rep., 591) United States District Judge Ross, of the southern district of California, entered into an elaborate discussion of the meaning of the terms "Chinese laborer" as used in our treaty with China. In that case, in holding that a Chinese person who was a gambler and also a highbinder, was within the treaty meaning of the term, Judge Ross said:

The question to be determined is, what is the true construction of the words "Chinese laborers," as here used by Congress. Etymologically a laborer is one who labors. In that broad sense a practicing physician is a laborer, and a hard one, too. So, also, is a practicing lawyer. In that sense the professional journalist is a laborer; as is also every minister of the Gospel.

In the same sense every merchant is a laborer, but in neither sense nor writing is that a common or ordinary acceptance of the term "laborer." Worcester thus defines it: "One who labors; one regularly employed at some hard work; a workman; an operative; often used of one who gets a livelihood at coarse, manual labor, as distinguished from an artisan or professional man." And the definition given by Webster is to the same effect. Neither of these considerations furnishes, in my opinion, a true solution of the question. Undoubtedly a gambler is not a "laborer," in the ordinary and popular meaning of that term; nor is a "highbinder," whose avocation is understood to be the commission of every species of crime.

In the act in question (act of Congress of May 5, 1882) Congress did not define the term "Chinese laborers" employed by it. To ascertain the true meaning of the words so used, the purpose of the act must be considered. As its sixth section, providing as it does for expulsion from this country of all Chinese laborers within it at the time of the passage of the act who should fail to comply with its provisions, whether they came here at the invitation of our Government or otherwise, in its stringency went far beyond the provisions of the existing treaties between the two countries, it would be altogether unreasonable to hold that the words "Chinese laborer" in that very section of the act were used in any narrower sense than were the same words in the treaty under which Congress was legislating. It is pertinent and important, therefore, to inquire what is the scope of those words in that treaty.

* * * As finally drafted and agreed upon, the words "Chinese laborers" were not defined; and so their true meaning in the treaty, as in the statutes, is a matter for construction.

The history of the negotiations, as already detailed, leading up to the making of the treaty, merely shows that throughout them the United States commissioners insisted that the words "Chinese laborers" should include all immigration other than that for teaching, trade, travel, study, and curiosity. The first proposal on the part of the United States commissioners so to define them in the treaty itself, met on the part of the Chinese commissioners, not a refusal, but with this response: "The separation of this class from the mass of the subjects of China in this manner is not in strict accord with the spirit of our treaty, and in practical operation would meet with many difficulties. But, bearing in mind the deep friendship between the two nations, in the event of embarrassments on either part a solution must be sought in a spirit of mutual concession."

This was followed by a proposal on the part of the Chinese commissioners of articles in which the word "actual" was inserted immediately before the words "Chinese laborers" and inserting the word "artisan" among the privileged classes. These suggestions met with distinct refusals on the part of the United States commissioners, and both of those words were omitted from the treaty as finally agreed upon, signed, and ratified. Their insertion would have given the words "Chinese laborers" the ordinary and popular meaning of laborers as defined by lexicographers, to wit, those engaged in hard manual work. Their omission under the circumstances stated clearly shows that it was intended that they should have a broader meaning.

Moreover, had the intention been to confine the words "Chinese laborers" to those engaged in hard, manual work, the inhibition would have applied to none other, and there would have been no occasion to make a specific provision, as was done by Article II, for the coming to this country of teachers, students, merchants, or those for curiosity, together with their body and household servants. There was, therefore, good ground for the claim reported by the United States commissioners to have been made by the Chinese commissioners to the effect that Article II of the treaty, as agreed upon, "did by exclusion provide that nobody should be entitled to claim the benefit of the general provisions of the Burlingame treaty but those who went to the United States for purposes of teaching, studying, mercantile transactions, travel, or curiosity;" and that such was also the understanding of the United States commissioners is distinctly declared in their report to the Secretary of State already quoted.

Read, therefore, in the light of the accompanying proceedings, it is clear that the words "Chinese laborers" in the treaty of 1880 are not limited to those who do hard, manual work, but that they are broad enough in their true meaning and intent to include Chinese gamblers and highbinders; and for the reasons already given, it is manifest that Congress in passing the act of May 5, 1882, did not use the words "Chinese laborers" in any narrower sense than were the same words in the treaty under which it was legislating.

It is clear, therefore, the latter part of section 3 of the pending bill in providing as it does that every Chinese person shall be deemed a laborer within the meaning of the bill who is not an official, a teacher, a student, a merchant, or a traveler for curiosity or pleasure is clearly within the spirit and proper construction, not only of the treaty with China, but of the Chinese legislation now on the statute book of the country.

This construction of the legislation and especially of the term "Chinese laborers" as used in both our treaties, that of 1880 and that of 1894, and also in the several acts of Congress, is strengthened by a reference to the diplomatic correspondence which took place between the commissioners of the two Governments, and between the Department of State and our own commissioners, or rather in the final report of our commissioners to the Secretary of State, when the treaty of 1880 was under consideration. On the 22d day of October, 1888, the Chinese commissioners wrote to our commissioners, Messrs. Angell, Swift, and Trescott, as follows:

Some days since your excellencies handed to us a project, in two sections, for the modification of existing treaties, which has received our careful consideration. * * * Section 2 declares that there are difficulties growing out of the emigration of Chinese laborers to the United States, and explains that the words "Chinese laborers" are used to include all persons except such as go thither for the purpose of teaching, study, trade, travel, and curiosity. The separation of this class from the mass of the subjects of China in this manner is not in strict accord with the spirit of our treaties, and in practical operation would meet with many difficulties. But, bearing in mind the deep friendship between the two Governments, in the event of embarrassment on either part a solution must be sought in a spirit of mutual concession.

To this communication our commissioners on the 2d day of November, 1880, replied as follows:

The United States commissioners feel it their duty to insist upon their definition of Chinese laborers, viz: "The words Chinese laborers are herein used to signify all immigration, other than that for teaching, trade, travel, study, and curiosity hereinbefore referred to and provided for in existing treaties."

Thus it will be seen, while the Chinese commissioners mildly protested in the first instance, pending the negotiations, they in their closing paragraph of their communication virtually concede the claim of the American commissioners; while the reply of the American commissioners, it will be seen, was in the most positive terms of adherence to the construction they insisted should be placed upon the term Chinese laborers; that is to say, that they were to be construed to signify all Chinese immigration other than those of the exempted classes.

But still further, in confirmation of this, attention is called to the communication of the United States commissioners, their final report of date November 6, 1880, addressed to Mr. Evarts, then Secretary of State, and which can be found in "Foreign Relations of the United States, 1881," pages 178-189. In that communication they said:

We desired, as you will see by the précis of the negotiation, to define with more precision exactly what all the negotiators on both sides understood by "Chinese laborers." But the Chinese Government was very unwilling to be more precise than the absolute necessity called for, and they claimed that in Article II they did by exclusion provide that nobody should be entitled to claim the benefit of the general provisions of the Burlingame treaty but those who went to the United States for purposes of teaching, study, mercantile transactions, travel, or curiosity.

We have no doubt that an act of Congress, excluding all but these classes, using the words of the treaty, would be fully warranted by its provisions, and as this was a clear and sufficient modification of the sixth article of the Burlingame treaty we did not feel authorized to risk such a concession by insisting upon language which would really mean no more, and which was entirely unacceptable to the Chinese commissioners. There is not in the treaty any language which modifies that concession, and there was not, as we think, the slightest intention on the part of the Chinese commissioners to diminish the full force of the discretion given to the United States.

Section 4 provides that from and after the passage of the bill the privilege of Chinese persons other than Chinese laborers to enter or remain in the United States shall be restricted to officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, as these several classes are defined later on in this bill. This provision is the equivalent of the latter part of section 3, and it has been seen to whom this provision is applicable, and further support is given to this contention by Article III of the treaty with China of December 8, 1894, which reads as follows:

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, of coming to the United States and residing therein.

It is also fully justified by section 2 of the act of Congress of September 13, 1888, which provides as follows:

That Chinese officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure shall be permitted to enter the United States, but in order to entitle themselves to do so they shall first obtain permission of the Chinese Government or other government under which they may at the time be citizens or subjects.

Here the maxim "Expressio unius exclusio alterius" applies.

Bearing upon this phase of the question, attention is attracted to the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States of October 14, 1896, in which he said:

The policy of the Government being against the admission of Chinese laborers, treaty provisions making exceptions should not be extended to those not falling within the plain scope of the language used.

And also the opinion of the Attorney-General of July 15, 1898, in which he stated:

The true theory of the Federal law is not that all Chinese persons may enter this country who are not forbidden, but only those may enter who are expressly allowed.

Section 5 of the pending measure defines the term "official," as used in section 4 of the bill, to mean only one who, being in the service of a foreign government, is regularly accredited as such by the home government he represents; or, if he be a consul of China, is regularly accredited as such under the usual practice of the Imperial Chinese Government; but the attendants and servants of any such official shall be similarly privileged to enter, on being identified as such attendants or servants in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. This is in accordance with existing legislation; there is no change.

Section 6 of the bill defines the term "teacher," as used in this bill, to mean only one who, for not less than two years next preceding his application for entry into the United States, has been continuously engaged in giving instruction in the higher branches of education, and who proves to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that he is qualified to teach such higher branches and has completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States and intends to pursue no other occupation than teaching while in the United States. This provision is in substantial conformity with the practice enforced for many years—in fact, since our first legislation on that subject—and no protest has ever been entered, so far as I am advised, by the Chinese Government.

The practice of existing legislation is evidenced by the following condensation of the present Treasury practice, prepared by a

Treasury official thoroughly familiar with his subject, and who was largely consulted in the preparation of this bill:

Chinese person not entitled to admission as a teacher, if, in addition to presenting proper certificate, etc., the facts claimed in his certificate are disproved; or if any of the contents thereof are controverted; or if evidence does not show that he has actually been following the avocation of teacher in China; or if upon examination in various branches of education it is found that he is not qualified to become a teacher; or if it is not shown to the satisfaction of the collector that plans and arrangements have been effected for him to conduct a school in the United States.

Surely no one can successfully question the right upon the part of Congress to establish and enforce all necessary and reasonable rules and regulations which will operate as statutory safeguards against fraud, and which will truly and properly test the good faith and sincerity of all Chinese persons making claim to belong to one or the other of the exempted classes. If a Chinese person claims the right to enter this country on the ground that he is a teacher, he can not under the terms of the treaty be heard to object to the tests which this bill applies as a means of determining whether his claim is good or bad.

The term "student" is defined by the seventh section of the bill to mean only one who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study or to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation for which adequate facilities for study are not afforded in the foreign country or the territory of the United States whence he comes, and for whose support while studying sufficient provision has been made, and who intends to depart from the territory of the United States immediately on completion of his studies. This definition follows that heretofore placed on the term "student" as used in our treaty with China and in the Geary Act by the departments of Treasury and Justice.

The Solicitor of the Treasury, in an opinion dated June 15, 1900, in construing the existing treaties and laws, and in defining the term "student" as used therein, said:

A Chinese student is a person who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or one who seeks to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation for which facilities for study are not afforded in his own country, one for whose support and maintenance in this country as a student provision has been made, and who, on the completion of his studies, expects to return to China.

While the Secretary of the Treasury, by decision No. 23107, held as follows:

A Chinese person coming to the United States, applying for admission upon the ground that he intends to study the English language, is not a student within the meaning of the Chinese-exclusion laws, which have been decided to exempt as students only those who intend to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or who seek to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation, facilities for the study of which are not afforded in their own country.

No different definition, therefore, is sought to be placed by the provisions of this bill on the term student from that which has been recognized for many years past in the administration by the departments of the Treasury and Justice of the exclusion treaties and laws. It was clearly the intent of those engaged in formulating our treaties with China to provide for a limited number of educated Chinese youths who might come to this country to advance themselves in the higher branches of education, and not to open the doors to millions of Chinese children to come here to acquire a primary education.

Section 8 of this bill defines the term "merchant" to mean only one who is engaged in buying and selling merchandise at a fixed place of business, and who, during the time he claims to be a merchant, does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant. And it is provided that where an application is made by a Chinese person for entry into the United States as one formerly or at the time engaged in China as a merchant, or in some other foreign country as a merchant, or where such application calls for entry into one portion of the United States from another portion thereof, then, as a prerequisite to entry, the applicant must have been engaged as a merchant for at least one year next preceding his application; and it must appear to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry that he comes to exercise in good faith his calling as a merchant, and that calling exclusively, and that he has the means under his immediate control for forthwith becoming, and has completed arrangements for forthwith becoming, the owner, in whole or in part, in good faith, of a mercantile business in the United States, or some portion of the territory thereof, a business strictly within the meaning given by this bill to the business of a merchant.

This section further provides that where an application is made by a Chinese person for entry into the United States as one formerly engaged in the United States as a merchant he shall, unless he produce the return certificate provided for in another section of this bill, establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer, by the testimony of two credible witnesses other than Chinese, that he conducted such business as hereinbefore defined for at least one year before his departure from the United States, and that during said year he was not engaged in the performance of any manual labor, except such as was necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant, and in default of such proof it provides he is not a merchant within the meaning of the bill. This section is less restrictive and more liberal as to merchants than is the existing legislation as understood by Treasury officials, and as it has been enforced for years by the administrative officers of the Government. This is apparent from regulations of the Treasury Department of date May 19, 1893, as follows:

In the enforcement of the provisions of section 2 of the act of November 3, 1893, relating to the application for admission of alleged returning Chinese merchants, it will not be enough to have witnesses testify that an applicant for at least one year before his departure from the United States was not engaged in the performance of any manual labor except such as was necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant, but the testimony should show specifically the kind of work the Chinaman has done during the entire year, and, after detailing the character of such work, should say that he has not performed any other labor than that specifically set forth.

A further Treasury regulation in compilation issued October 1, 1900, page 37, and which is, if anything, less liberal than the provisions of the pending bill, reads as follows:

When an application is made by a Chinese person for entrance into the United States as a returning merchant, section 2 of the act of November 3, 1893, requires that he shall establish by the testimony of two credible witnesses, other than Chinese, the fact that he conducted business as a merchant for at least one year before his departure from this country, and that during such year he was not engaged in the performance of any manual labor except such as was necessary in the conduct of his business as a merchant. This requirement of law is not complied with when the persons who certify to an acquaintance with the applicant for admission do not state that he conducted business here as a merchant for one year prior to his departure, and the statements made by said persons are not sworn to. (Treasury regulation; compilation issued October 1, 1900, pp. 36, 37.)

Some protest was made, I believe, before the committee in opposition to this section on the ground, as it was claimed, that it was violative of Article IV of the treaty of December 8, 1894, in reference to the most-favored-nation clause. But surely a mere reference to this treaty clause is a sufficient answer to this objection. The clause in the treaty referring to the most-favored-nation clause reads as follows:

It is hereby understood and agreed that Chinese laborers or Chinese of any other class, either permanently or temporarily residing in the United States, shall have for the protection of their persons and property all rights that are given by the laws of the United States to citizens of the most-favored nation, excepting the right to become naturalized citizens.

It will be seen that this clause has no reference whatever to the entry of Chinese into this country, but relates solely to Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, who may be temporarily or permanently residing in the United States. This provision does not attach or in any manner relate to or affect Chinese in their coming to the United States. No right whatever is conferred upon any Chinese person of any class whatever by virtue of this clause until after such Chinese person has entered the United States, and not even then until he has become a resident therein, either temporarily or permanently.

It is preposterous to suppose for one moment that this Government would ever by any treaty stipulation barter away its inalienable right to inhibit the coming to this country of any class of people whatever from any country on the earth if, in the judgment of Congress, such class of persons are objectionable and it is deemed wise to exclude them. In section 9 the term "traveler" is defined to mean only one who shall establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that he is in present possession of adequate funds for paying the costs of the intended travel within the territory of the United States and he proposes in good faith solely to travel for curiosity or pleasure and who intends to depart from the territory into which he is permitted to pass promptly on the conclusion of his itinerary.

This is substantially in accordance with existing law and is believed to be fully justified also by the terms of the treaty, inasmuch as the treaty provides as follows:

It is also agreed that Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries, subject to such regulations by the Government of the United States as may be necessary to prevent said privileges of transit from being abused.

By section 10 of the bill it is provided that the prohibition of section 1 shall not apply to the return to the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States, or property therein of the value of $1,000, or debts therein of like amount due him and pending settlement. But by provision of this section this exception is subject to certain conditions, as follows:

First. A registered Chinese laborer is: (a) One who, being lawfully a resident of Hawaii or the American mainland territory of the United States at the time of the passage of this bill, is the rightful holder of a certificate of residence issued to him under the acts of Congress in effect at the time of the passage of this bill affecting the exclusion of Chinese persons from the United States, such certificate being valid and operative at the time of the passage of this bill; and every such certificate of residence, valid and operative at the time of the passage of this bill, is by the provisions of this section continued valid and operative, but in accordance with the provisions of this bill; and (b) one who, being lawfully a resident of any insular territory of the United States (Hawaii excepted) at the time of the passage of this bill, shall rightfully obtain and retain a certificate of residence therein under the subsequent provisions of this bill; and

Second. The marriage to the wife referred to by this section must have taken place at least one year prior to the application of the laborer for permission to return and must have been followed by cohabitation of the parties as husband and wife, and it must further be made to appear that the applicant has no other wife, under Chinese or other laws or customs, living at the time of such marriage; and

Third. If the right to return be claimed on the ground of property or debts, it must appear: 1st, in the case of property, that the ownership is of property other than money and is in good faith; that the requisite minimum value is over all encumbrances, liens, and offsets; and that the title was not colorably acquired for the purpose of evading the provisions of this bill, and 2d, in the case of debts, that the debtor is solvent, that the amount due is not less than the required sum, clear of offsets and discounts; that the debts do not consist of promissory notes or similar acknowledgments of ascertained or settled liability; and that the indebtedness was not created with a view of evasion of the provisions of this bill; and

Fourth. It must appear, where family, property, or debt qualifications are relied on, that the applicant possesses them at the time of his return to the United States as well as at the time of departure therefrom.

The provisions of this section, except as they are made applicable to our insular territory, are in substance and effect in conformity with article 2 of our treaty with China, December 8, 1894, and the act of September 17, 1888 (25 Stat., 476). Article 2 in our convention with China, December 8, 1894, is as follows:

The preceding article shall not apply to the return to the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States, or property therein of the value of $1,000, or debts of like amount due him and pending settlement. Nevertheless, every such Chinese laborer shall, before leaving the United States, deposit, as a condition of his return, with the collector of customs of the district from which he departs, a full description in writing of his family, or property, or debts as aforesaid, and shall be furnished by said collector with such certificate of his right to return under this treaty as the laws of the United States may now or hereafter prescribe and not inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty, and should the written description aforesaid be proved to be false, the right of return thereunder or of continued residence after return shall in each case be forfeited.

And such right of return to the United States shall be exercised within one year from the date of leaving the United States; but such right of return to the United States may be extended for an additional period, not to exceed one year, in cases where by reason of sickness or other cause of disability beyond his control such Chinese laborer shall be rendered unable sooner to return, which facts shall be fully reported to the Chinese consul at the port of departure, and by him certified to the satisfaction of the collector of the port at which such Chinese subject shall land in the United States. And no such Chinese laborer shall be permitted to enter the United States by land or sea without producing to the proper officer of the customs the return certificate herein required.

While it is provided by article 5 of our treaty of December 8, 1894, as follows:

The Government of the United States, having by an act of Congress, approved May 5, 1892, as amended by an act approved November 3, 1893, required all Chinese laborers lawfully within the limits of the United States before the passage of the first-named act to be registered as in said acts provided, with a view of affording them better protection, the Chinese Government will not object to the enforcement of such acts.

Again, by a reference to the act of September 13, 1888 (25 Stats., p. 476), it will be seen that so long as nearly fourteen years ago Congress enacted, in reference to this phase of the subject, what was subsequently incorporated in our treaty with China December 8, 1894, and which is now proposed to be incorporated and reenacted in this bill.

Sections 5 and 6 of the act of September 13, 1888, reads as follows:

Sec. 5. That from and after the passage of this act no Chinese laborer in the United States shall be permitted, after having left, to return thereto except under the conditions stated in the following sections.

Sec. 6. That no Chinese laborer within the purview of the preceding section shall be permitted to return to the United States unless he has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States, or property therein of the value of $1,000, or debts of like amount due him and pending settlement.

The marriage to such wife must have taken place at least a year prior to the application of the laborer for a permit to return to the United States, and must have been followed by the continuous cohabitation of the parties as man and wife.

If the right to return be claimed on the ground of property or of debts, it must appear that the property is bona fide and not colorably acquired for the purpose of evading this act, or that the debts are unascertained and unsettled, and not promissory notes or other similar acknowledgments of ascertained liability.

By section 11 of the bill it is provided that any Chinese laborer claiming the right to return to the United States on any of the grounds stated in section 10 shall apply to the appropriate treasury officer of the district in which he resides at least one month prior to the time of his departure, such application to be accompanied by his certificate of residence; and it is provided that he shall make, under oath before such officer, a full statement in triplicate descriptive of his family, or property, or debts, as the case may be, and shall furnish to such officer such proof of facts entitling him to return as shall be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and for any false swearing in relation thereto it is provided he shall incur the penalties imposed by law for perjury.

It is also provided that he shall permit such officer to take a full description of his person, which description the officer shall retain and mark with a number. The original and each copy of such statement shall contain a photograph of the applicant, made at the time and in the manner prescribed by the rules and regulations as prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill further providing that the original of such statement shall be retained by the Treasury officer before whom it is made, and the duplicate and triplicate copies thereof shall be by him transmitted to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port whence the applicant intends to depart from the United States.

This section further provides that in case the last-named officer, after hearing the proofs and investigating all the circumstances of the case, shall decide to issue a certificate of return, he shall at such time and place as he may designate sign and give to the applicant a certificate containing the number of the description last aforesaid, which shall be the sole evidence given to such person of his right to return. And it is further provided that in the event such certificate shall be transferred it shall become void, and the person to whom it was originally issued shall by that act forfeit his right to return to the United States. And it is further provided that the right to return under such certificate shall be limited to two years from the date of leaving the United States.

This section further provides that no Chinese laborer shall be permitted to reenter the United States without producing to the appropriate Treasury officer at the place of such entry such return certificate, and that a laborer presenting a certificate of return, required by this section, shall be admitted to the United States only at the port from which he departed.

This section also fixes the ports at which Chinese persons, whether laborers or of any classes, other than Chinese diplomatic and consular officers, shall be permitted to enter the United States. These ports, as fixed in the bill as originally introduced by me, were San Francisco, Portland (Oreg.), Astoria (Oreg.), Port Townsend, Boston, New York, New Orleans, Manila, Honolulu, and San Juan, in Porto Rico. While in the bill as reported the committee has amended this portion of this section by striking out Astoria, Oreg.

This committee amendment I am opposed to. Astoria, at the mouth of the Columbia River, should be a port of entry. Many vessels come to Astoria, Oreg., with Chinese on board which do not proceed up the river to Portland, and a failure to make Astoria a port of entry would lead to great inconvenience. Under the old law, giving the Secretary of the Treasury power to designate ports other than those specified in the act, Astoria was designated for the reasons I have suggested. I trust, therefore, this committee amendment will not be agreed to.

This section also provides that the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may designate such other ports as he may deem necessary, subject to the restrictions imposed by section 26 of the bill, which section is to the effect that Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States, in the course of their journey to or from other countries, subject to certain provisions therein provided for relating to the privilege of transit.

This section is a substantial reenactment of the act of September 13, 1888, and is fully warranted by Article II of the treaty of December 8, 1894. It is also a virtual enactment of a Treasury regulation in force and enforced by the Department for many years. This section is also sustained by the opinion of the Attorney-General of October 11, 1896, in which he said:

Registered Chinese laborers who depart from the United States, but who fail to obtain the certificate prescribed by Article II of the treaty with China for use in such cases, should not be allowed to return to this country.

For the information of the Senate, and as conclusive evidence that this section of the pending bill is not in any sense a departure in principle, and indeed but little in phrase, from existing law and existing regulations of the Treasury Department, made in pursuance of the treaty and statute, and having all the force of law, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate as a part of my remarks a copy of the Treasury regulations bearing on this branch of the subject:

There is no authority of law for the return to this country of Chinese laborers after the expiration of the period named in the treaty with China for the return of such laborers. (Treasury Regulation; Compilation of October 1, 1900, p. 43.)

A Chinese person claiming the right to be permitted to leave the United States and return thereto as a duly registered laborer shall apply in person to the collector of customs for the district in which he resides at least a month prior to the time of his departure; shall deposit with said collector a certificate of registration from the Internal-Revenue collector for the district in which he resided at the time of registration; and shall make an oath before the said collector, in writing, a full statement descriptive of his family, or property, or debts, as the case may be, and fully describing himself, giving his name, age, height, local residence, occupation, color of eyes and complexion, and distinguishing marks, if any, and naming the port from which he expects to depart from the United States, which shall be one of those designated in paragraph 42. Such written description shall be filed in duplicate, and to each shall be permanently attached a photograph of the Chinese person referred to therein.

The collector of customs, or his deputy, with whom such certificate of registration and written description are filed will make a thorough examination to ascertain whether the applicant is registered and as to the accuracy of the descriptive statement; that the photograph accompanying the latter for the purpose of identification is that of the person described in such certificate and statement, and that his height, weight, and descriptive physical marks are accurately given, and will then write his official signature in part across such photograph and in part upon the adjoining portion of the written descriptive statement to prevent substitution. The collector referred to will then transmit the certificate of registration to the internal-revenue collector by whom the same purports to have been issued for comparison with the record thereof in his office, in respect not only to name and date therein, but in all other particulars.

At the same time the collector of customs will in person or through the special agent for the district make thorough investigation as to the facts stated therein. As soon as practicable thereafter the collector of customs referred to will transmit such registration certificate, one copy of the sworn statement, and the reports of investigation to the collector of customs for the district from which such Chinese laborer intends to depart from the United States, and at the same time will transmit to said Chinese laborer the duplicate copy of such sworn statement, with instructions to present the same in person to the collector of customs or his deputy at the port of departure.

Upon the receipt of such certificate of registration, the duplicate copies of said sworn statement, and the reports of investigation, the collector of customs or his deputy at said port of departure, after one month from the date of the filing of the original application in the office of the collector for the district in which such Chinese laborer resides, if he finds that the person presenting such duplicate statement is the Chinese person therein described, and is entitled thereto, may sign and give to such person on his departure from said port a certificate containing the number of the description referred to, in the following form:

[No. —.]

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Certificate issued to Chinese laborer departing from the United States with the intention of returning thereto under the treaty between the United States of America and the Empire of China signed March 17, 1894, and proclaimed by the President of the United States December 8, 1894.

This is to certify that —, a Chinese laborer, described in identification paper numbered —, port of —, departed from this port for —, on this — day of —, 19—, with the intention of returning to the United States via this port within twelve months from said date.

Given under my hand and seal this — day of —, 19—, at —, State of —

COLLECTOR'S SEAL.

Collector of Customs,
Port of —, District of —.

If the last-named certificate be transferred, it shall become void, and the person to whom it was given by the collector shall forfeit his right to return to the United States.

The certified description should be carefully preserved by the collector at the port of exit as a means of identification of the Chinese person therein mentioned, and who, in order to avail himself of the privilege conferred by said article 2 of the treaty, must return via the port of departure within one year from the date of his leaving the United States, unless prevented by sickness or other disability beyond his control, in which event the facts shall be officially certified by the Chinese consul at said port of departure to the satisfaction of the collector of the port at which such Chinese subject shall land in the United States. (Verbatim Treasury regulations; compilation of October 1, 1900, pp. 39, 40, 41.)

There is no authority for issuance of return certificate to Chinese laborers who have not registered as such. (Treasury Decision 21578.)

The twelfth section of the bill makes it the duty of every Chinese laborer, rightfully within and entitled to remain in any of the insular territory of the United States (Hawaii excepted) at the time when this bill shall become a law, to obtain within six months after that date a certificate of residence in the mainland territory or the insular territory wherein he resides.

The balance of this section provides the machinery under which he shall obtain this certificate, and it also provides that no person shall be given a certificate of residence under this bill or be entitled to a reissue of any lost certificate of residence who, prior to the application therefor, shall have been convicted of any crime within the jurisdiction of the United States, or of any State or Territory, or insular territory thereof, and all such persons being without such certificate shall be deported.

While it is provided in section 13 that if it shall be made to appear to the proper authorities that any laborer, to whom was lawfully issued a certificate of residence, has lost such certificate, or that it has been destroyed, he shall be given a new certificate on establishing to the satisfaction of the United States judge, or commissioner, before whom he is brought for deportation, that the loss or destruction was not in bad faith.

Section 14 provides that nothing contained in this bill shall be construed to prevent the readmission of any Chinese laborer, who departed from the United States prior to the passage of this bill, possessing a return certificate valid under the acts by this bill repealed, provided, that on his return, he comply with the requirements of such acts.

By section 15 of the bill it is provided that in order to entitle such Chinese persons as are mentioned in section 4 of the bill to admission into the United States they shall produce a certificate from their Government, or the government where they last resided, viséed by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence they depart; and if such persons are residents of the American mainland territory of the United States and seek to enter into any insular territory of the United States, or are residents of any insular territory of the United States and seek to enter into other insular territory of the United States, or into the American mainland territory of the United States, then such certificate shall be issued by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States. This and the following three sections providing for these certificates are a substantial reenactment of existing legislation on this subject.

Section 13 follows substantially the provisions of the act of November 3, 1893 (28 Stat., p. 7), and of the act of May 5, 1892 (27 Stat., p. 25). As bearing upon this feature of the bill, it is well to bear in mind the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Fong Yue Ting v. The United States (reported in 149 U. S., 698), held that the provision of the Geary Act requiring Chinese laborers to register is constitutional.

Section 15 of this bill is a duplicate in principle, and substantially in statutory structure, of the provision in Article III of the treaty of December 8, 1894, and of section 6 of the act of July 5, 1884.

Section 16 also corresponds with like provisions in section 6 of the act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat., p. 115). This also is true as to section 17, while section 18 is a substantial reenactment of section 2 of the act of September 13, 1888, which act, by the way, in most part never became operative, and it is so held by the Treasury Department, as it depended on the terms of a treaty which never materialized; but it shows not only the disposition of Congress upon this subject, but its deliberate expression nearly fourteen years ago.

Section 19 provides that the certificate mentioned in the preceding sections, when duly viséed by the proper diplomatic or consular representative of the United States, or when issued regularly by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts set forth. But said certificate may be controverted and the recitals thereof disproved by the authorities of the United States. And if any such recitals be disproved, or if any certificate be fraudulently used or in any manner forged or altered, then such certificate shall be null and shall be forthwith canceled. This is in substance and effect the act of July 5, 1884; also of Treasury regulations.

Section 20 of the bill provides for a certificate of registration to a Chinese person who, being a member of any of the classes mentioned in section 4 of the bill, who is lawfully in the United States at the time of the passage of the bill, and any person entitled to such certificate who fails to obtain it shall be, in any proceeding inquiring into their status under this bill, presumed to be laborers not entitled to remain within the territory of the United States, but such presumption may be rebutted.

Provision is also made in this section for anyone of any of the classes mentioned in section 4 of the bill who desires to depart from the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, intending to return thereto, in which case he must apply to the appropriate Treasury officer in the district wherein he resides at least one month prior to his departure, such application to be accompanied by his certificate of registration, which he shall accompany with his statement under oath in triplicate, descriptive of his profession, business, or other position or status, and shall furnish said officer such proof of his status as shall be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and it is further provided that any false swearing in relation thereto shall subject such person to all of the penalties imposed by law for perjury.

It is also provided that in such application he shall permit the officers to retain a full description of his person, which description the officer shall retain and mark with the number. The original and each copy of such statement shall contain the photograph of the applicant, made at the time and in the manner required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. And it is further stipulated in this section of the bill that the original of said statement shall be retained by the Treasury officer before whom it is made, and the copies thereof shall be by him transmitted to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port whence the applicant intends to depart from the United States.

And if the Treasury officer, after hearing the proofs and investigating the circumstances of the case, shall decide that the representations of status are true, he shall at such time and place as he may designate sign and give to the said applicant a certificate containing a number of the description before provided for, and this shall be the sole evidence given to such person of his right to return. And it is provided that if this certificate be transferred it shall become void, and the person to whom it was originally issued shall forfeit his right to reside in or return to the United States.

While it is further provided that to entitle any such Chinese person to readmission to the United States or any portion of the territory thereof he shall produce to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry the return certificate in this section provided for, and he shall be permitted to reenter only at the port from whence he departed.

It is further provided in this section that it shall be the right of such person to elect to waive all of the provisions of the second and third subdivisions of this section, and for readmission into the United States or any portion of the territory thereof to depend upon the provisions of section 8 and provisions in pursuance thereof, which section relates to excepted classes.

This section of the bill liberalizes, it will be observed, the provisions of existing laws in reference to the exempted classes, making it much more convenient and less burdensome in entering the United States. The system which has been in vogue in reference to the return of laborers is by this section extended to those of the exempted classes. By this provision the exempted classes, students, teachers, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, are given the option of the old system or that proposed by this bill. The provision is therefore a loosening of the restrictions and a liberalization of the existing laws in favor of the exempted classes. This section of the bill should be read and studied in the light reflected from Treasury Circular No. 28, of date March 3, 1900, a copy of which I hold in my hand, and I ask unanimous consent to incorporate it in my remarks, without reading. It is as follows:

In view of the many cases of hardship due to delays in the investigation and consideration of cases of Chinese persons seeking admission to the United States as alleged returning merchants, and on account of the many fraudulent cases of this character, any Chinese person who may hereafter leave this country with the intention of seeking readmission as an alleged returning merchant under the provisions of section 2 of the act of November 3, 1893, should transmit to the collector of customs at the port from which such Chinese person intends to depart from the United States, at least thirty days before his departure from this country, duplicates of the affidavits of witnesses other than Chinese, setting forth the facts prescribed by the statute referred to, upon which he intends to base his application for readmission.

Upon the receipt of such duplicates, the collector at such port of departure will promptly transmit them to the collector of customs, special agent, or other officer of this Department at or nearest to the place in which such Chinese person claims to have been engaged as merchant, for investigation and report. After the receipt of such report, and upon the personal application and proper identification of such Chinese person, the collector at the port of departure may indorse upon the original papers presented by such Chinese person a statement, over his official signature, to the effect that the right of such Chinese person to return to the United States has been prima facie determined, subject to his proper identification by him and the presentation of such original papers to said collector upon his return to this country; and upon the return of such Chinese person to said port of departure, the collector may, in his discretion, admit him to this country without further delay.

While Chinese persons seeking admission as returning merchants can not be excluded upon the ground that they have failed to comply with the foregoing regulations, such failure on the part of those leaving this country after this date would be a fact exciting suspicion and discrediting to the application for readmission, and the regulations heretofore issued will govern the procedure in such cases. (Treasury Circular No. 28, March 3, 1900.)

Section 21 of the bill provides that nothing in the bill shall be construed to prevent the entry into the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, of the lawful wife or the minor children of any Chinese person of any of the classes mentioned in section 4 actually domiciled in the United States at the time of such proposed entry; but no such wife nor any such children shall be permitted to enter who shall fail to establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry that the required relationship exists, and a certificate must be forthcoming, as follows:

First, if the wife or child come from a foreign country the certificate must have been issued to such person by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence such person departed, and must show that after investigation said representative believes it to be true that the relationship asserted genuinely exists; and Second, if the wife or child come from any insular territory of the United States and seeks entry into American mainland territory of the United States, or come from American mainland territory of the United States and seeks entry into insular territory of the United States, or come from any insular territory of the United States and seek entry into other insular territory of the United States, the certificate must have been issued by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port whence such person departed, and shall show that after investigation said officer believes it to be true that the relationship asserted genuinely exists; and by a further provision in this section it is made the duty of the diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States and of the appropriate Treasury officers of the United States to make rigid investigation of all applications for such certificates and to issue them when the relationship required and claimed is clearly established, but not otherwise.

It is provided further that each of the certificates shall be issued in triplicate, and shall contain the photograph of the person named therein, and in addition such certificate shall contain whatever may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The original certificate shall be, by the representative or officer issuing it, delivered open to the person named in it, or, if such person be an infant, then to the person in charge of such infant; while the duplicate shall be, by said representative or officer, delivered in a sealed envelope, duly addressed, to the shipmaster, railway conductor, or other person in charge of the transportation of the person for whom the original is available, whose duty it shall be to deliver it promptly to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port where entry is sought by said Chinese person.

And it is provided that any willful neglect or failure to perform this duty is made punishable under section 53, which provides that any violation of any provision of this bill for which punishment is not otherwise provided shall be deemed a felony, and shall be punishable by fine not less than $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

It is further provided that the triplicate of the certificate I have referred to shall be, by the representative or officer issuing the same, immediately sent by mail to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port where said Chinese person seeks entry, while by the latter clause, in section 21, it is provided that no woman shall be entitled to enter under this section unless she shall establish by such proof as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that she is the lawful wife of a member of one of the classes enumerated in section 5 of the bill, under a marriage contracted in such manner as to be legal and binding in the United States.

And here again, it will be observed, it is in the interest of humanity proposed by this bill to liberalize existing legislation. Under the law, by its letter, as it now stands, neither the wife nor child of a Chinese person of the exempted classes, that is, of an official, teacher, student, merchant, or traveler for curiosity or pleasure has any right of entry into the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States, however, has by construction—a construction scarcely warranted by the existing law, but upheld, supported, and sustained by the highest considerations of humanity—held that the wives and children of these exempted classes may, under certain rules and regulations, necessary to guard against and to prevent fraud, be permitted to enter this country. And this section of the pending bill incorporates into positive law this humane principle. But at the same time, this provision is properly guarded so as to prevent the country being flooded with dissolute women, under the pretense of being wives of the exempted classes, and to prevent also an influx of foreign laborers under the pretense of being children of the exempted classes.

Section 22 excepts from the operation of the act Chinese diplomatic and consular officers and their attendants and servants, who shall be admitted to the United States under special instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury, without production of other evidence than that of personal identity; while other Chinese officers of China or any other foreign government must establish their identity as such, and the identity of their attendants and servants, in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

By section 23 of the bill it is provided that before any Chinese person is landed from any vessel on territory of the United States, or, in case of inland immigration, before any Chinese person brought to any inland border port of the United States shall be permitted to leave the car or other conveyance in which he was brought thither the appropriate Treasury officer shall examine such person, comparing his certificate with such lists given under succeeding provisions of this bill, and also with such Chinese person, and no Chinese person shall be allowed to land in violation of law. Such examinations or comparisons must be made immediately after arrival at port or border. This is a reenactment substantially of section 9 of the act of May 6, 1882 (22 Stats., p. 58), and of the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury of date December 10, 1891.

Section 24 of the bill requires that the master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place shall, immediately on arriving and before landing or permitting to land any Chinese passenger, deliver to the appropriate Treasury officer of the customs district in which such vessel shall have arrived a separate list of all Chinese persons taken on board his vessel at any port or place, and all such persons on board the vessel at that time. Such list shall show the names of such persons, and in the case of accredited officers of the Chinese or other foreign Government traveling on the business of such government, or their servants or attendants, a note setting forth these facts, also the port or place at which each was taken on board, and such particulars as to each as are shown by their respective certificates, and such other information as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and such list shall be sworn to by the master of the vessel in the manner required by law in cases of manifests of cargo.

These same requirements are by this section made to apply to the masters of all vessels arriving in the American mainland territory of the United States from any of the insular territory of the United States; and to the masters of all vessels arriving at any port in any such insular territory from the American mainland territory of the United States; and to the masters of all vessels arriving in the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, Porto Rico, or any other insular territory of the United States. And it is provided that any refusal or willful neglect of any such master to comply with the provisions of this section shall incur the same penalties and forfeiture provided for a refusal to report and deliver a manifest of cargo. This is substantially the existing law, except in so far as it is made to apply to our insular territories. It corresponds to section 8 of the act of July 5, 1884.

Section 25 of the bill provides that in the case of a Chinese person brought to an inland border port of the United States the railway conductor or other person so bringing them shall, immediately on arriving there and before enabling or permitting any such Chinese person to cross the border into territory of the United States, deliver to the appropriate Treasury officer a list of all Chinese persons so brought, which list shall conform substantially in all respects to the list to be furnished by the masters of vessels, and all such conductors or other persons bound to deliver such list under the provisions of this bill who willfully neglect or refuse to comply with these requirements shall be deemed guilty of a felony and shall, on conviction, be punishable under section 53 of the bill to which I have heretofore called attention.

It is provided in this section that should the offender not be subject to punishment in the United States, that then any rule or regulation which may be made by the Secretary of the Treasury for cases of that class shall be enforced, as well against his employer as against himself. The privilege of transit across territory of the United States accorded to Chinese laborers in the course of their journey to or from other countries is made applicable to our insular territory as well as to the mainland.

It is provided, however, that the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may at any time suspend the privilege of transit in any case or in all cases where the transit is sought by laborers coming from any insular territory of the United States. The provisions of this bill for the purpose of guarding against fraud are more elaborate and restrictive than under the existing law, as may be seen by a careful examination of this section of the bill. Experience has shown that these provisions are necessary.

Section 26 of this bill relates to the privilege of transit on the part of Chinese across territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries. This is a treaty privilege granted by Article III of the latest treaty with China. It is believed there has been great abuse of this privilege, and very strict rules and regulations are necessary in order to guard against this abuse. The right upon the part of the United States to make and enforce such reasonable regulations is also granted by said treaty, which, in Article III, in granting the right of transit, says:

Subject to such regulations by the Government of the United States as may be necessary to prevent said privilege of transit from being abused.

It is believed the provisions of the pending bill are warranted by the treaty and are absolutely essential in order to prevent frauds in the future.

By section 27 it is provided that every Chinese person brought by vessel to any port of the United States shall be detained aboard such vessel until a final decision shall have been rendered as to the right of such Chinese person to enter the United States or any portion of the territory thereof for any purpose, and every Chinese person brought to an inland border port of the United States shall be detained at such port until a final decision shall have been rendered as to the right of such Chinese person to enter the United States or any portion of the territory thereof for any purpose.

And the bill provides that in the first class of cases the duty of such detention shall rest on the master, owner, agent, or consignee of the vessel concerned, collectively and singly, and in the second class of cases such duty shall rest on the persons, corporation, or agent, collectively and singly, by whom said Chinese person was transported or aided to the inland border port. This is subject, however, to the provision that Chinese persons may be otherwise and elsewhere detained pending such final decisions, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe.

It also being a provision of this bill that no right of entry or residence and no privilege of transit shall result to any such Chinese persons by reason of temporary detention and landing authorized under such rules and regulations, and that no release from liability or obligation under this bill shall be worked by such temporary detention and landing in favor of any vessel, or the master, owner, consignee, or agent of any vessel, or any other person or corporation whatever.

And this section further provides that every person bound under this section to detain a Chinese person who shall refuse or willfully neglect to perform such duty shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

This section is not a departure, but a substantial compliance with existing law, rules, and regulations, especially that of the ninth section of the act of May 6, 1882 (22 Stats., p. 58), which provides as follows:

That before any Chinese passengers are landed from any such vessel, the collector or his deputy shall proceed to examine such passengers, comparing the certificates with the list of the passengers; and no passenger shall be allowed to land in the United States from such vessel in violation of law.

While the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury of December 10, 1891, provides as follows:

Inspection of persons and papers must be made at the border of contiguous foreign territory, so as to prevent the entrance of Chinese persons excluded by law.

Section 28 of the bill provides that every Chinese person finally refused admission to the United States must be returned to the country of which he is a citizen or subject immediately after such refusal, and it is made the duty of the master, owner, consignee, or agent of the vessel, and of the railway corporation, its general officers and agents, and of the owners and general officers and agents of other transportation lines or modes of conveyance, collectively and severally, bringing him to the port at which entry is denied him, or aiding him thither, to return same Chinese person, providing, however, that the Commissioner-General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury may elect to effect such return in some other way than as above prescribed, and at the expense of the United States, in which case the vessel, persons, or corporation that would have otherwise been bound to effect such return shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for the costs thereof, and in every case such vessel, persons, or corporations shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for all costs connected with the inquiry concerning the right of such Chinese person to enter or pass through the United States or any portion of the territory thereof.

Provisions are also made to apply in every case where a Chinese person is brought from any insular territory of the United States to the American-mainland territory of the United States, and in every case where a Chinese person is brought to any insular territory of the United States from said mainland territory. But in any case where a Chinese person is brought to any insular territory of the United States from any other insular territory thereof, he shall, when refused admission or transit, be deported to China.

It is also provided in this section that every person bound under the provisions of this section to return a Chinese person, who shall refuse or willfully neglect promptly to perform such duty, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 for every Chinese person not returned as required, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

It is further provided that any subordinate officer, agent, or employee of any such vessel, railway corporation, or other transportation line or other mode of conveyance who is charged with the duty as such subordinate officer, agent, or employee, of returning any Chinese person, and who shall refuse or willfully neglect promptly to perform such duty, shall be subject to all the pains and penalties imposed by this section upon persons bound to return a Chinese person who refuses or willfully neglects to do so.

These provisions find their substantial counterpart in section 13 of the act of 1888 and section 2 of the act of May 5, 1892. In the case of Ah Kee (21 Fed. Rep., 701) the court held departure of vessel or change of its management does not excuse company from the duty to return laborer, and if vessel has departed the Government may return Chinese laborer and recover expenses from the steamship company.

Section 29 of the bill provides that it shall be declared a felony upon the part of any owner, officer, agent, or employee of any transportation line, railway corporation line, vessel, vehicle, or other mode of conveyance by land or sea, who shall aid or abet, or willfully or through neglect permit, or connive at the escape of any Chinese person held in detention pending final adjudication of his claims; and, on conviction thereof, such persons shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 and not more than $5,000 for every Chinese person not detained as required, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. This corresponds substantially with section 16 of the act of July 5, 1884.

Section 30 of the bill provides for the forfeiture of any vessel whose master, owner, agent, or consignee shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this bill. This corresponds in substance to section 10 of the act of July 5, 1884.

Section 31 makes it a felony upon the part of anyone who, as principal or accessory, shall knowingly bring into the United States any Chinese person otherwise than as provided by this bill, or who, pending the final decision as to the right of any Chinese person to enter or pass through the territory of the United States, shall knowingly bring into or attempt to bring into or conspire to bring into the territory of the United States such Chinese person, or who shall knowingly harbor or retain within or conspire to retain within the United States, or any territory thereof, any Chinese person unlawfully therein and subject to deportation therefrom.

And, upon conviction, such persons shall be punished by a fine of not less than $2,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than six months and not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. This is substantially the same provision as section 11 of the existing law of July 5, 1884 (23 Stats., p. 115), and also of the Treasury regulations, which provide that officers of railroads by which Chinese persons are illegally brought to places in the United States are liable to the penalties imposed by section 11 of the act of July 5, 1884, and should be reported to the United States attorney for prosecution.

Provision is made by section 32 of the bill to the effect that any Chinese person found within any portion of the United States in violation of any provision of this bill shall be arrested by any United States officer, and shall be taken before a United States judge in the district where arrest is made, or before the United States commissioner designated by the United States attorney of said district, who shall proceed to inquire into the case, and unless upon the hearing the person so arrested shall establish by affirmative proof, to the satisfaction of said judge or commissioner, that he has a lawful right to be or to remain in the United States, or in the portion of the territory of the United States wherein found, it shall be the duty of the said judge or commissioner to order that he be deported.

It shall also be the duty of the United States attorney of the said district to attend the hearing, and the testimony of at least two credible witnesses other than Chinese shall be required to establish the right claimed. And it is further provided by the succeeding sections that if any Chinese person shall enter the United States or any portion of the territory thereof without having first obtained from the appropriate Treasury officer the required permission to enter, he shall be deported, notwithstanding that had he properly applied he would have been entitled to enter.

The bill in the next section defines what is meant by deportation, and it is stated that in case of a person coming from a foreign country, he shall be forthwith returned thither or to the country of which he is a subject or citizen, but if in any case a country of which such person shall claim to be a subject or citizen shall demand any tax as a condition of the removal of such person to that country, he shall be sent to China; and further, in the case of a person who came without right from one portion of the territory of the United States to another portion of the territory of the United States, he shall be forthwith sent to the country of which he is a citizen or subject.

All orders of deportation are to be executed by the United States marshal of the district wherein the said orders are made, and he shall execute the same with all convenient dispatch, and pending such execution shall detain in his custody the person ordered to be deported, who shall not be admitted to bail save in cases of appeal, as set forth in the proviso of section 50 of this bill.

These provisions in reference to deportation, and the manner in which it shall be executed, are an almost literal enactment of the provisions upon that subject contained in the act of May 5, 1892 (27 Stat., 25), and of the act of November 3, 1893 (28 Stat., 7), and is in conformity with the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States of June 30, 1891, in which it is stated that:

Chinese persons found unlawfully in the United States must be moved directly to China, unless they show they are subjects of any other foreign power, and the burden of proof is upon them to show this.

In any insular territory of the United States where the United States has not established Federal courts and has not provided Federal marshals the judicial functions vested by this bill in the United States judges shall be vested in judges of the highest local courts in such territory, and the executive functions vested in the United States attorneys and marshals by this bill are declared to be vested in the corresponding local officers in such territory.

It is further provided by section 36 of the bill that any Chinese person who violates any of the provisions of this bill shall be deported after an accusation and hearing and a finding of guilty of such violation.

By provision of section 37 of the bill it is provided that any person who shall knowingly and falsely alter or substitute any name for the name written in any certificate provided for in this bill or by Treasury rules thereunder, or who shall knowingly utter any such certificate if forged or fraudulent, or who shall forge any such certificate; or who shall, whether an officer of the United States or not, issue to any person a certificate as to the status or right of entry, or right of residence, or privilege of transit, or right of return of any Chinese person other than a certificate authorized by law to be by him issued, with intent to defeat any provision of this bill, or any Treasury rule thereunder, or with intent to deceive the person to whom or the Chinese person for whom issued, or any other person; or who shall falsely personate any person named in any certificate authorized by this bill or Treasury rules or regulations thereunder, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or imprisoned for a term not less than one year nor exceeding five years, or shall be both so fined and imprisoned.

These several provisions as set out in section 37 of the bill are virtually, and in substance and effect, a reenactment of section 8 of the act of May 5, 1892 (27 Stats., p. 25), and of the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury in construing said act of date February 18, 1895.

It is further provided in this bill that the requirements and penalties imposed by it on masters, owners, agents, and consignees of vessels shall not apply in the case of any vessel bound to a port not within the United States, which shall come within the jurisdiction of the United States by reason of being in distress or because of stress of weather.

But if any Chinese person brought on any such vessel shall be permitted to land in the United States in violation of law, or if every Chinese person so brought, who is bound to do so under this bill, does not depart with the vessel when it leaves port, then the penalties of this bill shall be imposed on said vessel, and the master, owner, agent, and consignee thereof, jointly and severally.

It is further provided in this bill that the master of any foreign vessel which shall bring to the United States in the crew of such vessel, or otherwise in its service, any Chinese persons not entitled to entry, shall be required to execute a bond satisfactory to the Treasury Department, in the sum of $2,000, the condition of said bond being that none of such Chinese persons shall be permitted to land from said vessel for any purpose whatever, with or without the permission of said master, while said vessel remains within the United States, this bond to be canceled upon the certificate of the appropriate Treasury officer that all Chinese persons covered by it have departed from the United States on the said vessel. It is also a provision of the bill that it shall be unlawful for any vessel holding an American register to have or employ in its crew any Chinese person not entitled to admission to the United States or into the portion of the territory of the United States to which such vessel plies, and any violation of this provision shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,000.

There is, however, attached to this provision a proviso to the effect that such penalty shall not accrue in the case of any such vessel which shall suffer the loss of a portion of her crew by reason of distress or stress of weather in any foreign jurisdiction or port and shall be compelled thereby to employ Chinese seamen to complete her complement of officers and men, but to relieve from said penalty in such case it must be shown to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that in such foreign jurisdiction or port no seaman other than Chinese were obtainable, and that every such Chinese seaman was discharged from the service of such vessel immediately upon the arrival thereof at the first port where seamen other than Chinese could be obtained, and that if so discharged at any port under the jurisdiction of the United States no such Chinese seaman was permitted to depart from such vessel, but that each such Chinese seaman was forthwith transported as a passenger on such vessel, and at the expense thereof, to a foreign port, and that no such Chinese seaman did reenter the service of such vessel after such discharge.

The first part of this provision is in substantial compliance with the provisions of existing laws; the latter part, however, or the second paragraph of this section, is new legislation, and has for its purpose the protection of the American seaman on the one hand, and the encouragement of the American merchant marine on the other. The deck of an American registered steamer is, in international law, a part of the terra firma, so to speak, of the United States, and this provision is simply an extension of the principle of exclusion of Chinese laborers to the decks and fore-castles of American vessels. Such a provision will give encouragement to the American seaman and to others who enter that service.

By section 40 of the bill it is provided that any Chinese person who, having been admitted into the United States or from one portion thereof into another portion thereof as a teacher, student, merchant, or traveler for curiosity or pleasure, ceases to be of the special class and becomes a laborer within the meaning of this bill, shall forfeit the privilege of remaining in the United States or the territory thereof, and shall be deported, and in every case where a Chinese person, having been given admission into the United States by virtue of being a servant or attendant of a Chinese officer, ceases to be such servant or attendant, he shall be deported.

This is in accordance with existing law as defined by the Federal courts. In the case of The United States v. Yong Yew (82 Fed. Rep., 832) the court said:

If a Chinese person secures admission into this country as a merchant and soon ceases to be one and becomes a laborer, such fact ought to have bearing on the intent with which he came here; and if from all the facts of the case it can be determined that he used the form of a mercantile occupation as a pretext to come here, with the real intent and purpose of laboring only when here, such former occupation would not shield him, even if his certificate of entry be accurate in form and substance, and he is not lawfully entitled to be and remain in the United States.

While by Treasury decision 18575 it is held that persons entering as merchants on consular certificates and taking up the occupation of laborers are liable to deportation; while in the case of The United States v. Chu Chee, 87 Fed. Rep., 312, it was held that Chinese who were admitted as students, but without the certificate prescribed by section 6 of the act of July 5, 1884, and on their arrival in this country become laborers, are not entitled to remain in the United States and should be deported.

By another provision of this bill the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and enforce rules and regulations whereby the Treasury Department shall have a complete record of the date, place, and circumstances of the birth of every Chinese person hereafter born within the jurisdiction of the United States, together with data as to the parentage, and a certified copy of the record as to any person whose birth is recorded shall be given as evidence in all inquiries under the provisions of this bill.

This provision is in substantial conformity with existing law and the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department made in pursuance thereof. For instance, by Treasury Regulations (compilation issued October 1, 1900, p. 47) it is provided as follows:

In the cases of Chinese persons seeking admission on the ground that they were born in this country, great pains should be taken to ascertain whether or not the claim of the applicant is well founded, and officers at other ports should, when practicable, be called upon to investigate and report upon such cases. In no case should the applicant be admitted on the ground that he is of American birth unless the collector is fully satisfied that the evidence presented is reliable and justifies such admission.

While by Treasury decision of September 9, 1894, it is held that children born of Chinese parents in the United States have a right to return to this country after a temporary absence, provided the fact of their birth here can be established.

It is further provided in this bill that no certificate issued under the same shall be pawned, sold, or transferred, and any violation of this provision of the bill shall be followed by cancellation of the particular certificate, and, if the offender be a Chinese person not a citizen of the American mainland territory, by deportation of such person; and if the offender be of any other class, then he shall be punished under section 53 of this bill, to which I have already called attention.

This is in accordance with the existing rulings, regulations, and decisions of the Treasury Department. For instance, Treasury Decision 23993 is to the following effect:

Certificates of residence issued to Chinese laborers if found elsewhere than in the possession of the person to whom issued should be taken up and deposited with the collector of customs, subject to the order of the Department.

And it is further provided by section 43 of the bill that when two years have expired after the departure from the United States of a Chinese laborer to whom a return certificate has been issued the Treasury Department shall cancel all official papers and entries concerning him, provided he shall not within said period have exercised his right to return.

It is further provided by section 44 of the bill that hereafter no State court or court of the United States shall admit any Chinese person to citizenship. This is a reenactment of the existing law; but it was deemed best to incorporate it in this legislation. Section 14 of the act of May 6, 1882 (22 Stats., p. 58), is as follows:

That hereafter no State court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship, and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

While the Attorney-General, in his opinion of date August 4, 1897, said:

Since May 6, 1882, neither State nor Federal courts have had jurisdiction to admit Chinese to citizenship.

It is further provided by the succeeding section that the administration of this bill shall be in charge of the Commissioner-General of Immigration under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Commissioner-General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to make and to enforce any and all rules and regulations by him deemed needful to the efficient execution of the provisions of this bill, or of any other law of the United States, or of any treaty relating to Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, provided that all such rules and regulations be consistent with the provisions of this bill.

This is in conformity with existing law. In the sundry civil act of June 6, 1900, the following provision is found:

* * * And hereafter the Commissioner-General of Immigration, in addition to his other duties, shall have charge of the administration of the Chinese-exclusion law and of the various acts relating to immigration into the United States and its Territories and the District of Columbia, under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

It is further provided in the pending measure that whenever in this bill the term "appropriate Treasury officer" or its equivalent is used that officer of the United States is meant who is appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury and is designated by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform the duty or to exercise the authority mentioned. And it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to make all needful appointments, and of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make all needful designations forthwith on the passage of this bill; and the duty of inspecting and investigating all immigrants under this law, or under the general immigration laws of the United States, shall be performed whenever practicable by Chinese or immigrant inspectors under the Bureau of Immigration.

This is virtually a reenactment of section 7 of the act of May 5, 1892 (27 Stats., p. 25), which provides as follows:

That immediately after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the efficient execution of this act.

It is further provided in this bill that when the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of arrival of any Chinese person shall have passed upon the application of such person for a right of entry into the United States, or any of the territory thereof, or for the privilege of transit through the United States or any of the territory thereof, whether such right or privilege be sought for the first time or under return certificate, or under claim of former residence, or as a merchant, or otherwise, then the decision so given shall be final and not subject to review by the judicial branch of the Government of the United States. This is the existing law; giving, however, to such person so debarred the right of an appeal from said decision through the Commissioner-General of Immigration to the Secretary of the Treasury. And it is provided that any appeal taken to the Secretary must be filed with the officer making the decision appealed from within five days after the making of such decision.

But where the applicant for entry bases his claim or right of entry or his claim to privilege to pass through the United States or any of the territory thereof on alleged citizenship of the United States or any of the territory thereof, and upon that solely, then no administrative officer of the Government of the United States shall pass upon his case, but he shall forthwith be taken before the United States district judge for the district wherein he shall have applied for entry or for transit or before the United States commissioner designated by the United States attorney, and the appropriate United States attorney attending, a judicial hearing shall be had as on writ of habeas corpus, and pending the final decision on his application he shall be detained in the custody of the United States marshal of said district the same as in case of deportation. And in the event that said decision is adverse to said claimant he shall then be returned as provided in other portions of this bill.

And whenever any Chinese person bases his claim or right to enter or reside within, or his claim or privilege of passing through, the United States or any portion of the territory thereof, on any claim recognized by this bill or any law of the United States, and such claim is under inquiry or has been decided adversely to him, he is not permitted to assert alternatively another claim of right to enter, or to reside within, or any claim of privilege to pass through the United States or any portion of the territory thereof. In other words, he must stand upon the claim he first makes. If he fail in this, it is the end of the law as to him.

It will be observed from these provisions to which attention has just been called, that in all the cases where the claim is based on citizenship, the question as to his right to enter is not to be passed upon by the administrative officers, but by the judiciary. And it is further provided that when any commissioner of the United States shall have given a decision in any case, an appeal therefrom may be taken to the United States district court, within five days from the rendering thereof, by the Chinese person concerned or by the United States.

And when any United States district court shall have given a decision on appeal or otherwise in any case arising under the provisions of this bill or any law or any treaty of the United States relating to Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, an appeal therefrom may be taken to the circuit court of appeals of the United States within five days from the rendering thereof, by the Chinese person concerned or by the United States. And in case of an appeal under this section by the United States, a certified copy of the testimony taken on the hearing before the district court shall, within ten days after said hearing, be transmitted to the Attorney-General of the United States, who may direct the appropriate district attorney to move for a dismissal of the appeal.

In all appeals under the provisions of this bill the circuit court of appeals is empowered to review all facts, as well as all questions of law, with power to make all necessary orders, either for discharge of the Chinese person or for deportation thereof.

And on appeal to the district court of the United States or to the circuit court of appeals of the United States under the provisions of this bill a transcript of the record and copies of all testimony taken on the hearing before the commissioner or court whose decision is appealed from shall be transmitted to the district court or the circuit court of appeals, as the case may be; and either court may order sent to it in addition, or in lieu, any original documents or other evidence used or considered in the lower court or tribunal. But no new evidence shall be received in the circuit court of appeals except by order of the court, on motion duly made for such purpose.

This provision as to the finality of the decisions of the customs officers is in strict accordance with existing laws. It is provided in the sundry civil act of August 18, 1894 (28 Stats., p. 390), as follows:

In every case where an alien is excluded from admission into the United States, under any law or treaty now existing or hereafter made, the decision of the appropriate immigration or customs officers, if adverse to the admission of such alien, shall be final, unless reversed on appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury.

And such has been the rulings of the Federal courts.

In the case of Lem Moon Sing v. The United States (158 U. S., 539) the Supreme Court of the United States held that, upon the refusal of the collector of customs at San Francisco to permit the landing at that port of one Lem Moon Sing, a returning merchant, and in reference to whom an application for the writ of habeas corpus was made to the Supreme Court, the application for the writ of habeas corpus should be denied, upon the ground that the act of August 18, 1894, sundry civil act just quoted, makes final the decision of the appropriate customs or immigration officer, if adverse to the admission of the alien, unless reversed on appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury; the court holding that under this law the right to review the action of collectors of customs, in refusing the application of Chinese persons for permission to land, is taken from the courts and is vested in the Secretary of the Treasury. This also is in accordance with Treasury decision 20478, as follows:

Decisions of collectors of customs on applications of Chinese for admission to the United States are final unless reversed by the Secretary of the Treasury on appeal.

This bill gives to the United States the right of appeal. Under existing laws the right of appeal herein provided for is given to the Chinese, but not to the United States.

It is believed by the framers of this bill that the right of appeal should attach to the United States as well as to the Chinese.

It is also provided in the bill that in every case of appeal under the provisions of this bill the Chinese person who is the subject of such proceedings shall remain in the custody of the appropriate United States marshal pending the final decision of such proceedings, and without bail; provided, however, that if the appeal be prosecuted from a decision discharging him from custody he may be admitted to bail pending the decision on appeal, but in a sum not less than $2,000; and this provision shall apply also in every case arising under the bill where the Chinese person sues out a writ of habeas corpus; and as well to the time before the first hearing on habeas corpus as to appeals from the first or any later decision in the proceeding.

It is a further provision of this measure that the term "United States" whenever used in this bill as a geographical designation is meant to include all the lands and waters in any way subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, both continental and insular, while the term "insular territory," as used in this bill, is meant to include all island territory of the United States not forming a part of any State or of Alaska.

The terms "Chinese" and "Chinese persons," as used in this bill, are meant to include all male and female persons who are Chinese either by birth or descent, as well those of the mixed blood as those of the full blood.

And it is further provided that whenever personal pronouns are used the masculine includes the feminine.

And it is further provided by this bill that whenever by this bill or any appropriate rule or regulation thereunder a certificate or other paper is required to be issued in duplicate or triplicate the original shall be marked "Original," while the duplicate shall be marked "Duplicate," and the triplicate shall be marked "Triplicate." And a further provision is to the effect that the provisions of this bill shall not be suspended at any time, nor shall any exemption be made in order to permit the admission of Chinese persons to the United States or any of its territory for the purposes of participating in any fair or exposition.

I am frank to say I am opposed to this committee amendment in so far as it relates to expositions. I presume the committee was influenced by the fact developed in the hearings before the committee that quite a number of Chinese women who came to this country to attend the Omaha and other expositions soon after coming here became identified with the dissolute classes. As invitations are being extended to China to visit the St. Louis and other expositions, it would seem to be improper and unwise to bar the door against them, but they should be permitted to come under such rules and regulations as may be established by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. Such a provision, it occurs to me, should be inserted in the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not know whether the Senator from Oregon cares to be interrupted.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I will state that the amendment was inserted by the request of the Treasury Department; but I understand that an amendment is to be offered removing the objectionable features.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. PENROSE. As a matter of fact, under resolutions of Congress extending such invitation, Chinamen have entered this country and remained here. The object was merely to place on record a protest against abuses which have heretofore existed by reason of Chinese taking advantage of permission to come into the country and remaining here.

Mr. MITCHELL. I so understood.

The last section of the act provides for the repeal of all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with any provision of this bill, with a proviso, that nothing contained in the present bill shall be construed to affect any prosecution or other proceeding, criminal or civil, begun under laws in effect prior to the passage of this bill, but all such prosecutions and proceedings shall proceed as if this bill had not been passed.

I have now given a hurried but I think an accurate statement of the several provisions of the bill, without stopping to present any extended arguments in their favor. Any criticisms or objections, legal, constitutional, politic, or otherwise, that may be advanced to any of its parts will be met later. It is believed nothing can be successfully urged against its constitutionality. It is in line with the overwhelming public sentiment, as it seems to me, of this country. It is not, as I have stated, when viewed from the proper standpoint, in conflict with any existing treaty stipulations between the United States and China.

Even if it were, this could only be urged as a policy objection, and not one that would for one moment go to any lack of power in Congress under the Constitution to enact the law. It is legislation not only in line with public sentiment of this country, but with the established policy of this Government. And not only so, but in accordance with the concessions heretofore made by the Chinese Government itself. So long ago as November 7, 1892, his excellency Tsui Kwo Yin, then Chinese minister at Washington, in a letter written to the then Secretary of State of the United States as of that date, said:

It is conceded that the Imperial Government has not encouraged immigration of its people from China to the United States, but on the contrary, in the negotiations between the countries on the subject, it has in the most friendly manner yielded to a suspension of immigration.

Not only in this but in many other ways China has assented to the policy of exclusion, and has not regarded such policy upon the part of the United States as one of hostility toward the Empire of China.

This bill in its entirety, as well as in its several provisions, can not be regarded as the embodiment either of the ideas or the workmanship, in its legal composition and construction, of any one man. It is a bill which has come to us through the processes of evolution, in which many minds familiar with the subject have contributed by way of suggestion as to principles, as to phrase, as to structural strength, and as to legal and constitutional construction. It is a bill the ultimate product, the composite result, of the very best and combined efforts of the following representative men:

First. The five Pacific coast commissioners of the State of California, men of the highest ability and integrity, selected and commissioned not only by a great popular convention, composed of over 1,000 delegates, representing 3,000 civic, political, industrial, and agricultural organizations of the Pacific coast, but also by the governor of the great State of California;

Second. The entire Pacific coast delegation in the present Congress;

Third. The American Federation of Labor; and Fourth. The representatives learned in the law and familiar with the workings of existing Chinese-restriction laws from both the departments of the Treasury and of Justice.

In addition to all this, the Senate Committee on Immigration, of which the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is chairman and of which committee the following-named Senators are members: FAIRBANKS, LODGE, MASON, DILLINGHAM, RAWLINS, TURNER, CLAY, McLAURIN of Mississippi, and PATTERSON, after a most patient, exhaustive, and thorough investigation, running through several weeks, during which time they took 580 closely printed pages of testimony, have reported this bill to the Senate with sundry amendments, none of which affects the fundamental principles involved or the general purpose and character of the legislation, but all of which relate to legal structure, phraseology, and minor conditions of like character; and if I may be permitted, without violating the rules, a substantially similar bill has been reported favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations in the House at this session.

No dissenting views, I believe, have been filed, although I am not prepared to say, of course, that the bill as reported has in all of its provisions received the unqualified approval of every one of the members of that distinguished committee. It is to be assumed, however, from the report that has been made, that a majority of the committee favor the passage of the bill as reported.

In this connection, for the purpose of showing how thoroughly and carefully this measure has been considered by all classes of those who believe in the policy of Chinese exclusion, I beg to attract attention to the following statement of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Gompers in his statement before the Committee on Immigration while this bill was under consideration, among other things said:

We hold that the situation can be met by the enactment of the bill we have respectfully submitted for your consideration, Senator MITCHELL's bill, Senate bill 2900, a bill upon which every interest involved is agreed. No bill, perhaps, that has ever come before the Congress of the United States has more fully represented the true views and the earnest effort of its advocates than Senate bill 2900, and upon which there is absolute unanimity. I should say to you, gentlemen, that the California commissioners and the representatives of the American Federation of Labor have been in constant consultation; we have gone over the several features of the bill to which our attention was called, and we deemed it wise to submit to your consideration a few amendments which we believe will strengthen the bill and make it effective, and yet liberalize it in several essential features. * * *

The bill before you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, contains practically no additional features, imposes no additional hardships to those in the present law, if any of the provisions of the present law may be considered hardships. The only additional features of the bill, which consistently run through it are the features which provide that the Chinese shall be excluded from the Philippines, and that they, too, shall be excluded from coming from one insular possession of the United States to another.

Mr. Gompers, proceeding further and referring to the bill introduced by Senator PROCTOR, said:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we view with genuine alarm the suggestion which has been made to this committee and the bill which has been introduced into the Senate to reenact the present Geary law, setting a time when the life of this new act should terminate, coincident with what is generally believed will be the termination of the life of the treaty with China; that is, December 7, 1904. We believe that if the bill generally known as the Proctor bill be enacted by Congress it would be tantamount to serving notice on China that it is our desire to terminate the treaty on December 8, 1904.

This, Mr. President, is Mr. Gompers's view of the bill now under consideration, and it is the view in the main, as I have reason to believe, of every member of Congress, both in the Senate and House, from the Pacific coast States and Territories.

It will be borne in mind that Article VI of our treaty with China of date December 8, 1894, is as follows:

This convention shall remain in force for a period of ten years beginning with the date of the exchange of ratifications, and if six months before the expiration of said period of ten years neither Government shall have formally given notice of its final termination to the other, it shall remain in full force for another like period of ten years.

It will be seen, therefore, that unless either the United States or the Empire of China gives six months' notice to the contrary before December 8, 1904, that the treaty of December 8, 1894, will remain in full force and effect by virtue of its own provisions until December 8, 1914. It must be apparent, therefore, to all that the enactment of what is known as the Proctor bill would be tantamount to a notice that we desired to terminate the treaty December 8, 1904. But in any event, should the Proctor bill be enacted, there is nothing to prevent the Empire of China from giving the notice provided for in the sixth article of the treaty, and in that event we would have neither treaty nor exclusion law in existence, nothing whatever to prevent an unlimited influx of Chinese laborers into this country after December 8, 1904.

Mr. President, the evolutionary processes which have resulted in the present policy of Chinese prohibition have been plainly marked by separate and distinct periods in the history of this country, wherein our country, through the evolution of public sentiment, has passed from the policy of inviting Chinese immigration to this country, first to restriction, then to exclusion, and finally to absolute inhibition.

The public sentiment which in 1868 heralded with hosannas and beckoning salutations the consummation of the Burlingame treaty has, through the enlightenment brought about by the evils following in the wake of unrestricted Chinese immigration, undergone a most decided change, and the public sentiment which then unwisely, but with an emphasis worthy of a better cause, demanded unrestricted Chinese immigration, now prompted by the dictates of national conservatism and national protection, in equally emphatic terms demands absolute Chinese inhibition except as to the five exempted classes, namely, officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure.

This, Mr. President, is but another grand step forward by this Republic in the majestic and progressive march of true Americanism, which looks to protection of American labor and the American laborer, and to the preservation, purity, and perpetuity of American institutions. It is a grand step in the direction of freeing our people and our institutions from the corrupting and corroding influences of pauper labor and those virulent and destructive vices so inseparably connected with the lower classes of Asiatic serfdom, and whose poisonous virus, if permitted to permeate our body politic, will inevitably lead to lamentable blight, pitiable decay, and ultimate destruction.

No higher duty rests upon the National Congress than to guard with scrupulous care and untiring vigilance the doors which stand between us and foreign nations, to the end that no classes of people of any nation whatever be permitted to enter whose presence would, in the judgment of the American Congress, be a menace to the virile growth and preservation of these institutions which go to make our Republic what it is to-day, the most healthy and vigorous, morally, intellectually, and otherwise, of any nation that has ever lived since the beginning of time.

"Every sovereignty," says Vattel, "has the right to exclude foreigners entirely, or to admit them on such terms as it shall deem proper," and so has said every intelligent writer on international law since the days of Vattel; so say the Supreme Court of the United States; so say the leading statesmen in every enlightened nation in Christendom; so has said the Congress of the United States in every act it has ever passed on the subject of Chinese restriction, and so has this Government, as well as the Empire of China, said in every treaty they have ever entered into with each other relating to Chinese restriction.

The right to do this is one of the highest attributes which attaches to American sovereignty. Indeed, so all-controlling is this right, so absolute is this indisputable power upon the part of the American Republic, acting through the Congress, that no treaty stipulation to the contrary, however solemnly entered into between the treaty-making power of this and that of any foreign power, or however solemnly ratified by the ratifying power of each, can stand for one moment against it.

And while in such a case good faith might and, except in a most extraordinary case and one of great emergency, seriously and imminently threatening and dangerously affecting our country or our people, would cause Congress to hesitate and desist, yet the power to proceed must forever remain unquestioned and undisputed. That a subsequent act of Congress in direct conflict with a treaty provision repeals and abrogates such treaty provision is a doctrine which no lawyer will, in the face of repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, deny.

The doctrine that a subsequent act of Congress abrogates a prior treaty in so far as it conflicts with its provisions is one that has been recognized by this Government since the matter was first discussed or the question raised, nearly one hundred and four years ago, and it has received the sanction of every department of Government—legislative, executive, administrative, and judicial—commencing with its exercise by Congress when, on July 7, 1798, an act was passed abrogating our treaty with France. That act declared, among other things, as follows:

That the United States was freed and exonerated from the stipulations of the treaty and of the consular convention heretofore concluded between the United States and France, and the same shall not be regarded as legally obligatory on the Government of the United States or citizens of the United States.

The Department of Justice, through its Attorneys-General, has at various times proclaimed this doctrine in unqualified terms. Attorney-General Crittenden (see Opinions Attorneys-General, vol. 5, p. 345), in discussing the question of conflict between a prior treaty and a subsequent act of Congress with reference to the Florida claims, used the following language:

An act of Congress is as much a supreme law of the land as a treaty. It is placed on the same footing, and no superiority is given to one or the other. The last expression of the law-giving power must prevail; and just for the same reason and on the same principle that a subsequent act must prevail and have effect, though inconsistent with a prior act, so must an act of Congress have effect though inconsistent with a prior treaty.

Again, Attorney-General Ackerman, in the case of the Choctaw Indians (see Opinions Attorneys-General, vol. 3, p. 357), said:

There is nothing in the Constitution which assigns different reasons to treaties and to statutes. Both the one and the other, when not inconsistent with the Constitution, aim to stand upon the same level and to be of equal validity; and, as in the case of laws emanating from an equal authority, the earlier in date yields to the latter.

Not only so, repeatedly has the Supreme Court of the United States held that the power to abrogate a treaty with a foreign power, as well as with the Indian tribes, does not rest exclusively with the Executive and the Senate, but does reside in the Congress. Notably did the Supreme Court of the United States finally and forever settle this doctrine in a controversy known as the "Cherokee Tobacco Case," reported in 11 Wallace, page 616. The court in that case, by Justice Swayne, uses the following language:

The effect of a treaty and an act of Congress, when in conflict, is not settled by the Constitution. But the question is not involved in doubt as to the proper solution. The treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress (2 Peters, 314), and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty (2 Curtis, 454; 1 Woolworth, 155).

The same principle has been repeatedly affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the question is not open to contention.

But, happily, Mr. President, the legislation proposed by this bill does not involve, as I have attempted to show, any question of Punic faith. The bill under consideration is but an attempt to crystallize into one intelligent, harmonious statute the laws upon this subject as they exist to-day in virtue of the various existing treaty and legislative provisions, as defined and construed by the departments and the Federal courts, with such elaboration and extension as are necessary to extend the policy of exclusion to our insular possessions.

It is legislation which in forceful form seeks to throw the ample folds of protection not only around the laborer of this country to guard him against the ruinous competition of the cheap serf labor of the Asiatic, but which also protects the morality of the Republic and of the people from the pollution which otherwise must inevitably result from an admixture with our people of unlimited numbers of a race wholly incapable of assimilation, who never can become citizens, and whose vices are a deadly and dangerous menace to our people and our Government.

I would attract the attention of those who mock at the suggestions that there is danger unless a check is interposed of a great Chinese invasion into this country, to past history in connection with Chinese invasions into foreign countries. Fourteen years ago, on January 12, 1888, I had the honor of addressing this Senate upon the general subject of Chinese exclusion. I then, in discussing this phase of the subject, among other things, said:

If the Chinese pagans, led on by the great Mongolian leader Timur or Tamerlane, over five long centuries ago, overwhelmed the principalities and peoples along the Tigris, the Euphrates, the Volga, the Ganges, and the Nile, and left a track of desolation through Russia, and Turkey, and Egypt, and India which required centuries to efface; if the Chinese five hundred years ago proved themselves, under great leaders like Tamerlane, to be conquerors in vast, extensive territory, and victorious over innumerable strong and intelligent principalities from the Tigris to Moscow and from Moscow to the shores of the Ganges, what may not be feared from them and their countless millions in the future? Russia has felt the terrible shock of Chinese invasion, and to rally and recover from which it required the vigorous exercise of all her energies for centuries after.

The present Czar of all the Russias is not unmindful of the great danger to surrounding nations from vast numbers of Chinese invaders. It is stated he recently declared that "the greatest danger to the western world existed in the Chinese Empire. It only needed," said he, "another Tamerlane to set in motion another invasion, comprising perhaps 20,000,000 of the hardier races of northern China, to overwhelm Europe, not by their military strength or skill, but by mere force of numbers. If 20,000,000," said he, "were not enough to do the work, then 20,000,000 more might follow, drawn from a population that is to all intents and purposes numberless."

If the means of travel between nations and empires are improved, if the cost of travel is materially diminished, just in the same ratio is the danger which threatens this country through an overabundance of undesirable immigration increased. If it is true, and history affirms the fact, that long prior to the invention of steam engines, centuries before steamships and railways had an existence, nations were invaded, peoples overrun, principalities destroyed, not by any superior intelligence or military skill, but solely by reason of the force of numbers, how much more likely are such things to occur in the present life of nations, when, through the instrumentality of steam and electricity and all the allied powers of scientific achievements oceans are bridged with palatial homes, distances between the empires, kingdoms, and republics of earth—Christian and pagan, free and despotic, enlightened and barbarous—are annihilated, and all these are brought into immediate physical union, and when the continents of the earth and the islands of the seas, the different hemispheres and various zone belts of the earth, with their strange, complex, diverse, and nonhomogeneous and nonassimilating millions, are brought into immediate and dangerous contact.

To the suggestion that has been made in certain quarters, that by reason of our Chinese-exclusion policy our trade has fallen off with the Empire of China, I can not make better answer than to quote what was said by Hon. JULIUS KAHN, Representative in Congress from the State of California, in the recent statement made by him before the Senate Committee on Immigration while this bill was under consideration. Mr. KAHN said:

Much has been said here about the treatment England has accorded to China and the manner in which she has held her trade.

It has also been asserted that our trade fell from $3,701,008 in 1891 to $5,663,497 in 1892 (the year in which the Geary law passed), and then to $3,900,457 in 1893 (the year in which the Supreme Court declared the Geary law constitutional), and rose to $5,862,426 in 1894, after our latest treaty with China was ratified. An attempt has been made to draw from these facts and figures the inference that our trade relations with China were influenced by our attitude in the matter of our exclusion policy. But let us examine China's trade with other countries. In 1891 the United Kingdom did a trade with the Celestial Empire, exclusive of Hongkong (British) and Macao (Portugal), of $3,525,662. In 1892 this fell to $2,836,597, in 1893 to $4,699,336, and in 1894 to $4,363,536. And yet England passed no Geary law or any other kind of an exclusion law.

Again, France, which has never passed an exclusion law, did a trade with the Chinese Empire of 10,344,940 francs in 1891. This fell to 7,244,486 francs in 1892, and to 5,686,600 francs in 1893. In 1894 the trade jumped to 19,971,563 francs. So that the experience of the French merchants, who lived in a country where the matter of an exclusion law had never even been suggested, found their trade fall and rise again just as our trade had fallen and risen.

And so with Germany. In 1891 her trade with China was $3,280,000 marks; in 1892 it fell to $3,115,000 marks; in 1893 it rose to $3,443,000 marks, but in 1894 it fell back to $3,446,000 marks. And Germany has no exclusion laws. I am satisfied, however, from my intimate knowledge of German character, that if the interests of German mechanics and laborers were jeopardized by the threatened invasion of thousands of the pauper laborers from the Chinese Empire, it would not be long before the German Parliament would pass all needed legislation to afford the necessary protection to her own working classes.

Statistics all show that England within the past few years has been losing her Chinese trade. Mr. Evarts says she has maintained it, but she has been losing it. We have been getting some of it, in spite of our exclusion laws.

Japan, which went in after England and whipped China, has increased its Chinese trade from 9,135,000 yen in 1895 to 40,257,034 yen in 1899. The figures I have quoted are from the Bureau of Statistics of our Treasury Department.

But no better answer to the objections that our Chinese-exclusion legislation has injured our trade with China, or that our commerce with that country is in the decadence, than the testimony of China herself. That Empire, speaking through her present very able, genial, and lovable minister, Wu Ting-Fang, in an address delivered by him less than two years ago before the International Commercial Congress in Philadelphia, used these words:

It is a well-known fact that China's trade and commerce with foreign nations has been and is increasing every year. This is especially the case with the United States. Since the opening of my country to foreign commerce fifty years ago her trade with the United States has been steadily increasing. To go no further back than the year 1891, I find in the trade returns of the imperial maritime customs for that year the exports of the United States to China amounted in round numbers to 7,700,000 taels and the imports from China 9,000,000 taels.

The volume of trade has increased rapidly every year, and it reached the following figures last year: Exports from the United States to China, 17,163,312 taels, and imports from China, 11,986,771 taels, a total of 29,150,083 taels. It is a significant fact that for many years the value of your exports to China was less than your imports, but last year it was the other way. Your exports exceeded your imports by over 5,000,000 taels. Thus it indicates clearly that your export trade has been and is increasing immensely.

I have taken these figures, as I say, from the customs returns; but according to the United States consul at Chefoo, Mr. Fowler, who seems to have taken great pains in going over the figures, the United States trade with China is underestimated by one-third, because the customs method of reckoning is to credit the ship with the merchandise she carries; so a steamer, say, flying the British flag and carrying a large quantity of American goods, the goods so imported will be put down as British and not American. Thus, according to Mr. Fowler, your trade with China last year was 40,000,000 taels. Gratifying as these figures are, they will not stop there, but will continue to advance every year. (Commercial China in 1900, issued by United States Bureau of Statistics, p. 2870.)

But not only so. I will place Great Britain on the witness stand. According to the British Foreign Statistical Abstract, imports into China from the United States amounted in value in 1899 to over 350 per cent more than when the Chinese-exclusion act of 1892 was passed. In 1892 our imports into China, according to this Abstract, were of the value of but 6,062,000 haikwan taels, while in 1899 they were of the value of 22,289,000 taels. I present herewith, and ask that it be inserted as a part of my remarks, the following table from the testimony taken before the Senate committee reporting this bill:

NOTE.—These figures do not include American merchandise passing through Hongkong or carried in foreign bottoms.

I have recently received from a lady of the Pacific coast, distinguished for her literary attainments and knowledge of public affairs, Mrs. John B. Allen, a copy of a most interesting and ably written address, delivered by her January 31 last before the "Century Club," of Seattle, Wash., on the general subject of "Immigration," and upon the query, "Shall it be restricted? If so, upon what basis?" I find in that able address much which commands my cordial indorsement. But in that address this most worthy lady, with an ingenuity and ability that can not but compel admiration, vigorously attacks the whole policy of Chinese exclusion and, after declaring that the test of exclusion of immigrants generally should be illiteracy, immorality, indigence, and viciousness, concludes her remarkable and, in most respects, admirable address in these words:

Can our statesmen not stand on this broad and liberal platform and enact restriction laws that will eliminate the illiterate and immoral, the vicious and helplessly indigent, and not discriminate against any country, but let the hand of welcome be extended to the Occident as to the Orient? Let the Pacific bear the immigrant as well as the Atlantic. Let the only requisites be intelligence, sobriety, morality, and industry, obedience to our laws, and loyalty to our Government. And if they can not, do not lay aside bias and prejudice and listen to reason and argument, and do reenact this one-country exclusion act, then may God give President Roosevelt the courage of his convictions and nerve his hand to veto the measure.

With these sentiments I can not agree, and in response and as an answer to the general argument of this estimable lady in favor of Chinese immigration, I attract attention to the views of another distinguished and able lady, Mrs. Charlotte Smith, president of the Woman's National Industrial League of America. She is a most estimable woman, whose life is devoted to the industrial and moral elevation of the women of America. The result of her untiring efforts in behalf of women has given her a most enviable place in the legislative and industrial history of our country. Her name is to-day embalmed in the affections of untold hundreds whom she has rescued from industrial and moral degradation. In her statement before the Committee on Immigration, when this bill was under consideration in that committee, Mrs. Charlotte Smith, in referring to the curse of the presence of Chinese laborers in this country, said:

Now, in my further discussion of this question, I will confine myself to Chinese coolie labor as competitive with women as wage-earners, and Chinese as moral factors in the United States. First, the industrial women of this country have more to fear from Chinese than men wage-earners have, because men are better organized, and women have no voice in the enacting of laws for the betterment of women as industrial factors.

The Chinese have taken the bread out of the mouths of the 50,000 women in the city of New York alone. They absorb $3,500,000 annually in that city in one industry, namely, the laundry business. Formerly women could help maintain their dependent families by procuring employment two or three days in the week at $1 per day. This is all of the past, except in isolated cases. The Chinese have the monopoly on the laundry business, this with steam laundries and improved machinery, most of the steam laundries are managed and run by men, and but few women are employed. Therefore they have taken the employment away from 500,000 women in the United States.

The Chinese control the slipper and woman's wrapper and underclothes trade on the Pacific coast; also largely the fruit and fish canning industries, that women and children were formerly employed in many months during the canning season. The Chinese are like the sponge; they absorb and give nothing in return but bad odors and worse morals. They are a standing menace to the women of this country. Their very presence is contaminating. They have sown the seed of vice in every city, town, and hamlet in this country. They encourage, aid, and abet the youths of the land to become opium fiends, for in the sale of opium is where their greatest revenues are derived. Through the introduction of importing and experimenting in cheap labor of the Chinese the result is our insane asylums are full to overflowing, and Americans are fast becoming addicted to the use of opium, largely through the Chinese, who have for centuries been addicted to the use of opium.

I said before the Silver Jubilee Total Abstinence Convention of America, in 1865, in New York: "In my investigations as president of the Woman's Rescue League, which is a branch of the Woman's National Industrial League, I found 175 women who had been baptized in the Christian faith living with Chinamen in New York in 1862. These women bring young pagans into the world, who, with their so-called husbands, worship in joss-house temples and become disciples of Confucius as well as opium fiends."

Furthermore, 99 out of every 100 Chinese are gamblers. This undesirable class come in direct competition with women who are breadwinners. The beastly and immoral lives that these Mongolians lead is only too well known in the police courts in all our large cities, where patrol wagons filled with Chinese gamblers and Sunday school scholars every Monday morning goes to prove as an object lesson that they never can be "Christianized."

In February, 1898, 700 Hebrews and Italians were discharged. They had been employed in two steam laundries on the east side, New York, and 400 Chinese took their places. A delegation waited upon me at 24 Union Square, the headquarters of the Rescue League, and asked me to address a mass meeting called to protest against these Chinese substitutes. The Rescue League engaged in a crusade against the Chinese, and within ten days the Italians and Hebrews were reinstated in their former positions.

I say most emphatically that the Chinese laundries could not exist six months in the large cities of the East if it were not for the patronage of the so-called industrial class. I regret to say that they are supported in the East largely by organized labor. Men who want union prices for their labor patronize and sustain Chinese laundries in all our large cities and towns.

I will give an illustration: On the east side, New York, four years ago the present month, I walked 108 squares in a section of the city that might properly be termed Hebrew City, where every man, woman, and child I met was conversing in the Hebrew language. Also daily newspapers were published in that language. I counted 49 Chinese laundries and but 1 white laundry, run by a Hebrew, and a poor, dirty looking place it was. The proprietor and his young wife told me they had not been long married, and had formerly worked together in a steam laundry. Their prospects of making a meager living was doubtful, because of the Chinese competition.

This is one of the most densely populated districts of New York. The tenants were nearly all Hebrews and Italians who could not speak English, and yet the Chinese, who could neither speak their languages nor the English language, controlled the laundry trade. The rich and well-to-do middle class do not patronize Chinese laundries. It is the poor laboring class who maintain and keep up the Chinese laundries in this country. I attribute this to the filthy clothes that the Chinese will accept. This, with the unsanitary condition of these laundries and the Chinese mode of living, makes them a menace to society.

During the year 1880, in Washington, D. C., 564 Chinese were arrested. The majority were members of the Metropolitan Church Sunday school. Men and women, pipes and opium-joint paraphernalia were brought into the police court. Furthermore, the worst gamblers and most immoral opium-joint keepers were so-called Sunday school Chinese pupils.

Gentlemen, I was interested in having these Chinese "Christians" raided, because of their contaminating young children, and the result was published in the newspapers at the time. I have here a copy of the Working Woman, which I published, giving the full report.

In Boston, June 23, 1894, 15,000 unfortunate girls were turned loose to forage upon the community because of a moral crusade inaugurated against vice. What was the result? American born, educated girls became the mistresses of the Chinese of Boston. The Tenderloin floating population was soon after transferred to Chinatown, and the Chinese were permitted to go into the business of keeping houses of ill-repute, and engaged extensively in this illicit traffic. This in puritanical Boston, where educated, American-born white slaves were bought and sold for as low as $2 per head, while Chinese women were prized at $1,500 to $3,000 each. This was the market price at that time in New York and Boston. The Chinese, with few exceptions, do not bring their wives and children to this country, therefore they prey upon American girls because they can be procured so much cheaper.

If some decided steps are not taken by this Government to exclude and keep out this undesirable class, it will not be long until legislators will be asking that there be leper hospitals established in every township in this country.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is a serious question, with 300,000 Chinese in the United States and 1,000,000 in the Philippine Islands who are entitled to the protection of our flag. In conclusion, the wage women, who are helpless, and society should be protected from coming in contact with these imported Asiatic heathens as competitive breadwinners. Therefore, I ask in the name of 25,000 organized industrial women and in the interest of morality, health, and industry that the Chinese be excluded from our shores; furthermore, that amendments, as suggested by the Pacific Coast Chinese Commission, be incorporated in the Chinese-exclusion bill and passed.

But not only so. It appeared on the investigation of this subject before the Senate Committee on Immigration having this bill under consideration, from statistics vouched for as reliable in the statement of Mr. Livernash, one of the California commissioners, and long a citizen of the city of San Francisco, made before that committee, that since the year 1880 there had been 1,311 arrests of Chinese persons in the city of San Francisco alone on charges of felony, the list of crimes including more than 100 cases of murder, and also including numerous cases of assault to murder, assault to rob, arson, abduction, assault with deadly weapons, bribery, attempt to bribe, burglary, grand larceny, kidnapping, libel, mayhem, passing counterfeit money, perjury, rape, robbery, receiving stolen goods, and smuggling.

But still further, that there were, since the year 1880, 31,161 arrests of Chinese persons in the city of San Francisco alone charged with misdemeanors, and this in a population, according to the last census, of considerably less than 20,000 Chinese, although it is claimed by Treasury officials familiar with the facts that the present population of that city is much larger than shown by the census returns, as it is claimed that a very large number of the real Chinese residents of San Francisco are migratory in their habits; that from ten to fifteen thousand leave San Francisco annually each spring for the northern fisheries in Oregon, Washington, and Alaska, and an equally large number leave the city for the orchards, vineyards, and mines, and consequently are not in the city when the census is taken.

But suppose the average number of Chinese in San Francisco each year since 1880 is twice the number shown by the recent census, or say 50,000, and this is probably a low estimate, the fact that in the past twenty-one years there have been in that city 1,311 arrests of Chinese persons for felonies and 31,161 arrests on charges of misdemeanor is an astounding commentary on the immorality and criminal disposition and tendencies of this class of persons.

In no part of this country among any other classes, either native or foreign born, can there be found such a large percentage of infractions, or alleged violations of criminal laws of the country as is presented by these statistics. Bearing upon this phase of the case I also attract attention to the statement of Mr. Livernash, made before the committee (see pp. 87-88 in testimony taken before the Senate Committee on Immigration) in which he said:

Returning to the matter I was discussing I shall read from a letter addressed by the chief of police of Sacramento, a place of about 30,000 inhabitants, to Mr. Woods, now a Representative in Congress from California. The chief of police says:

"The total number of Chinese arrested in this city (not including Sacramento County) from January 1, 1891, to January 1, 1901, was 852, as follows:

"Seventy-three for felonies. Of this number 57 were held to answer; 16 were discharged. These 73 arrests were for murder, murderous assaults, burglary, and grand larceny.

"Seven hundred and seventy-nine for misdemeanors—petit larceny, opium smoking, gaming, and violating city ordinances; 624 were convicted; 155 were discharged.

"In this community, as well as in every other place where Chinese abound, the ruin of a great many of our American youths is traceable to a habit peculiarly common among the Chinese, namely, opium smoking. This habit was almost unknown in this State until the Chinese came. A review of the 1,370 convicts at San Quentin prison and of the 771 quartered at Folsom will, I think, bear out my assertion that 40 per cent of the convicts are now such through the opium habit, contracted directly or indirectly through associating with the Chinese."

Before closing I beg to attract the attention of the Senate to the important fact of the imperative necessity for speedy consideration of and action upon this bill. On the 4th day of May next, now only about four weeks distant, the present Chinese-exclusion act expires by its own terms of limitation, and unless this or some other measure of exclusion is enacted and signed by the President before that date the doors of this country will be swung wide open to millions of Chinese laborers who desire to come here.

Several bills have been introduced—two known as the Lodge and Proctor bills, one or the other of which it is insisted by some should take the place of the pending bill. But it is a noticeable fact that those who take this position—and I do not now speak of Senators but of others who have appeared in the capacity of attorneys in the hearings before the Immigration Committee—are those who have appeared before the Committee on Immigration in opposition to Chinese exclusion.

While it is to be assumed in all candor that the authors of these bills, respectively, are earnestly desirous with us of securing the passage of a proper measure of restriction, I desire to place on record at this time my solemn conviction, as well as my prediction, that neither of these measures will meet the necessities of the hour; and the passage of either at this time would result in such a tremendous earthquake of public sentiment and indignation upon the part of the people of the Pacific coast, irrespective of party, such as has not been witnessed in this country in regard to any question for many years.

While we accord to all representatives of States and of people intelligent judgment of this most important problem, whether they reside in one section of the country or the other, we of the Pacific coast States, by reason of our immediate contact with the evil we seek to repress, insist that our deliberate, unified opinion on this subject is entitled to the highest consideration and the profoundest respect of every Senator and Representative in Congress.

One word for the Republicans of the Senate. While this is not nor should it be in any sense a party question, it should not be forgotten that the Republican party is in control of this Government at present. It has a large majority in and controls both Houses of Congress, and we have a Republican Executive. Let me, fellow-Republicans, whisper in your ears if you fail to pass the bill on the subject of Chinese exclusion which the Senators and Representatives of the Pacific coast States, irrespective of party, have presented to you for your consideration, and insist on forcing the passage of a statute which is inadequate and inefficient, then, at the coming elections, look out for such a vote of condemnation of the Republican party on the Pacific coast as you have not heard since the overthrow of the party in 1884.

In conclusion I ask unanimous consent to have printed for the convenience and inspection of the Senate, as a part of my remarks and as an appendix thereto, two papers which I hold in my hand. One is the report of Senator PENROSE, chairman of the Senate Committee on Immigration, made on behalf of the committee reporting this bill. It is brief, but a most admirable condensation and statement of reasons in support of the passage of the pending bill. The other is the concluding note in the statement of Mr. Edward J. Livernash, one of the California commissioners, made before the Senate Committee on Immigration when this bill was under consideration in that committee, and which accompanied a mass of most valuable data bearing upon the subject of Chinese restriction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMMONS in the chair). The papers referred to by the Senator from Oregon will be printed in the RECORD in the absence of objection.

These papers referred to are as follows:

Mr. PENROSE, from the Committee on Immigration, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 2960):

The Committee on Immigration herewith report Senate bill No. 2960, with sundry amendments, as indicated, and respectfully recommend its passage.

The sentiment of the American people with regard to the admission of Chinese has been crystallized during the past twenty years into a definite and progressive policy, which has resulted in equally progressive legislation for the exclusion of all classes save those who, in recognition of international comity, should be admitted as official representatives of the Chinese Government, as teachers coming to instruct the Chinese youth or to enlighten American collegians, as students seeking the benefits of the higher educational facilities of this country, as merchants engaging in legitimate commerce, both local and international, and as travelers for curiosity or pleasure.

These classes are excepted from the operation of the present exclusion laws by virtue of the treaty with China, and such exemptions, which were made at the request of the representatives of the Imperial Chinese Government, include all of the classes to whom admission was conceded by the United States in the negotiations leading up to said treaty.

Upon the other hand, the absolute prohibition of the admission of Chinese laborers was agreed upon by China, and the treaty runs for a period of twenty years ending December 8, 1914, subject to possible abrogation, however, at the end of ten years, in 1904.

The act approved May 5, 1892, known as the Geary law, continued in force all laws then existing for a period of ten years, or until May 5, 1902, or less than two months hence.

Under the administration of the existing laws many of the evil results of the previous unrestricted immigration of Chinese have been nullified, and under their protection American labor has regained much that was lost by former competition of Chinese cheap labor.

It is obvious, however, that the former evils are not forgotten by the workingmen of this country, and that the demand for the continuance of our established policy is well-nigh universal and voiced with an earnestness and insistence that merits and compels our favorable action.

The protection of the American workingmen from the competition of Asiatic labor is no longer a question of transcontinental limitations, but its mantle must now be thrown over the shoulders of the native toilers in the insular territory of recent acquisition, and this is but one of many reasons for the enactment of a broad and comprehensive measure at this time. Other reasons are—

The extreme difficulty in securing a just and equitable administration of the present laws, of which there are no less than eight operative in whole or in part, besides innumerable judicial, legal, and executive decisions, many of them contradictory and inconsistent—all parts of a fabric woven by many men of many minds.

The unavoidable inequality in the interpretation and execution of these contrarious provisions by officers stationed at the coast and border ports of entry far distant from the seat of government.

The necessity of bringing the general features of the law into harmony with the enactment of the Fifty-sixth Congress, which placed the administration of the Chinese-exclusion laws under the Bureau of Immigration, while their execution remained in the hands of collectors of customs, who are subordinates of another division of the Treasury Department.

The urgent need of defining by legislation the meaning and intent of all disputed provisions of existing laws, of reenacting all those measures which have been attacked as invalid or obsolete, and of providing a virtual codification of all laws, decisions, and regulations which have proven effective in the established practice.

The necessity for prescribing and defining the duties and powers of Chinese and immigrant inspectors, United States attorneys and marshals, and of methods of procedure in the investigation and trial of all causes involving the rights and privileges of Chinese.

The imperative need of unquestioned authority vested in the Treasury Department for the formulation of rules and regulations to govern the enforcement of the laws.

The need of stronger measures for the prevention, detection, and punishment of frauds.

The increasing difficulty of dealing with abuses of the privilege of transit across our territory accorded to Chinese passing from one foreign country to another.

The advisability of affording greater protection to Chinese of the exempt classes and to resident and domiciled laborers by a system of registration and certification and by requiring a consular investigation of the rights claimed by intending visitors prior to their departure from China.

The plain and unmistakable duty of Congress to afford to the American seaman the same protection against the competition of Chinese labor in the recognized American territory comprised by the American vessel as is accorded to laborers on land territory.

And the effort now being made in certain cases pending before the Supreme Court to emasculate the existing laws upon the assumption that the treaty of 1894 superseded all of their important provisions.

Consideration of the foregoing reasons inspires belief in the wisdom of the Congress in promptly enacting further legislation, and because of the changed conditions arising from the acquisition of additional territory and the difficulties experienced in the enforcement of all exclusion laws in the past, it is imperative that such new legislation shall be so comprehensive in scope and effect that the Government may find therein the means for protecting all of its ports, its people, and its officers from the flagrant abuses of the past.

The committee has listened to the arguments of advocates of all phases of this subject, carefully considering the great mass of testimony presented and weighing the evidence in the light of actual experience, and as a result it is found to be essential to enact into law all of the provisions of the pending bill as now amended. That any legislation of this character is subject to abuse is not to be questioned, but the committee finds that the best means of preventing such abuse lies in the plan of incorporating into the law those strict measures of practice which have heretofore been left to Executive regulation.

It is believed also that the greatest degree of fairness and justice to the exempt classes will be insured by the provisions of the bill, which prescribes better means for the investigation and disposition of their claims.

We find that despite the diligence of the officers very great abuses have existed, and that the most despicable frauds have been perpetrated by rings and associations organized for the purpose of importing Chinese laborers in the guise of merchants, students, and teachers, and that the privilege of transit across our territory has been exercised mainly by those who thus make use of the courtesy of this Government to reach foreign contiguous territory solely for the purpose of seeking unlawful entry into the United States across its unprotected borders.

The features of the bill providing for investigation and certification prior to departure from China will tend to protect the worthy immigrant in his treaty rights and privileges and give the United States the greatest measure of relief and safety.

There can be no doubt that under a wise, humane, and fearless enforcement of this act the importation of Chinese laborers will be prevented and the ingress of Chinese merchants and others of the exempt classes facilitated, and that the present friendly relations between the United States and China will be strengthened thereby.

STATEMENT OF MR. EDWARD J. LIVERNASH.

In submitting the foregoing matter, the commissioner for California by whom it has been prepared represents on behalf of the commission of which he is a member, of the State and people the commission represents, and of the American Federation of Labor with whose 1,500,000 citizen-toilers the commission is cooperating in the matter of legislation affecting immigration of Chinese to the United States, that gentlemen who grant the propriety of continuing the present laws concerning immigration of the Chinese can not, if they reflect, withhold their approval of the proposition that it will not suffice for the Congress to adopt a bill of four or five lines providing, say, as does the Rawlins bill (Senate bill 152), thus:

"That all laws now in force prohibiting and regulating the coming into this country of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent, or in anywise relating to Chinese immigration and exclusion, are hereby continued in force without limitation as to time."

Or as does the Stewart bill (Senate bill 153), thus:

"That all laws now in force prohibiting and regulating the coming into this country of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent are hereby continued in force until Congress shall otherwise provide."

Or as does the Lodge bill (Senate bill 221), thus:

"That so much of section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 5, 1892, as amended by the act of Congress approved November 3, 1893, 'to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States,' limiting the exclusion of said Chinese persons to ten years from the passage of said act approved May 5, 1882, is hereby repealed."

Or as does the Proctor bill (Senate bill 1450), thus:

"That all laws now in force prohibiting and regulating the coming into this country of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent are hereby continued in force in accordance with the terms and until the expiration of the existing treaty between the Government of the United States and that of China."

Or as does the Fairbanks bill (Senate bill 185), thus:

"That all laws now in force prohibiting and regulating the coming of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent into the United States be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect for twenty years from and after the 5th day of May, 1902."

To adopt any bill of the sort quoted might be to give the nation only a portion of the present laws and regulations under which we are operating; and gentlemen who do not wish to kill or to cripple the exclusion policy the United States has been for years pursuing will, of course, desire to avoid doing anything of doubtful value when certainty can readily be obtained.

Now, in order to accomplish what we are accomplishing in excluding undesirable Chinese immigrants, we are (as the foregoing citations show) relying upon a part of the act of Congress of 1882, a part of the act of Congress of 1884, practically all of the act of Congress of September, 1888 (the Scott Act), a part of the act of Congress of 1892 (the Geary Act), all of the act of Congress of 1893, the convention of 1894, and numerous Treasury rules and regulations.

In order to continue to do that which we have been doing, we must hold the laws and regulations we are now treating as valid.

But the validity of a large part of those laws and regulations is questioned in five important test cases pending in the Supreme Court of the United States.

As the citations abundantly prove, if the Scott Act, the act of September, 1888, is not valid, then a considerable and vital part of our exclusion system must fall unless the Congress shall come to the rescue by express reenactment avoiding the danger points.

And it is to-day being claimed before the Federal Supreme Court that no part of the Scott Act ever took effect, and that such act must be stricken from the living body of exclusion laws.

In the case of Fok Yung Yv. The United States of America, on appeal from the district court of the United States of the northern district of California, this claim of invalidity of the Scott Act is made; and it is also made in the case of Lee Gon Yung v. The United States, on appeal from the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of California.

Mr. Maxwell Evarts is counsel for the appellant in each of these cases, and as such counsel is seeking to tear down that large portion of our present bulwark against the Chinese which is known as the Scott Act, notwithstanding that before committees of the Congress he is representing that the present bulwark should be maintained.

In these two cases the following claim is made, the quotation being verbatim from the brief filed by Mr. Evarts in the Fok Yung Yv. The United States case:

"This act of Congress of 1888 was passed subject to the ratification of the then pending treaty between the United States and China. This treaty was never ratified. The act, therefore, never took effect."

It would not be surprising to find that in this claim Mr. Evarts is right.

The opening section of the Scott Act is: "That from and after the date of the exchange of ratifications of the pending treaty between the United States of America and His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China, signed on the 12th day of March, A. D. 1888, it shall be unlawful for any Chinese person, whether a subject of China or of any other power, to enter the United States, except as hereinafter provided."

The treaty referred to in this opening section of the Scott Act was never ratified by China, and has never gone into effect. The treaty of 1880 ran along until the signing of the treaty of 1894.

In a letter written by the present Attorney-General of the United States to the Secretary of the Treasury, under date October 10, 1901, this opinion is expressed: "The act of September 13, 1888, was passed with reference to the treaty between the United States and China then pending, and it has always been doubtful whether any part of this act took effect. Section 1 made it unlawful, after the ratification of that treaty, for any Chinese person to enter the United States 'except as hereinafter provided.' That would seem to make the entire act dependent upon the treaty."

If the Scott Act is not valid, is in truth dead, then adoption of any bill whose general terms renew the living law can not avail to give us the benefit of that dead law which we are now treating as valid.

An incidental view of the danger is afforded by the attack Mr. Evarts is making upon the entire body of Treasury rules regulating the transit of Chinese persons across territory of the United States.

The convention of 1894 contains this provision: "It is also agreed that Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries, subject to such regulations by the Government of the United States as may be necessary to prevent said privilege of transit from being abused."

Mr. Evarts is saying in the two pending cases cited that under this language the Congress can regulate the exercise of the privilege of transit, but is representing that since the ratification of the treaty the Congress has not done so. Undoubtedly the Congress has not since the ratification of the treaty authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to frame any regulations affecting the transit of Chinese persons. The body of regulations now relied upon as our safeguard rests upon Congressional authorization of date preceding the treaty of 1894. But Mr. Evarts claims that this basis is of no avail. On this point he says in the brief from which matter has already been quoted:

"There is no regulation by the United States Government enacted in pursuance of the provisions of Article III of the treaty of December 8, 1894, between the United States and China."

"Since the ratification of this treaty, there has been no act of Congress directing or authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make any regulation in regard to the transit of Chinese laborers across the territory of the United States, in the course of their journey to or from other countries."

"There are, it is true, certain regulations covering this matter issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the last of these was issued on the 8th day of December, 1900. * * *

"We insist that these regulations are not governmental regulations, or regulations by the Government of the United States, in the sense in which those words are used in the treaty. A governmental regulation is a regulation authorized by Congress, and the mere rule of an executive officer of the Government, which he is not authorized by Congress to make, does not come within the meaning of the term. In other words, before the regulation of the Secretary of the Treasury, in regard to the transit of Chinese laborers across the territory of the United States, can become a governmental regulation, the Secretary of the Treasury must be authorized and directed to make it by an act of Congress."

If Mr. Evarts be upheld in this contention, and the Congress shall adjourn without having expressly authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to frame transit regulations, in what sorrowful plight will we be?

Just as Mr. Evarts is assailing the exclusion laws from one quarter, so those laws are assailed from another quarter. In three pending cases the whole fabric of our present exclusion system is attacked in the Supreme Court of the United States. These cases are entitled as follows: The United States v. Lee Yen Tai; Chin Bak Yan v. The United States; Chin Ying v. The United States. The first of these three cases is upon certificate of the United States circuit court of appeals for the second circuit; the others are on appeal from the district court of the United States for the northern district of New York. A suggestion of their importance is contained in these paragraphs taken from a motion to advance, made in January of this year, in the Supreme Court, by the Solicitor-General of the United States:

"The Solicitor-General respectfully moves that this cause be advanced and assigned for argument at an early day, for the following reasons:

"1. The question is fundamental and goes to the validity of most of the existing Chinese-exclusion laws. To deny their validity is a startling proposition. The Government believes it to be manifestly untenable. Whether or not well-founded, the doubt should be resolved promptly, in order that the laws may be rightly understood and enforced. * * *

What appears to be essential, in order to defeat the litigants now seeking to destroy the efficacy of our exclusion system, is that the Congress codify all of the present statutory and Treasury provisions which are worth preserving, and give to such codification the sanction of direct legislative approval. If in truth they are (as it is believed they are not) in some minor respects at variance with the convention of 1894, such sanctioned codification would cause them rather than the treaty to control, in that they would be the latest expression of the legislative will; if in truth some of the present statutory and departmental rules are dead, though in order to keep back the yellow tide we are necessarily treating them as living, the sanctioned codification would reanimate them."

Aside from being a codification of the present law and practice, the bill extends over the Philippines the protecting provisions of our exclusion policy, and does for the American-mainland territory in the case of the Philippines what the Congress long ago deemed it prudent and proper to do in the immensely less dangerous case of the Hawaiian Islands.

Respectfully submitted.

EDWARD J. LIVERNASH.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if there is no other Senator present who is prepared or desirous to address the Senate upon the pending bill, I shall ask that the Secretary proceed with the reading of it. I have a number of amendments, to which I do not think there will be any objection, which I shall ask to have inserted in the bill, and I understand other Senators have likewise amendments to offer at the proper time.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator ask that the amendments may be now considered?

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that the bill may be now read, and, when the proper places are reached in the reading, I shall offer amendments of a verbal and technical character, so that they may be printed for the information of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Unanimous consent was given that the bill might be read and the amendments of the committee first considered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 1, section 1, line 5, after the words "United States," to insert "its Territories, or any territory under its jurisdiction," so as to make the section read:

"That from and after the passage of this act the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers from any foreign country to the United States, its Territories, or any territory under its jurisdiction shall be absolutely prohibited."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, section 2, line 11, before the word "of," to strike out "possessions" and insert "territory"; on page 2, line 1, before the word "prohibition," to strike out "the" and insert "this;" in line 2, after the word "well," to insert "to;" in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possessions at the time or times of acquisition thereof, respectively" and insert "territory when the same was acquired;" in line 4, before the word "as," to strike out the comma; in line 5, after the word "and," to insert "it shall also apply to;" in line 6, before the word "those," to insert "to;" in line 8, after the word "one," to strike out the words "of the insular possessions" and insert "island;" in line 9, after the word "any," to strike out "of the;" in line 10, before the word "territory," to insert "insular;" in the same line, after the words "United States," to insert "except territory of a group whereof such island is a member;" in line 11, after the word "the," to strike out "transit," and in line 12, before the word "hereinafter," to insert "of transit;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act the entry into the American mainland territory of the United States of Chinese laborers coming from any of the insular territory of the United States shall be absolutely prohibited; and this prohibition shall apply to all Chinese laborers, as well to those who were in such insular territory when the same was acquired by the United States as to those who have come there since, and it shall also apply to those who have been born there since, and to those who may be born there hereafter. And the same prohibition of entry shall apply to Chinese laborers coming to one island of the United States from any other insular territory of the United States, except territory of a group whereof such island is a member. But the privileges of transit hereinafter given to other Chinese persons are hereby given to Chinese laborers in all territory of the United States, subject to the conditions hereinafter expressed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 3, line 15, before the word "used," to strike out "as;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the term "laborer," used in this act, shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled manual laborers, Chinese persons employed in mining, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 4, line 1, after the word "of," to strike out "entering or remaining" and insert "Chinese persons other than laborers, to enter or remain;" in line 2, after the word "in," to strike out the comma; in the same line, after the words "United States," to strike out "shall be, in the case of Chinese persons other than laborers, as hereinafter set forth; but the only persons to whom such privilege shall extend," and in line 5, after the word "be," to insert "restricted to;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That from and after the passage of this act the privilege of Chinese persons, other than laborers, to enter or remain in the United States shall be restricted to officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, as hereinafter defined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 5, line 8, before the word "used," to strike out "as;" in line 11, after the word "home," to strike out "foreign;" in line 12, after the word "represents," to insert "or, if he be a consul of China, is regularly accredited as such under the usual practice of the Imperial Chinese Government;" in line 17, after the word "rules," to insert "and regulations;" and in line 18, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the term "official," used in the foregoing section, shall be construed to mean only one who, being in the service of a foreign government, is regularly accredited as such by the home government he represents or, if he be a consul of China, is regularly accredited as such under the usual practice of the Imperial Chinese Government; but the attendants and servants of any such official shall be similarly privileged to enter, on being identified as such attendants or servants, in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 6, line 20, before the word "used," to strike out "as;" so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the term "teacher," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who, for not less than two years next preceding his application for entry into the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 7, line 6, before the word "used," to strike out "as;" in line 9, after the word "which," to insert "adequate;" in line 10, before the word "study," to strike out "of" and insert "for;" in line 12, before the word "provision," to strike out "adequate" and insert "sufficient," and in line 14, before the word "immediately," to strike out "return from whence he came" and insert "depart from the territory of the United States;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That the term "student," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation for which adequate facilities for study are not afforded in the foreign country or the territory of the United States whence he comes, and for whose support while studying sufficient provision has been made, and who intends to depart from the territory of the United States immediately on the completion of his studies.

Mr. PENROSE. On the part of the committee, I desire to amend the amendment by withdrawing that part of it in line 9 which proposes to insert the word "adequate."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 8, line 16, before the word "used," to strike out "as;" so as to read:

SEC. 8. That the term "merchant," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who is engaged in buying and selling merchandise, at a fixed place of business, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, section 8, line 3, after the word "then," to insert "as a prerequisite to entry;" in line 7, before the word "of," to strike out "or place;" in line 12, after the word "or," to strike out "the particular" and insert "any portion of the," and in line 13, after the word "thereof," to strike out "as the case may be;" so as to read:

And where an application is made by a Chinese person for entry into the United States as one formerly or at the time engaged in China as a merchant, or in some other foreign country as a merchant, or where such application calls for entry into one portion of the United States from another portion thereof, then, as a prerequisite to entry, the applicant must have been engaged as a merchant for at least one year next preceding his application; and it must appear to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry that he comes to exercise in good faith his calling as a merchant, and that calling exclusively, and that he has the means under his immediate control for forthwith becoming, and has completed the arrangements for forthwith becoming, the owner, in whole or in part, of a good-faith mercantile business in the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, a business strictly within the meaning given by this act to the business of a "merchant."

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to move, on page 5, line 13, to strike out all of the paragraph after the word "thereof" as being unnecessary.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 18, after the word "shall," to strike out "in addition to producing" and insert "unless he produce;" so as to read:

And where an application is made by a Chinese person for entry into the United States as one formerly engaged in the United States as a merchant, he shall, unless he produce the return certificate hereinafter provided for, establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 6, line 4, before the word "used," to strike out "as;" in line 5, after the word "who," to strike out "has arranged for an itinerary in the United States, and on the conclusion thereof will immediately depart from the territory into which as such traveler he has been permitted to pass. But any Chinese person who;" in line 9, after the word "shall," to strike out "fail to;" in line 11, after the word "travel," to strike out the word "or" and insert "within the territory of the United States and;" in line 13, before the word "travel," to insert "to," and in line 14, after the word "curiosity," to strike out "shall be held not to come within the meaning of the term 'traveler' as used in this act" and insert "and who intends to depart from the territory into which he is permitted to pass promptly on the conclusion of his itinerary;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That the term "traveler," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who shall establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that he is in present possession of adequate funds for paying the costs of the intended travel within the territory of the United States, and that his purpose in seeking entry is in good faith solely to travel for pleasure or curiosity, and who intends to depart from the territory into which he is permitted to pass promptly on the conclusion of his itinerary.

Mr. PENROSE. In line 17, I desire to change the words "his itinerary" to the words "such travel."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "his itinerary" and insert "such travel."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 6, line 23, after the word "settlement," to strike out "These exceptions are" and insert "This exception is," and after line 24, to strike out the following:

First. A "registered" Chinese laborer is a laborer who, being lawfully a resident of the United States at the time of the passage of this act, rightfully obtains and retains a certificate of residence therein under subsequent provisions hereof.

And insert:

First. A "registered Chinese laborer" is: (a) One who, being lawfully a resident of Hawaii or the American mainland territory of the United States at the time of the passage of this act, is the rightful holder of a certificate of residence issued to him under the acts of Congress in effect at the time of the passage of this act affecting exclusion of Chinese persons from the United States, such certificate being valid and operative at the time of the passage of this act. And every such certificate of residence valid and operative at the time of the passage of this act is hereby continued valid and operative, but in accordance with the provisions of this act. (b) One who, being lawfully a resident of any of the insular territory of the United States (Hawaii excepted) at the time of the passage of this act, rightfully obtains and retains a certificate of residence therein under subsequent provisions of this act.

So as to read:

SEC. 10. That the prohibition of section 1 shall not apply to the return to the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States, or property therein of the value of $1,000, or debts therein of like amount due him and pending settlement. This exception is subject to the following provisions:

First. A "registered Chinese laborer" is, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 2 on page 8.

Mr. PENROSE. On page 7, line 23, I move to strike out the word "continuous."

The SECRETARY. On page 7, section 10, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the word "continuous;" so as to read:

The marriage to the wife referred to by this section must have taken place at least one year prior to the application of the laborer for permission to return, and must have been followed by cohabitation of the parties as husband and wife. And it must appear that the applicant had no other wife (under Chinese or other laws or customs) living at the time of such marriage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 14 on page 8.

Mr. PENROSE. On page 8, line 5, I move to insert the words "absolute and" after the word "is," and in line 7, after the word "offsets," to strike out the words "and that the title was not colorably acquired for the purpose of evading this act."

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 5, after the words "and is" it is proposed to insert "absolute and," and in line 7, after the word "offsets," it is proposed to strike out "and that the title was not colorably acquired for the purpose of evading this act;" so that, if amended, the paragraph will read:

Third. If the right to return be claimed on the ground of property or debts, it must appear: (a) In the case of property, that the ownership is of property other than money, and is absolute and in good faith; that the requisite minimum value is over all incumbrances, liens, and offsets.

Mr. ALLISON. I observe that words are read by the Secretary which are not included in the bill as it is printed.

Mr. PENROSE. I have just offered an amendment, I will explain to the Senator, and the Secretary is now reading the clause as it will read if amended.

Mr. ALLISON. He is reading the clause as amended?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I ask that it be read again.

This PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

If the right to return be claimed on the ground of property or debts, it must appear: (a) In the case of property, that the ownership is of property other than money and is absolute and in good faith; that the requisite minimum value is over all incumbrances, liens, and offsets.

Mr. PENROSE. In other words, the clause "and that the title was not colorably acquired for the purpose of evading this act" is stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 8, section 10, line 17, after the word "return," to insert "to the United States;" and in line 18, after the word "departure," to insert "therefrom;" so as to make the clause read:

Fourth. It must appear, where family, property, or debt qualifications are relied on, that the applicant possesses them at the time of return to the United States as well as at the time of departure therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 8, line 19, before the word "claiming," to strike out "person" and insert "laborer;" in line 20, after the word "right," to strike out "to be permitted to leave the United States and return thereto" and insert "to return to the United States;" in line 23, after the word "district," to strike out "from" and insert "in;" in the same line, after the word "he," to strike out "wishes to depart" and insert "resides;" in line 25, after the word "departure," to strike out "and" and insert "said application to be accompanied by his certificate of residence, and said Chinese laborer;" in line 1, page 9, after the word "make," to strike out "on" and insert "under;" in line 5, after the word "regulations," to strike out "from time to time;" in line 7, before the word "of," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval," and in line 9, after the word "penalties," to strike out "of" and insert "imposed by law for;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 11. That a Chinese laborer claiming the right to return to the United States on any of the grounds stated in the foregoing section shall apply to the appropriate Treasury officer of the district in which he resides at least one month prior to the time of his departure, said application to be accompanied by his certificate of residence, and said Chinese laborer shall make under oath before the said officer a full statement, in triplicate, descriptive of his family, or property, or debts, as the case may be, and shall furnish to said officer such proof of the facts entitling him to return as shall be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and for any false swearing in relation thereto he shall incur the penalties imposed by law for perjury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 15, section 11, after the word "applicant," to strike out "made at his expense and;" in line 17, after the word "rules," to strike out "in that regard" and insert "and regulations," and in line 18, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The original and each copy of said statement shall contain the photograph of the applicant, made at the time and in the manner required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, section 11, after line 19, to insert:

The original of said statement shall be retained by the Treasury officer before whom it is made, and the duplicate and triplicate copies thereof shall be by him transmitted to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port whence the applicant intends to depart from the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, section 11, line 1, before the word "officer," to strike out "said" and insert "the last-named;" so as to read:

And if the last-named officer, after hearing the proofs and investigating all the circumstances of the case, shall decide to issue a certificate of return, he shall, at such time, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, section 11, line 9, after the word "was," to strike out "given" and insert "originally issued;" so as to make the paragraph read:

If the last-named certificate be transferred, it shall become void, and the person to whom it was originally issued shall forfeit his right to return to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 22, after the word

("Oregon)," to strike out "Astoria;" in line 24, after the words "San Juan," to insert "(Porto Rico)," and on page 11, line 1, before the words "of the," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" so as to make the paragraph read:

But no Chinese person, whether laborer or of another class, other than Chinese diplomatic or consular officers and their suites, shall be permitted to enter the United States except at the ports of San Francisco, Portland (Oreg.), Port Townsend, Boston, New York, New Orleans, Manila, Honolulu, San Juan (Porto Rico), or such other ports as may be designated by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the restrictions imposed by section 26.

Mr. LODGE. After "New Orleans," in line 23, I move to insert the words "Richford, Vt."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Was the committee amendment in line 23 agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that it be reconsidered and disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be regarded as an open question.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the committee amendment be disagreed to, striking out "Astoria," in line 23, page 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks that the amendment striking out "Astoria" be disagreed to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The next amendment was, in section 12, page 11, line 5, after the word "in," to insert "any of the insular territory of;" in line 6, after the words "United States," to insert "(Hawaii excepted)," and in line 9, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" so as to make the paragraph read:

That it shall be the duty of every Chinese laborer rightfully in, and entitled to remain in, any of the insular territory of the United States (Hawaii excepted), at the time of the passage of this act, to obtain within six months after the passage of this act a certificate of residence, in the mainland territory or the insular territory wherein he resides.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 14, before the word "territory," to strike out "particular" and insert "portion of the;" in line 15, before the word "he," to strike out "wherein" and insert "where;" in line 18, after the word "his," to insert "personal;" in line 19, before the word "rules," to insert "the;" in line 20, after the word "immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" in line 22, after the word "applicant," to strike out "made at his expense, and;" and on page 12, line 2, after the words "of the," to strike out "other" and insert "original;" so as to make the paragraph read:

To obtain such certificate he shall apply to the appropriate Treasury officer, who, if satisfied on inquiry that the applicant is rightfully within the United States, and rightfully within the portion of the territory of the United States where he applies, shall issue to him such certificate without charge. The certificate shall contain the name, age, local residence, and occupation of the applicant, his personal signature, and such other matter as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. It shall further contain the photograph of the applicant, made at the time and in the manner required by said rules and regulations. A duplicate of the certificate shall be retained by the officer issuing the original, and the duplicate shall contain a duplicate photograph, provided as in the case of the original.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the phraseology of the paragraph. It states that the persons to obtain such certificate "shall apply to the appropriate Treasury officer," etc. We have no Treasury officer in the Philippine Islands. I think there should be some special provision made, if it is to apply to the Philippine Islands as some other portions of the bill do apply. I merely call attention to it.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator that the committee have an amendment of a general character which they intend to propose later, which covers the insular territory as being under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War, and provides that officers under his jurisdiction shall take care of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I observed the difficulty and wanted to call attention to it at the moment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 11, after the word "by," to strike out "the" and insert "a;" in line 12, after the word "attorney," to strike out "whose duty it shall be" and insert "and it shall be the duty of said judge or said commissioner;" in line 15, before the word "that," to insert "or commissioner," and in line 20, after the word "him," to strike out "on payment of costs;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Any person bound under this section to obtain a certificate of residence who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to comply with the provisions hereof, or who, after the expiration of the said six months, shall be found within the jurisdiction of the United States without such certificate of residence, shall be deemed and adjudged to be unlawfully within the United States, and may be arrested by any officer of the United States and taken before a United States judge, or before a commissioner of any United States court to be designated by a United States attorney; and it shall be the duty of said judge or said commissioner to order that he be deported from the United States unless he shall clearly establish to the satisfaction of said judge or commissioner that by reason of accident, sickness, or other unavoidable cause he has been unable to procure his certificate, and that, the six-months time limit aside, he is rightfully entitled to such certificate; and if upon such showing it shall appear that he is thus circumstanced, a certificate of residence shall be granted him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 2, before the word "thereof," to insert "or Territory or insular territory;" and in line 3, after the word "deported," to strike out "from the United States;" so as to make the paragraph read:

No person shall be given a certificate of residence under any section of this act or be entitled to a reissue of any lost certificate of residence who, prior to his application therefor, shall have been convicted of any crime within the jurisdiction of the United States or any State or Territory or insular territory thereof. Any such person, being thus without such certificate, shall be deported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 5, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" and in line 7, after the word "needful," to insert "rules and;" so as to read:

Immediately after the passage of this act the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and enforce all needful rules and regulations for the registration and certifications by this section required, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint the officers for effecting such registration and certifications, authorizing the payment to them of such compensation in the nature of fees, in addition to their salaries as now allowed by law, as he shall deem necessary, not exceeding $1 for every certificate issued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 14.

Mr. ALLISON. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Pennsylvania in charge of the bill? This is a Senate bill introduced by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and it is largely amended by the committee. The committee could, it seems to me, very easily report back the bill as amended in the committee without the Senate going through with all these verbal amendments in detail. If it was a House bill I could see how necessary it would be of course to pass upon the amendments. Unless the Senator from Pennsylvania or the Senator from Oregon has some special view about it, I think we can save this labor.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no wish about the matter, one way or the other. It might have been reported back as a substitute and in that way we would have saved some time.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that the House bill is nearly identical with this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is.

Mr. ALLISON. The House bill is not here.

Mr. PENROSE. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that we are nearly half through the bill now, and we are getting along pretty rapidly.

Mr. ALLISON. I observe that we have reached the fourteenth page and there are 53 pages. That is the reason why I made the suggestion. We do not seem to be quite half through.

Mr. HALE. This is what it does. It obliges the Senate to go over every little amendment of phraseology that the committee has gone over, all of which would be avoided by reporting the bill as a substitute for the original measure. The Senate can not understand these little amendments; they are not material, and they take up our time. I think the Senator from Iowa is entirely right in his suggestion. As we have got only so far along, the bill might be recommitted and reported to-morrow morning with the verbal amendments that the committee propose embodied in it, and then we will go right through with the bill and deal only with the important amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. I hardly like to consent to have the bill recommitted. It would mean further delay, and the bill would lose the position which it now occupies in the business of the Senate. There are only two other amendments which I have to offer as far as committee amendments are concerned. I am perfectly willing to consent to any suggestion that will facilitate the progress of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I only made the suggestion with a view of saving time. If this was in the form of an original bill from the House, I could see how important it would be to go through with these amendments; but here is a bill reported from a committee with amendments to the original bill offered in the Senate. If the Senator prefers to go on, I do not insist.

Mr. HALE. If there are only two more amendments—

Mr. LODGE. There are only one or two amendments additional to those included in the bill. If the Senate wants to adopt the committee amendments en bloc, of course it can do so.

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. LODGE. But it seems to me that it is well to go through with the bill in the ordinary way. There are a great many verbal amendments, of course.

Mr. HALE. The Senator sees that it is much better on verbal amendment for the committee to cure those and report them in the bill instead of bringing them before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. That would amount to making only one substitution of the whole bill.

Mr. HALE. Yes, and that is the customary way, and a much better way.

Mr. LODGE. This course was pursued with the bill because a House bill was introduced precisely identical, and it is being considered in the House of Representatives at this moment. It was thought it would be more convenient to deal with the bill in this way, as it is the same as the House bill in origin, and thus have all the changes noted.

Mr. MITCHELL. It has to be read, anyway.

Mr. LODGE. The bill has to be read in any event.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to inquire of the members of the committee if they intend to try to make this bill fit the House bill?

Mr. LODGE. No, but to show the difference between the House bill and this measure.

Mr. TELLER. When these amendments are made, will the bill then conform to the House bill?

Mr. LODGE. It will not.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that these amendments have been suggested by some of the departments since the bill was printed. I do not think that they are very important. There are not more than half a dozen of them altogether of importance.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest that we go on with the amendments, and then when we get through with the amendments let the bill be printed so as to have it in that shape to-morrow morning.

Mr. PENROSE. That was my thought.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be printed as an original bill then, without the amendments italicized. It will then be the bill of the committee.

Mr. HALE. Yes; let the bill be printed as amended to-day for consideration to-morrow morning.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me the only way to do that is to substitute the whole bill for the original Mitchell bill as introduced by the Senator from Oregon. We could have done that, but it seemed to the committee much more important to show to the Senate what changes had been made in the bill as originally introduced. Unfortunately, in addition to the substantial amendments, there were a great number of verbal amendments, and the committee did not see how it was possible to avoid making them all apparent. It seemed to the committee very important, in view of the fact that there was a similar bill in the House, to show the precise changes made where they were substantial.

Mr. ALLISON. That seems to me to be a very good reason for the action of the committee.

Mr. HALE. On important amendments?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; on important amendments. Of course we do not know what may occur elsewhere, but I anticipate that another bill will appear before us in a very short time and I suppose the committee will then want to take up that bill in lieu of this measure. I do not know what their view may be about that.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose we could substitute this bill for the House bill if the House bill came over. That would put them both into conference.

Mr. ALLISON. In the end.

Mr. LODGE. In the end.

Mr. TELLER. Or vice versa.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator desire to go on further to-night?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not care to push the bill any further to-night if the Senate does not care to stay. I thought we were getting along pretty well, but if the Senate wants to adjourn I will not insist on staying longer.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of expediting the public business, and if the Senator wants to go on I am entirely willing to stay.

Mr. PENROSE. I am perfectly willing to go on if the Senate is willing.

Mr. HALE. We shall undoubtedly have a session to-morrow, and perhaps complete the bill and complete the appropriation bill. Everybody is desirous of doing as much as we can now in order to save time later, when it is hot weather. I do not wish to suggest anything.

Mr. LODGE. Let us go on for half an hour.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest that we go on for half an hour, and then if it is the pleasure of the Senate we can adjourn and finish action upon the amendments to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, may I, while this transformation scene is pending on the bill of my colleague, possibly induce him to accept a very harmless and righteous amendment which I sent before his committee? With this intention, I send it to the desk to be read. It is in relation to excepting those Chinese who took part in the defense of the legation pending the massacres in Peking and who defended the Petang Cathedral. It seems to me that since we are inserting more important amendments that that might be accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire to have the amendment read?

Mr. QUAY. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous consent agreement the amendment is not in order at this time. It will be read.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest to my colleague that it will come up after the consideration of the committee amendments.

Mr. QUAY. I merely asked whether my colleague would accept the amendment, and for the information of my colleague and the Senate I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the amendment may be read.

Mr. PENROSE. I will state to my colleague that I would not feel justified in accepting it, as I hardly think that any member of the Committee on Immigration is in favor of it.

Mr. QUAY. The Senate at present does not know exactly the terms of the proposed amendment, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to exclude Chinese Christians or Chinese who assisted in the defense or relief of the foreign legations or the Petang Cathedral, in the city of Peking, in the year 1900.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be printed.

Mr. PENROSE. It has been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been printed as an amendment to the pending bill, but as an amendment to Senate bill 612. It will be printed.

Mr. BATE. I ask that it be read again.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania about how many Chinamen he thinks that amendment would let in?

Mr. QUAY. I hope it would have the effect of Christianizing the entire Empire.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it would let in at least 1,000,000.

Mr. HALE. About 350,000,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. Probably.

Mr. BATE. I called for the reading of the amendment.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to exclude Chinese Christians or Chinese who assisted in the defense or relief of the foreign legations or the Petang Cathedral, in the city of Peking, in the year 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 15, page 14, line 5, before the word "territory," to strike out "some particular" and insert "any portion of the;" in line 6, before the word "they," to strike out "as the case may be;" in line 12, before the word "insular," to strike out "an" and insert "any;" in the same line, before the word "of," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 13, before the word "insular," to strike out "an" and insert "any;" in the same line, before the words "of the," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 14, after the word "into," to strike out "another" and insert "other;" in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" and in line 16, after the word "shall," to strike out "be" and insert "have been;" so as to make the section read:

That to entitle such Chinese persons as are mentioned in section 4 to admission into the United States, or into any portion of the territory of the United States, they shall produce a certificate from their Government, or the Government where they last resided, viséed by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence they depart; or if such persons are residents of the American-mainland territory of the United States and seek entry into any insular territory of the United States, or are residents of any insular territory of the United States and seek entry into other insular territory or into the American-mainland territory of the United States, then such certificate shall have been issued by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to in the absence of objection.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what is the effect of the amendments which are suggested in this section? How do they change the section as it was originally drawn? Why are these amendments suggested and thus hurriedly rushed over without an opportunity of knowing anything about them?

Mr. PENROSE. The changes are purely verbal. The committee preferred as the more elegant expression and perhaps more accurate and technical the word "territory" instead of the word "possession" and thought that the phrase "some particular" was rather inelegant and unnecessary and therefore struck out those words and inserted instead thereof the words "any portion of the." There is not a serious alteration and not one that is not absolutely verbal.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The amendment does not change the substance of the section.

Mr. PENROSE. It does not change either the substance or the purpose of the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, page 14, line 20, after the word "personal," to strike out "and proper;" in line 21, after the word "person," to strike out "for" and insert "to;" in the same line, after the word "issued," to strike out the period and the word "And" and insert "; and;" in line 22, after the word "full," to strike out the semicolon and insert a comma; in line 23, after the word "any," to strike out the semicolon and insert a comma; in line 24, before the word "his," to strike out the semicolon and insert a comma; in line 25, after the word "residence," to insert "and such other particulars as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

That the certificate mentioned in the preceding section shall be in the English language, shall be made in triplicate, and shall contain the personal signature of the person to whom issued; and it shall state his individual, family, and tribal names in full, his title and official rank, if any, his age, height, and all physical peculiarities, his former and present occupation or profession, and (in detail) when, where, and for how long pursued, and his residence and such other particulars as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 13, after the word "or" to strike out "possession" and insert "insular territory;" and in line 14, after the word "he," to strike out the word "hails" and insert "comes;" so as to read:

If the certificate be sought for the purpose of travel for pleasure or curiosity, it shall state, in addition to the matter first aforesaid, whether the applicant intends to pass through, or travel within, the territory of the United States, and shall show his financial and class standing in the country or insular territory whence he comes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 16, after the word "person," to strike out "for" and insert "to;" in line 17, after the word "made," to strike out "at his expense and;" in line 18, after the word "rules," to insert "and regulations;" and in line 19, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" so as to make the paragraph read:

In every case the original and each copy shall contain the photograph of the person to whom the certificate is issued, made in the manner and at the time required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, page 16, line 4, after the word "issue," to strike out "as the case may be" and insert "such certificate;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 17. That before any representative of the United States shall visé any certificate of the kind mentioned in the preceding two sections, and before any Treasury officer of the United States shall issue any such certificate, he shall carefully examine into the facts of the particular case; and if he shall find, after inquiry, that any of the statements of the certificate are false, or any of the statements the Chinese applicant seeks to have it contain are false, it shall be his duty to refuse to visé or to issue such certificate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, page 16, line 7, after the words "by the," to strike out "person" and insert "said diplomatic or consular representative of the United States viséing, or the said Treasury officer;" and in line 10, after the word "named," to strike out "in it" and insert "therein;" so as to make the paragraph read:

That the original certificate issued under the last three sections shall be, by the said diplomatic or consular representative of the United States viséing, or the said Treasury officer issuing, the same, delivered open to the Chinese person named therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 11, after the words "by the," to strike out "person issuing the certificate" and insert "said representative or the said Treasury officer;" and in line 20, after the word "section," to strike out "52" and insert "53;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The duplicate thereof shall be, by the said representative or the said Treasury officer, delivered, in a sealed envelope, suitably addressed, to the shipmaster, railway conductor, or other person in charge of the transportation of the person to whom the original is given, whose duty it shall be promptly to deliver it to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the place where entry is sought by said Chinese person. Willful neglect or failure to perform this last-mentioned duty is hereby made punishable under section 53.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 21, after the words "by the," to strike out "person issuing the certificate" and insert "said representative or the said Treasury officer;" and in line 24, after the word "port," to strike out "or place" and insert "at which;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The triplicate thereof shall be, by the said representative or the said Treasury officer, immediately sent by mail to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port at which said Chinese person seeks entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 19, on page 17, line 8, after the word "tort," to strike out "or place;" in line 9, after the word "and," to strike out "it shall be" and insert "if such entry is permitted, said certificate, properly indorsed by the appropriate Treasury officer, shall be returned to and;" in line 13, after the word "of," to strike out "identifying" and insert "indicating;" and in the same line, after the word "his," to insert "original;" so as to read:

SEC. 19. That the certificate mentioned in the four sections next preceding this section shall be, when duly viséed by the proper diplomatic or consular representative of the United States, or when issued regularly by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States, as the case may be, prima facie evidence of the facts therein set forth, and shall be produced to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States in the port in the United States at which the person named therein seeks entry; and if such entry is permitted, said certificate, properly indorsed by the appropriate Treasury officer, shall be returned to and retained by the person named therein while he desires to remain in territory of the United States, as a means of indicating his original status, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, in line 14, after the word "and," to strike out "an aid to the United States in preserving him from annoyance; and to this end;" so as to read:

And it shall afterwards be produced to the proper authorities of the United States whenever lawfully demanded, and shall be the sole evidence permissible on the part of the person so producing it to establish a right of entry into the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the object of striking that language out? Having been put in the bill, and one object being to aid the United States in preserving the Chinaman from annoyance, why should those words be stricken out, unless the object of it is that he may be annoyed?

Mr. PENROSE. The committee reported to strike out those words because, in their opinion, it was clearly surplusage and not proper statutory language. It is not generally customary in framing a statute to put in explanatory language of that character. It is purely a matter of grammar and construction.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know, but it seems to me it is something more than a matter of grammar and construction, for I think we may as well all acknowledge that there has been a great deal of annoyance, and unnecessary annoyance, of Chinese subjects who are in the United States and entitled to be here.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think there will be a particle of objection to putting the words back if the Senator from Connecticut so desires.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think those words had better stay in the bill. They may relieve these people from some of the annoyances to which they have been subjected.

Mr. PENROSE. That language was in the original bill as presented by the Pacific coast Senators and Representatives, but I ask that the committee amendment be not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee, which has been read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. Is the language which has just been read, providing that this certification, which is evidential, "shall be the sole evidence permissible on the part of the person so producing it to establish a right of entry into the United States," taken from the existing statute? Supposing the certification is lost?

Mr. PENROSE. As I understand it, Mr. President, this is a copy of the present Treasury regulations. There are no acts of Congress upon these matters. They are Treasury regulations. In the hearings held by the committee, as printed, there are in parallel columns the present bill before the Senate—not exactly as it has been amended—and the Treasury regulations and the portions of the acts of Congress from which these provisions of the bill were copied.

Mr. HALE. And the Senator is now proposing to embody the regulations as statute law?

Mr. PENROSE. That is it.

Mr. HALE. So as to make the statute the same as the Treasury regulations?

Mr. PENROSE. That is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. HALE. Supposing it should happen that the certificate should be lost, and that the party to whom it had been issued had the complete proof of how it had been lost and what it comprehended, ought he to be shut out from showing that by providing here that he must have the original certificate? That is so evident that the Senator must see the point.

Mr. PENROSE. I see the point. That matter was very carefully considered by the committee, and some testimony was produced upon that question by Treasury agents appearing before the committee. It was declared, as the unanimous opinion of the Treasury agents, that this means of identification was absolutely necessary; that in no case does a Chinaman lose his certificate; he hangs on to it as tightly as he does to his pigtail or any one of his possessions.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I find, on making a comparison, that this language "shall be the sole evidence permissible" is an exact reproduction of the act of July 5, 1884, and is now the law of the land.

Mr. HALE. That is the question I asked. If it is now the law, all right.

Mr. LODGE. I read from the language of the act:

Such certificate viséed as aforesaid * * * shall be the sole evidence permissible on the part of the person so producing the same to establish a right of entry into the United States; but said certificate may be controverted and the facts therein stated disproved by the United States authorities.

That is part of section 6 of the act of July 5, 1884.

Mr. HALE. Then the burden of proof is all on one side.

Mr. LODGE. It is the same as in the existing law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this bill was first reported to the Senate I read it somewhat hurriedly, and was impressed with the feeling that it went quite too far in many of its provisions.

We have had an important bill under consideration during the past week, and, in addition to that, many of us have been in the committee room considering the river and harbor bill, which will probably be reported before long to the Senate. I have not had time to carefully examine the provisions of this bill or to acquaint myself with many matters connected with it that I think I ought to be better informed of than I am to-day. But I rise more particularly to say that I trust the Senator from Pennsylvania having charge of the bill will permit us now, at this late hour in the afternoon, to either take an adjournment or to go into executive session, so that some of us may have a better opportunity of examining the bill before it comes up again.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, Mr. President, I yield to any motion which the Senator wishes to make, whether for an executive session or an adjournment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator withhold the motion for a moment that the Chair may lay before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

TRANSFER OF REMAINS OF GEN. WILLIAM S. ROSECRANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be appointed a committee by the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House to attend the ceremonies incident to the transfer of the remains of Gen. William S. Rosecrans from California to the cemetery at Arlington, Va., said committee to be a joint committee of the two Houses.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the concurrent resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I now move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution does not fix the number of the committee to be appointed.

Mr. FORAKER. The resolution provides for a committee, but not for the number. I move that the number be five.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the committee on the part of the Senate consist of five members.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate, and Mr. FORAKER, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. BATE, and Mr. PETTUS were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13360) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13360) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 5, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

TRANSFER OF REMAINS OF MAJOR-GENERAL ROSECRANS.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will lay before the House a statement from the Society of the Army of the Cumberland.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOCIETY OF THE ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1902.

SIR: The Society of the Army of the Cumberland at its last annual meeting resolved to transfer the remains of the late Maj. Gen. William S. Rosecrans, long the commander of the Army of the Cumberland, and subsequently a member of the House of Representatives, from the receiving vault in Los Angeles, Cal., where they were deposited, to Arlington Cemetery. The burial will take place about the middle of May, the exact day to be hereafter announced.

The officers of the society respectfully ask that the House of Representatives may be represented at the burial by committee or otherwise.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. V. BOYNTON,
Corresponding Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 46.

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States (the Senate concurring). That there be appointed a committee by the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House to attend the ceremonies incident to the transfer of the remains of Gen. William S. Rosecrans from California to the cemetery at Arlington, Va., said committee to be a joint committee of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

ANDREW J. FELT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2371) granting a pension to Andrew J. Felt.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CALDERHEAD, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. NORTON.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The following House bills with Senate amendments were severally considered, the Senate amendments read, and, on motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, the House concurred in the Senate amendments:

A bill (H. R. 1706) granting an increase of pension to John E. White;

A bill (H. R. 2120) granting an increase of pension to Horatio N. Warren;

A bill (H. R. 2124) granting an increase of pension to Dewitt C. McCoy;

A bill (H. R. 10111) granting an increase of pension to John S. Raulett; and

A bill (H. R. 6713) granting an increase of pension to Freeman R. E. Chanaberry.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 11409) to authorize the construction of a traffic bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland, within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah, to Hutchinsons Island, in the county of Chatham, State of Georgia.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. ADAMSON. I move that the House concur in the amendments just read.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SETTLERS IN FOREST RESERVES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 3084) for the relief of bona fide settlers in forest reserves.

The amendment was read, and, on motion of Mr. MARTIN, concurred in.

PROTECTION OF LIVES OF MINERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 8327) to amend an act entitled

"An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories."

The amendment was read.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. I move that the House nonconcur in this amendment and ask a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MOODY of Oregon, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. HALL as conferees on the part of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. COWHERD, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for five days, on account of important business.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13360) to make certain urgent deficiency appropriations, and that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Pending the request for unanimous consent, and reserving the right to object, I think that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] ought to tell us what the items of this urgent deficiency bill are. I have not been able to look at the bill.

Mr. CANNON. The bill appropriates for the District of Columbia $36,000 in round numbers—$10,000 for fuel for the public schools, the supply being now exhausted; $20,000 for cleaning the streets, the funds for which will soon be exhausted, and other smaller items called urgent. It also appropriates for repair of hospitals at the Hot Springs, Ark., and elsewhere—an urgent matter, the appropriations being exhausted—$10,000; for the naval establishment (expenses of Marine Corps), $3,000 in round numbers; for furniture in the Interior Department, $7,830; for printing and binding in the Post-Office Department, the Agricultural Department, the War Department, and the Library of Congress, an aggregate of $143,000. The appropriations being exhausted or about to be exhausted, this urgent deficiency bill covers items which ought to be appropriated for at once.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I presume that of course the minority members of the committee have agreed to the bill?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, this has been reported by the direction of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year 1902, and for other objects hereinafter stated, namely:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

To enable the collector of taxes to prepare tax-sale certificates, with authority to employ clerks of the collector's and other District offices after office hours, $300.

Fire department: For forage, $5,000.

Public schools: For fuel, $10,000.

Health department: For the enforcement of the laws relating to the manufacture and sale of drugs and foods, including candy and milk, and for the necessary expenses of the chemical laboratory incident thereto, under the direction of the health department, for the service of the fiscal year 1902, $500.

Sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets: For sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, alleys, and suburban streets, including necessary incidental expenses, $20,248.

One-half of the foregoing amounts to meet deficiencies in the appropriations on account of the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including, also, all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., except quarters for the officers, $10,000.

NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

To pay expenses incurred for articles purchased, and transportation of the same; for the special detachment of marines ordered to duty with the North Atlantic fleet, $3,189.39.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Office of Geological Survey: For furnishing additional office rooms, including carpets, linoleum rugs, desks, chairs, tables, book, map, letter specimen, file, and catalogue cases, awnings, window shades, washstands, wardrobe, cabinets, water coolers, and lumber for shelving, and all other absolutely necessary articles, $7,830.

PRINTING AND BINDING.

For printing and binding for the Post-Office Department, exclusive of the Money-Order Office, $30,000.

For printing and binding for the Department of Agriculture, $20,000.

For printing and binding for the War Department, $75,000.

For printing and binding for the Library of Congress, $18,000.

NOTE.—Total amount appropriated by this bill, $192,737.39.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee, before the bill is passed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. McDERMOTT. There is an additional appropriation here for sweeping the streets of the city of Washington of $22,000. What was the amount appropriated originally?

Mr. CANNON. I have not the memorandum before me. I will ascertain in a moment. I will say to the gentleman that this appropriation is to be exhausted early in May. The exact amount appropriated I do not recollect, nor have I the memorandum before me, but I will ascertain in a moment.

Mr. McDERMOTT. There can be such a great amount of sweeping done for $22,000—that is, sweeping as it is done within the city here—

Mr. CANNON. It is sprinkling and cleaning the streets. Just the amount of streets there are or the number of miles I do not know at this moment, but the gentleman is aware there are several hundred miles. Somebody suggests to me 320 miles, but I am not sure as to the exact amount. In my judgment this deficiency ought not to have been made, but it is alleged by the District authorities that it was necessary. I trust that the proper committee, in the coming year, when they come to appropriate for this purpose, will put a monthly limitation upon it; but as the appropriation is substantially exhausted, and because of the fact that during the spring of the year, from early in May until the 1st of July, the streets will be filthy, it seemed to your committee that there was no alternative except to recommend the deficiency. I will state that $155,000 was the appropriation.

Mr. McDERMOTT. My recollection is this: That the amount appropriated for cleaning the streets of the city of Washington per mile was greater than any appropriation made in any city in this country. I do not say that an excess of $22,000 was not necessary, but anybody who recalls the condition of Pennsylvania avenue during the last three months will recollect that during the hours of the day, because of the fact that the avenue had not been cleaned, it led to such a condition that you could not enter into any stores or hotels without tramping over street rubbish that should have been removed every day, and certainly that does not indicate that the $22,000 of excess of appropriation was properly used. The amount of $200,000 for sweeping and cleaning the streets of the city of Washington is very, very large, and the amount per mile accordingly very high, and I wanted a little information upon the subject if it was within the possession of the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. The total amount appropriated in the regular bill for this year for this purpose was $155,000. The amount of streets in mileage, as I understand, according to my information, is something over 300 miles. The judgment of the committee was when the original appropriation was made of $155,000 that it ought to do the work, but it has not done the work. Now, I apprehend when the next annual bill is reported there ought to be and will be reported for the consideration of the House a direction to apportion the appropriation in such a way that one-twelfth part of it will not be exceeded in any one month.

Mr. McDERMOTT. And in the line of economy I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that you could obtain a bond for a million dollars guaranteeing to sweep the streets and keep them in better condition than they have been or will be under that appropriation for 60 per cent of the amount mentioned. The work should be done better.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care to go into that question. My observation has been that when the streets are cleaned under contract that at times there is severe criticism, and when they are cleaned as they are now, by the hiring of labor—day's work—there are grounds at times, no doubt, for criticism; but, upon the whole, I am inclined to think that the city of Washington and its streets is best cared for, and its streets are perhaps the cleanest, month in and month out, of any city in the country.

Mr. McDERMOTT. They are very easy to take care of, and my objection is not to the manner in which they are cleaned, but to the fact that they are not cleaned at all in a good many instances.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What is the purpose of the amount expended for public printing? What is that item?

Mr. CANNON. It is in the various departments. There is an absolute exhaustion of the appropriation. In the Post-Office Department the increase of business, and in the Agricultural Department the same thing, and this is the cause. The Agricultural Department does large quantities of printing, the public service requiring it to be done, also in the War Department and in the Post-Office Department, and Congress requiring it to be done in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman how many deficiencies he has asked for the public printing during this session?

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It strikes me this is about the third deficiency appropriation bill in which appropriations are made for the Government Printing Office.

Mr. CANNON. I will have the figures in a moment that will give the exact amount. I did not anticipate that there would be any question about it and therefore have not the memoranda before me, but I will have in a short time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am not objecting to the amount, because it may be absolutely necessary, nor do I criticize the action of the gentleman nor of his committee further than to say that it seems to me that the best legislation would be had by putting these amounts in the regular appropriation bill and thus not require so many deficiency appropriation bills.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that we absolutely gave the estimate for the current fiscal year.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then the Public Printer must have been pretty far off in making his estimate, if that is true.

Mr. CANNON. I will give the gentleman the definite information in a moment. The estimate for the current fiscal year for the Post-Office Department was $250,000. The appropriation was $250,000. Now, this is the first deficiency for the Post-Office Department, a pretty large one, as the gentleman will notice, $30,000, and the explanation of it is the absolute growth of that Department—increase in offices, increase in work, increase in printing, rural free delivery, and, in addition, the action of Congress in increasing the wages of printers and others.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If I am mistaken the gentleman from Illinois can correct me, but if I am not mistaken the last Congress in all their appropriation bills except one increased the amount of appropriations over the former Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I can give the exact figures to the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, these deficiency appropriations are to be added to the excessive or the very large appropriations in the annual bills of the last Congress.

Mr. CANNON. For the year 1901 in the Post-Office Department the appropriation in the regular annual bill was $215,000 and the deficiency was $35,000, making a total of $250,000. Now, the appropriation for the current year was $250,000, which equals the total appropriation for the previous year, and this deficiency bill carries $30,000 for the Post-Office Department, which measures the increase in printing for that Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That makes $280,000.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, I am quite sure the gentleman reported a deficiency appropriation in December last for the benefit of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. CANNON. Not for any of the departments. That appropriation in December was to meet a deficiency that need not have been met if Congress had not ordered so much printing for its own use.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was only speaking from recollection, but I remembered that there was a deficiency in December for the Government Printing Office.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and it came from the excessive orders for printing by the House and Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in all the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 8587, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], chairman of the Committee on War Claims, asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8587) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and to nonconcur in all the amendments of the Senate to the bill, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman suspend his objection on the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. Just for a moment.

Mr. HITT. Will this exclude the consideration of the Chinese bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withholds his objection for a moment.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, this is a House bill that has come back from the Senate with a great many amendments put on it by that body. The bill took its usual course, went to the Committee on Claims, and the committee, after consideration which has taken almost a week, have recommended a report that the House nonconcur in all the Senate amendments.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I can not hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. MAHON. I will speak a little louder. I want to state to the gentleman from Georgia that this is a House bill to which the Senate added a good many amendments. It went to the Committee on War Claims in its usual course, and that committee, after looking over these amendments for a week, have recommended to this House by a unanimous vote of the committee that the House nonconcur in all the Senate amendments and allow it to go to conference, for this reason: There are some six hundred items in this bill, and I will frankly say to the gentleman that a good many of them will go out. This bill will have to remain in conference at least a month or six weeks before the differences can be adjusted, and I want to say further that there will be no disposition on the part of the chairman of the Committee on War Claims when that report comes in to move the previous question and to choke off debate.

I am perfectly willing to take the matter up on Friday and give the whole day for the consideration of the conference report. Mr. Speaker, it will take at least three, four, or five days. It will take a day to read the amendments, and the discussion of the paragraphs might take a couple of weeks in Committee of the Whole. Now, the gentleman from Georgia knows since he has been in Congress that the conferees of this committee have always stood with the House. They have examined these matters carefully, and if the gentleman wants to kill the bill, he will simply insist on his objection. Now, there is another reason. This day belongs to the Committee on War Claims, and an important bill is pressing for consideration in the House—the Chinese-exclusion bill—which we are all interested in, and I would like for this bill to be sent to conference and got out of the way of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and I hope the gentleman will not make any objection, but let it go to conference.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as I understand it, carried about $125,000 when we sent it from the House. It is called the "omnibus bill." Since it has gone over to the Senate they have added about $3,000,000 of all sorts of claims, scraped up from the time the Government was formed up to the present time. Now, all I want to know and all I want to demand is simply this: That when this House comes to consider these claims they will have an opportunity to vote on these paragraphs when these claims come up. Now, I am perfectly aware that if there is no objection made and this bill is allowed to go into conference, unless the gentleman stands up to what he says now, when he comes to the House it will have no opportunity to weed out these claims that ought not to be allowed.

Mr. MAHON. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that when the conference report comes here I am willing that he shall have an hour.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MADDOX. That is a matter for the House when it comes back.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This is the only way in which they can be weeded out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If my friend from Georgia will allow me, we sent the bill over to the Senate with about $200,000, and it comes here with amendments added making it in the neighborhood of three millions.

Mr. MADDOX. That is what I understand.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are a great many items in that bill that ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, and there is only one certain course that will give us an opportunity to consider these claims, and therefore I hope the gentleman will insist on his objection; that is, for the bill to take its regular course and that the claims be considered in the regular way.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. MAHON. There are claims amounting to three millions in this that have never been discussed at all. It belongs to you gentlemen upon the other side to take the responsibility. There are 23 States concerned in these claims, and if you want to kill the claims of those people, that is for you to determine. I have no personal interest in the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I call up, under the special order, the bill H. R. 13031 and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Chinese-exclusion bill.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, one moment. Under the rules of the House this day belongs to the Committee on War Claims; but I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Illinois if, by unanimous consent, the committee may have another day. We have been in session since the 4th day of December, and this committee has had but three hours. I do not want to get in the way of this important bill. I believe that next Monday is not District of Columbia day. We did think so, but it is not. Now, I will ask unanimous consent that that day be given to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. HITT. I do not know that it is certain that this bill will be disposed of by that time. There will be considerable general debate.

Mr. MAHON. Then I will ask the next day.

Mr. HITT. There will be no opposition probably, but a good many voices for it.

Mr. MAHON. Then I will ask that it be next Tuesday, or the next day after the completion of the consideration of that bill.

Mr. DALZELL. It is the purpose to call up the Cuban reciprocity bill on Tuesday.

Mr. MAHON. It is not privileged.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, yes; it is a revenue bill. Will not the gentleman from Illinois get through the bill by Monday?

Mr. HITT. I can not say that, as there is much demand for time.

Mr. MAHON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the War Claims Committee be given the day following the passage of the Chinese-exclusion act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the day following the disposition of the Chinese-exclusion act be assigned to the Committee on War Claims. Is there objection?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not like to object to my colleague's request, but arrangements have been made and notice given to go on with the Cuban reciprocity bill on Tuesday, and I would suggest to him to make his request to follow that bill.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, that might make it two or three weeks from now. How long will that bill take?

Mr. DALZELL. I suppose it will take three days. I would think it would.

Mr. MAHON. I will take next Tuesday week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania modifies his request that a week from next Tuesday be assigned to the Committee on War Claims. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13031, the Chinese-exclusion bill.

The motion was agreed to.

CHINESE-EXCLUSION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Moody of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13031, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to dispense with the first and formal reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be omitted. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the committee is one that has been very carefully prepared in all its parts, with the unanimity of the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon nearly every line, its purpose being to provide efficiently for the exclusion of Chinese laborers from the United States. In that purpose we were all agreed. The country, we believe, universally desires that there should be efficient prohibition. The existing law will expire on the 5th of May, and there is no time to lose if Congress intends to act.

The bill is based upon a measure which was drawn up with care by the combined wisdom and experience of the members of this House and of the Senate who represent the Pacific coast, where most of the Chinese in the United States are found, and where the people and their representatives are most familiar with the practical side of the problem. Taking that bill, which is known in this House as the Kahn bill, because the honorable gentleman from California introduced it, representing his associates, our committee have carefully prepared the measure which lies before you, and which is substantially the Kahn bill.

While we desire to effectively exclude Chinese laborers, we do not forget that our country has considerable commerce with China, and all are desirous of promoting American interests and commerce everywhere. In this bill the privileged classes are designated who are entitled by the treaty and by the laws heretofore to come into the country—merchants, travelers from curiosity or pleasure, officials, teachers, and students. We have endeavored to make the provisions effective and prevent fraud, but to avoid harassing or tormenting merchants, officials, and teachers, whom we desire to come and for whose presence we are all of us very anxious. The commerce of a country is in the hands of the merchants. We have a large and growing commerce with China.

The representatives of labor who presented and framed the objections to having Chinese labor here we heard at great length, and also representatives of commerce and of manufacturers. They stated with great force how important it was that we should avoid harassing and driving away merchants from our country who could promote our interests so rapidly. The representatives of the manufacturers of South Carolina, where the cotton industry has become so vast, and is the largest in the country, second to Massachusetts, and now is growing, informed us that they sent the largest part of their product to China. The cotton product alone last year was a million dollars a month sold to that country. It fell off during the war, but it has revived.

Now, the Chinese merchant, if he is harassed here and imprisoned or insulted, can exercise a powerful influence at home to our detriment, and an official can do the same. True, we are liable to frauds of pretended merchants, and that is the problem that this bill tries to meet.

It would seem that much legislation was not necessary in the case of officials, a class so potent and few in number; for, if every one of the officials that came into the country could smuggle somewhere about him a Chinese laborer, it would amount to something considerable in our vast population. But vexatious provisions to humiliate and disgust public officials might result to our great disadvantage by the influence of this powerful class.

These are the problems we have conscientiously and laboriously tried to solve, and this bill is the answer.

I will not take up the time of the committee in explaining it further. It will be debated very fully by my colleagues. I believe everybody is in favor of the bill. I merely wish to state the motive impulse of the committee, all working together for one end.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], because he has given the most patient labor to the details, reconciling contradictions and smoothing the asperities of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will be in order it will, I think, take but a very few minutes of the time of those here to explain briefly the purport of this bill. I shall not, Mr. Chairman, take the time of this committee in discussing the general question of Chinese exclusion, because I imagine that every member of this House is agreed that the admission of Chinese laborers on any large scale would be injurious to the laboring interests of this country; but, Mr. Chairman, as was said by the chairman of the committee, the problem is in what way should that exclusion best be carried out; and it is, perhaps, due to the committee in presenting to it a bill 30 pages in length that we should state briefly what has been covered by this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the first place we were met by this new question, and that was, what should be done in reference to the Chinese who are now living in the colonial possessions of the United States. It was testified before the committee that there were in the Philippine Islands at least 250,000 Chinese, and perhaps very many more, and Governor Taft testified before our committee that, in his judgment, the great majority of the Chinese in the Philippine Islands would gladly come to the United States if they could have the opportunity. What should be done with them? It was the unanimous opinion of the committee that the exclusion of the Chinese against those living in China should be extended to the Chinese who live in the colonial possessions of the United States, and the act provides that Chinese laborers, Chinese coolies, can not come from the colonial possessions to the mainland any more than they can come from China to the United States. That provision, Mr. Chairman, I think will meet the approval of the members of the House.

Then came the next question, Mr. Chairman: Should the exclusion of the Chinese be extended to the colonial possessions? Now, the committee can see in one moment that the conditions existing in, for instance, the Philippine Islands are totally different from the conditions existing in the United States. Here we have a large body of intelligent, educated, industrious laborers, and we owe it to them that they are not subjected to any unfair competition from men brought here who live on a different scale, who are willing to work for less price, who are content to live on a lower degree of comfort and civilization; but the members of the committee can see that those conditions do not exist in our colonial possessions.

There is in the Philippine Islands, for instance, no body of educated, industrious, intelligent laborers, and the question was, What is the best thing for the interests of the Philippine Islands? And, Mr. Chairman, that question is by no means as free from doubt as is the question of the introduction of Chinese laborers into this country. But we felt bound, Mr. Chairman, and it is the doctrine, it is the principle, of the Republican party—of, I think, all members of Congress, regardless of party—to do for the Filipinos what within reasonable limits they themselves ask should be done. The committee was convinced that the desire of the Filipinos themselves was that they should not be subjected to the further competition of Chinese labor; that they were not ready to compete with them, and certainly they are not, and for that reason the committee has reported, by the bill before this Committee of the Whole, that Chinese laborers be excluded from the colonial possessions of the United States upon the same terms and in the same manner that they are excluded from the mainland of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word or two more about some provisions of detail in this bill that I wish to explain very briefly to the committee. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs said that we have taken in its general outline the Kahn bill, which was introduced in behalf of the members from California. The question of Chinese exclusion is more important in California than in any other part of the country, and it was our endeavor in every way to carry out the desire of the California delegation to make this law a law which should not only say that Chinese laborers should be excluded, but should furnish the means and the appliances and the requirements for making that exclusion effectual, which should check the fraudulent introduction of Chinese into this country.

There were, however, two or three questions of detail in which the committee differed from some provisions of the Kahn bill, which I desire to submit to the judgment of the Committee of the Whole. By your judgment we will be guided. The Committee on Foreign Affairs had but one desire, namely, to have a bill which would be most effective, most judicious, most wise, to carry out the principle of Chinese exclusion, but on questions of detail we all have our judgment. Now, there are substantially three questions which I shall state very briefly to the members of the committee. The first was this: The bill provides that the Chinese shall be excluded from the Philippine Islands.

Then the bill as it was introduced—not the committee bill—provided that the Treasury Department should appoint officials who should go to the Philippine Islands, who should there make a registration of all Chinese in the Philippine Islands or any other foreign possession, who should carry out the enforcement of this law in reference to Chinese landing and the preventing of their landing. In reference to the removal of Chinese from one possession to another, Mr. Chairman, we did not regard that provision as judicious, and I feel confident that the committee will agree with us. What would be the necessary result? Why, Mr. Chairman, it would take 10,000 employees of the Treasury Department. Ten thousand employees would have to be shipped from San Francisco to the colonial possessions, to the foreign possessions of this country, to take charge of making that registration, to take charge of that detail.

It was with surprise, Mr. Chairman, that I saw that my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in presenting the minority report and the substitute bill advocated a different method of treating this problem, because I have heard him and others associated with him say so often that the Filipinos should have every possible right of self-management and self-government; that this country should not exercise in every detail of their life a power which the British Empire, for instance, exercises—that the administration of the Philippine Islands so far as possible should be by the Filipinos. It is therefore with surprise, Mr. Chairman, that I see the gentleman recommends a substitute bill providing that the management of the Chinese in the Philippine Islands should be turned over to 10,000 officials appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury and sent out there. Ten thousand! The largest vessel that carries the American flag on the Pacific Ocean could not carry the officials that would be required to execute this bill if it should be done in that manner.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that provision was injudiciously introduced. I believe my friend from Missouri, when he contemplates the subject more maturely, will see that while the end is right the proposed means are wrong.

Mr. CLARK. Does the gentleman refer to the section in regard to ships?

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir; I am referring to the provision in regard to sending Treasury employees to the Philippine Islands to take care of the Chinese there. I will come to the provision about the ships in a moment.

Now, what has the Committee on Foreign Affairs done? The Government has appointed a Philippine Commission, thoroughly familiar with all local questions. Governor Taft, the head of that Commission, appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs and gave his evidence. He is in thorough sympathy with the exclusion of the Chinese. What he said before the committee had, I think, more effect than what was said by anyone else in leading the committee to the conclusion that the exclusion of the Chinese from the Philippine Islands was judicious. We have reported in our bill a brief provision, embracing half a dozen lines, in which we propose to authorize and direct the Philippine Commission to take such measures as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this bill as to the exclusion of the Chinese from the islands and to attend to registration or whatever else may be requisite with reference to the regulation of this subject.

I submit that gentlemen of the House will say, on consideration, that that is, above any other measure that can be proposed, the proper and right way to do. We authorize the local authorities to use their own local means, their own Philippine officials, to carry out the provisions of this proposed law.

I ought to say one word more, Mr. Chairman, on this point, because this bill was submitted to the War Department, and that great Department entirely concurs with the members of the committee in saying that the provisions of the original bill proposing that the exclusion of the Chinese from the Philippine Islands should be carried out by the Treasury Department are entirely wrong. They said, and they said rightly, that those provisions could not be carried into effect. But, naturally enough, the War Department suggested to us that not the Treasury Department, but the War Department, should take charge of this subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is anything that is desired or should be desired by this Congress it is that, so far as possible, the administration of the Philippine Islands should be in the hands not of the War Department, but of the civil authorities. A large number of those islands are no longer under the control of the Army. We trust the day will soon come when not one of them will be under such control. And therefore the committee would not take any branch of the domestic administration there and put it into the hands of the Army, where it ought not to be, but would place the matter in the hands of the civil authorities, where it ought to be. That is the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are two other points on which I wish to say a word. This bill, if I may pass any criticism upon it, largely owed its inception, I imagine, in some of its details, to some official in the Treasury Department. I find no fault with that; but every man in every department who sets to work to frame legislation thinks that everything that is to be done can be done and ought to be done by his department. That is human nature. The bill as drafted provided that a census should be taken, or rather, not a census, but that a record should be made of every Chinese born in this country from now on for all time, and that this record should be made under the direction of the Treasury Department; that the Treasury Department should have officials charged with this duty who would necessarily be scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Mexico to Canada, in every town where a Chinese might be born; and I suppose that a Chinaman is as likely to be born in one town as another. Therefore, under this provision it would be the duty of the Treasury officials to watch if by any chance in any part of the United States a Chinese should be born and to make record of it.

Now, we have just authorized a permanent Census Bureau, with much tribulation, as all members of the House know. Some of us have thought that the duties of that Bureau would be light for a long time to come. Whether that is true or not, certainly, Mr. Chairman, if it be necessary to secure a register of every Chinese baby that comes into the world in the United States, why should not the Census Bureau at least attend to this? Why should there be a branch of the Treasury Department charged with this duty? If officials of the Treasury Department were to be spread over the country everywhere, their number growing and their pay growing, as we know full well would be the case, from year to year, the cost, I venture to say, would be a quarter of a million dollars every year. The duty of this vast body of officials would be to keep a record of the Chinese babies that might be born, and there are not 250 born in this country during a year. Now, is it worth while to spend a thousand dollars to keep a record of every Chinese baby that may be born? The question is whether such an expenditure will pay.

A MEMBER. They are not worth that much.

Mr. PERKINS. My friend near me remarks that they are not worth that much. So we have cut out that provision. We think that the Census Bureau will be amply competent to keep all records that may be required of Chinese growth and Chinese birth. One other provision, Mr. Chairman, and then I shall weary the members of the committee no longer—that provision I should say, in my judgment, by far the most important provision omitted from the bill as it was drawn. These other provisions, as the committee will see, where we have differed from the bill, are matters of administration, matters of detail. But in one provision we have differed on what may be called a question of principle, and the committee regard it as a question of very great importance.

What is the object of this bill, Mr. Chairman? It is, as stated in its heading, to exclude Chinese coolies from the United States. Let us remember what we are legislating about—to exclude Chinese coolies from the United States. And every member of that committee is glad, and certainly I as much as any other member, am glad to do anything that will exclude Chinese laborers, Chinese coolies, from the United States. Of course, the merchant classes, the exempt classes, come in. Why are we in favor of that? Because, as we all know, the Chinese coolies coming into this country would be a dangerous element by reason of their competition with our own American labor. Well and good. But there is a provision in this bill, Mr. Chairman, which no more excludes Chinese coolies from the United States than it excludes them from Great Britain; not one bit. We struck it out because we thought it was a provision that would do no good, and that would do much harm. And though my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] differs with me in that, I confess I am still very strongly in accord with the views of the majority of the committee.

First, I should say, gentlemen, that among the restrictions against the unlawful landing of Chinese we have in this bill a provision that when a ship comes alongside any wharf or dock of the United States on which are Chinese coolies who are not to be landed, the steamer must give bond in the penal sum of $2,000 for every Chinaman on board, to see to it that the Chinamen whom they have on board do not get on land—that the ship that brings them carries them away. So, certainly the provision is stringent enough to keep these ships having Chinamen on board—men employed on the ships—from allowing them to land. If a ship has Chinamen on board who are to be landed, then there must be the certificates and the necessary papers to show that they are Chinamen who are entitled to land; but this proposition refers to ships having Chinamen on board who are not to land. There must be a bond signed by the steamship company, with the penalty of $2,000 for every Chinaman on board who is not to land, that he shall not be permitted to land.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does that provision apply to foreign ships as well as to American ships?

Mr. PERKINS. All ships, when they come to our harbors, must submit to this law. So as you see, gentlemen, these Chinamen employed on the ships that sail on the great seas are not going to get into this country. We have made stringent provisions that they shall not come in. But the bill as drawn, as submitted to the committee, contains this provision, that no ship carrying the American flag, no ship admitted to American registry shall employ on it any Chinese. We struck out this provision, because, as the committee can see, it was no more needed for the protection of American laboring men living in America, and it has no more to do with them than it has with British laboring men living in England, not one bit.

These Chinamen employed on American ships can not land; they can not get into the United States; they can not come into competition with United States labor. That is out of the question. But what is the result of this provision if passed? There are on the Pacific Ocean 60 steamers sailing from San Francisco to the East. Of these, I regret to say, there are only 3 steamers that float the Stars and Stripes. It has been the endeavor of the Republican party and of the Democratic party, and it is the endeavor of every American, to do anything we can to increase the American marine, to see that more ships on the ocean carry the American flag, because where they carry the American flag they carry American commerce, American trade, and American civilization. We will all agree in that.

Now, when that is our object we are met with this provision, and what will be the result? Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when a ship goes out on the high seas it must meet all the world in absolutely free competition. There are no protective tariff laws or registry laws or any other laws that can help a ship when it sails on the Atlantic or the Pacific. It must meet the whole world in absolutely free competition. How many Chinese do you think are employed on these three steamers, which, I am sorry to say, are the only steamships we have on the Pacific? As I am informed, there are a little over 300 of these Chinese—only 300 Chinamen. If they were dismissed from these ships, would American laborers take their places? Not one bit of it, gentlemen. If these 300 men were sent off, I make the prophecy that not one man who now breathes the air of the United States of America would take their places. If these steamers were kept under American registry, the places of these 300 Chinese would be taken by Japanese and by Malays.

Now, what is the work done by these Chinese. These ships sail through the hottest parts of the world; they sail through the Tropics. The Chinese they employ work about the furnaces. They work about cleaning the ship, and they do work, Mr. Chairman, that no American laborer would do or could do or ought to do. It would be a sad thing, Mr. Chairman, if any American laborer was driven to do the dog's work that is done by the Chinese in these boats. What would be the result of this provision? We could not make place for any American laborers. We know that beyond any possible doubt, from what the agents of the steamers say, and common sense makes us believe it, that the only result of this law would be that the three ships that now carry the United States flag on the Pacific would no longer do so.

One word more, because this is the only provision which I care to discuss, and I have but little further to say about it. If that provision forbidding the use of Chinese laborers on the ships carrying the American flag is restored to the bill, you will have just one result. You will not keep one Chinaman out of the United States; you will not find work for one more American laborer; but the Stars and Stripes of the American flag will no longer float over a boat that sails from San Francisco over the Pacific. The American Steamship Company will take a British register for each of their ships. Believing that to adopt the bill with that provision in it would do no good and would do much harm, I hope this committee will join with the Committee on Foreign Affairs in agreeing that it was a judicious act to strike this provision from the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Section 11 of the bill enumerates the ports at which Chinese may enter. I will ask if there is any change from the ports enumerated in the present law?

Mr. PERKINS. I understand there is not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that they are now permitted to enter at Ogdensburg alone in the State of New York.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that is by permission. The gentleman from New York will see it in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under a provision that that might be done by Commissioner-General of Immigration.

Mr. PERKINS. The Commissioner-General, I understand so; and the same power is in the Commissioner-General of Immigration to designate additional ports besides those given in the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LOVERING having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 9206. An act to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 37.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1872) granting an increase of pension to Abbie George.

Senate concurrent resolution 38.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3910) granting an increase of pension to Robert S. Woodbury.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HITT. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri to take his time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, since this House has ceased to be a deliberative assembly, and become a "business body," it desires facts rather than rhetoric, elucidation of the subject under discussion more than eloquence.

The question of Chinese exclusion has for more than a quarter of a century been one of extreme difficulty, taxing to the utmost the ingenuity of the Congress and the thought of the country to devise a solution which will exclude the Chinese from competition with our laborers and at the same time retain and increase our trade with China.

It would be easy to pull down the bars and let the Chinese in ad libitum—a thing not to be thought of for one moment by any lover of his country. It would be a simple performance to shut out, rigorously and ruthlessly, Chinese of all classes—a proposition to which there are objections in various quarters. But the task which the Congress seems to have set for itself, of excluding as many Chinese as possible without giving such offense as will destroy our trade with the Chinese Empire, is one of the most vexatious problems that the legislative mind has ever considered.

Within the last five years both the difficulties and the dangers of the situation have been multiplied; first, by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Wong Kim Ark against the United States, in the 169th United States Report, declaring that a Chinese born in this country of parents subject to our jurisdiction is a citizen; secondly, by the annexation of Hawaii, the Philippines, Porto Rico, Guam, and other islands, as the sale bill says, "too tedious to mention." That decision of the Supreme Court sounded like a fire bell at midnight. In the wild orgy of annexation in which we have been recently indulging, we took to our palpitating bosoms hundreds of thousands of Chinese, of all classes and conditions, ranging from savants and merchant princes to coolies, who are a little above the beasts that perish.

When we annexed the Sandwich Islands we took twenty-odd thousand Chinese. When we acquired the Philippines we took in a number of Chinese variously stated at from two hundred thousand to a million and three quarters. Consequently, for the first time, the Congress is confronted with the exceedingly difficult proposition of holding our newly acquired provinces, colonies, or insular possessions—whichever or whatever you please to call them—and at the same time excluding from our mainland the denizens of those same provinces, colonies, or insular possessions.

Verily, verily, we have troubles of our own—lots of them. Not having enough on hand prior to the Spanish war to suit our taste, like the Knight of La Mancha, we went forth in quest of ventures to the uttermost ends of the earth, even to far Cathay, and we accumulated troubles enough, not only to last us during our natural lives, but to harass our posterity to the remotest generation, unless we possess the courage, the resolution, the wisdom, and the patriotism to unload them and thereby end them. Without being a prophet, or the son of a prophet, I make bold to predict that should the Supreme Court of the United States decide—as many think it will decide—that the citizens or subjects of Spain, resident in the islands we annexed, became when annexed ipso facto citizens of the United States, the people of this country will speedily find a way to rid themselves of that huge incubus; because it can not be that in their sober senses Americans will deliberately determine to subject American laborers to death-dealing competition with the cheap labor of the Orient.

The truth is that it is high time the laborers of this country were waking up to the fact that their one escape, not only from competition with European cheap labor, but from unrestricted competition with the cheaper labor of Asia, is for us to at once and forever cut loose from the Philippine Islands. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is their only salvation. Suppose the Supreme Court of the United States decides that the subjects of Spain residing in the islands we annexed became American citizens by the act of annexation, then what? The probabilities in the case are that the Supreme Court will decide that Congress has no power to restrict the free locomotion of an American citizen into any part of the territory over which the Stars and Stripes float, and the laborers of the country, for whose benefit this bill is made, might just as well wake up now as later on to the realization of the fact that the whole tendency of this latter-day annexation is to bring them into ruinous competition with the cheap labor of Europe and the cheaper labor of Asia. There is no sense in locking the barn after the horse is gone. The quicker we get rid of the Philippines the better off the laborers will be; the better off we will all be.

If we do not speedily unload these accursed islands, the day is not far distant when all of us, especially the laborers of the land, will in agony of soul exclaim: "Who will deliver us from the body of this death?" Should it be decided that the free locomotion of the inhabitants of the Philippines can not be restrained, the yellow flood will pour in and utterly submerge the laborers of America. Our retention of the Philippines means a reduction of wages to the Asiatic level. That is one of the main reasons why I was opposed to acquiring them and why I am dead against keeping them.

That the longer we keep them the harder it will be to get rid of them is a proposition too plain to be argued.

Let no man hug to his breast the delusion that Asiatics can work only as unskilled laborers, for the evidence in the case flatly contradicts that theory. They have the imitative faculty largely developed and soon learn to do anything they see done. Consequently they will not only compete with unskilled laborers but also with those of all degrees of skill, even unto the highest.

The cry once rang along the Pacific coast, "The Chinese must go!" Some day the laborers of America in self-defense will raise the cry, "The Philippines must go!"

The Committee on Foreign Affairs has been wrestling with these brain-racking problems for two months.

We have listened patiently to a vast array of witnesses—ex-Cabinet ministers, ex-ambassadors, ex-governors, ex-Senators, great lawyers, great editors, Congressmen, the head of the Federation of Labor and the heads of other labor organizations, representatives of our sailors, the commissioners of the State of California, representatives of great commercial bodies and of great lines of transportation, ministers of the gospel, the Commissioner-General of Immigration and other Treasury officials—male and female, great and small—until their evidence constitutes a large, instructive, and decidedly interesting volume.

To no question was there ever given a more patient, a more thorough, or a more conscientious investigation. I say this gladly as to the entire committee.

We agree that Chinese laborers on land should be excluded; we differ somewhat as to how best to accomplish that end.

The majority refuse to apply the exclusion principle to Chinese seamen, while the Democratic minority desire to make the exclusion apply both by land and sea.

Upon these differences we ask the judgment of the House.

The report of the minority, among other things, says:

The question of Chinese exclusion is largely a racial question and largely a labor question.

Because our Pacific coast is the chief place of entrance of Chinese into our country, because a vast majority of Chinese immigrants settle on the Pacific coast, and because American citizens resident on the Pacific coast having had more experience with Chinese than the rest of our people, they understand the Chinese character better and are better fitted to know what legislation is necessary to solve the numerous and difficult problems connected with Chinese immigration.

Individually, I go further and say that the Chinese question is the race question of the Pacific coast. There is no use dodging it. The Chinese problem is to the Pacific coast what the negro problem is to the Southern States, except that the race question of the South is entirely a domestic question, while the race question on the Pacific is complicated with international questions. I believe, moreover, that the white people of the South are the most capable of dealing with their race question, just as the white people of the Pacific coast are most competent to deal with their Chinese race question. [Applause.]

Upon these race questions I unhesitatingly take my position with the white people of the South and the white people of the Pacific coast.

The substitute reported by the Democratic minority is substantially the bill desired by our Pacific coast citizens and by the laborers of the whole country, which is a very persuasive reason why it should be adopted by the House.

Another strong argument in its favor is the fact that it is identical with Senate bill 2960, as reported to the Senate unanimously by the Committee on Immigration, and which will, most probably, be passed by the Senate. Time presses. The Geary Act expires by limitation on the 5th of May, and whatever legislation we intend to place upon the statute books should be enacted as soon as is consistent with a thorough understanding of the subject. In order to win the fight against time the Democratic minority concluded it better to report the Senate bill, though some of us would prefer a different phraseology for some portions of it; but we did not propose that any hair-splitting about the verbiage should delay this most important legislation.

On the whole, the Democratic minority substitute is more drastic than the majority bill. Wherever the Democratic substitute differs from the majority bill it is for the purpose of strengthening the bill and making Chinese exclusion more effective and to more thoroughly protect our laborers from a competition which would prove absolutely ruinous to them and consequently to the whole American people.

The first great question on which the minority and majority differ is this: Whether a ship flying the American flag shall carry Chinese seamen. The section is as follows:

And it shall be unlawful for any vessel holding an American register to have or to employ in its crew any Chinese person not entitled to admission to the United States, or into the portion of the territory of the United States to which such vessel plies; and any violation of this provision shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,000.

The Pacific coast delegation wrote that section into the bill. The majority of the committee struck it out. The minority propose to put that section back. The majority of the committee say, first, that if we put that section in the bill every one of these steamships doing business on the Pacific coast will go under the British flag. I do not believe a word of it, and I will give you my reasons. Ships sailing under the American flag have the benefit of the coastwise trade, which includes the trade of Hawaii and the trade of the Philippines.

I repeat this statement, because I "am fighting for blood" on that section, and if I can not get the substitute adopted in its entirety I intend to offer detailed amendments to the majority bill. Not a single American steamship on the Pacific will ever go under the British flag, because the American ships have the benefit of the coastwise trade, which is enormous in quantity and profit, including the trade of the Hawaiian Islands and the trade of the Philippines.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not mean, does he, that only American citizens can carry on the trade with the Philippines? I do not understand that that is included in the coastwise trade.

Mr. CLARK. If not, it soon will be. If we keep on, the Philippines will be included in that trade.

Mr. WACHTER. Suppose a ship is in a port where it can not obtain any other than Chinese seamen?

Mr. CLARK. Wait a moment and I will answer that point. I will only say now that a ship will never get into such a port.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] does not deny that the trade with Hawaii is a part of the coastwise trade?

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. Oh, no; but I do not understand that it includes the Philippines.

Mr. KAHN. I believe that under the Philippine tariff act the trade with the Philippines will become a part of the coastwise trade in 1904.

Mr. CLARK. Yes; I think that is true.

There is another reason; under the American flag there are two lines of steamers plying between our Pacific ports and the Orient—the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which is nothing except a continuation on water of the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Union Pacific Railroad, making a through line by land and water from New York to Hongkong, and the Northern Pacific Steamship Company, which is nothing except a continuation of the Northern Pacific Railroad upon water, making a through line from New York to Hongkong. Is there anyone in this House simple enough to believe that the steamships of those lines are going to switch off from an American registry to a British registry and forego the coastwise trade, which is growing like Jonah's gourd, and at the same time break up their lines of communication from New York to Hongkong? I do not believe a word of it; and the proposition that Mr. Evarts made in the committee—he is one of the greatest lawyers in the country—was a "bluff" pure and simple.

Another thing. The majority say in their report that we can not run our ships in a hot country without Chinese in the stokeholds, etc. Let us see if that is true. Of course the gentlemen on the committee would not state a thing they did not believe to be true; it is merely a question of information. Listen to the facts. The ships plying between our Pacific ports and Australia and New Zealand carry only white sailors on board. Why? In the first place, the stevedores and longshoremen in Australia and New Zealand refuse absolutely to handle the freight carried on a ship that employs Chinese sailors. That is one good reason. The second is that the Australian and the New Zealand governments will not give any part of the mail subsidy to a ship that carries Chinese sailors. The two reasons suffice.

It is going into a hotter country to Australia and New Zealand than that through which our trade between the Pacific and China passes. That is fact number one about the heat. In the second place, our ships and transports plying between our Pacific ports and Manila do not carry a single Chinese, although they run 20 degrees closer to the equator and therefore get into a good deal hotter climate than the ships that ply between our Pacific ports and China. That is not all. I will give you a more convincing proof than that that there is not any sense in carrying Chinese on board ship at all. The ships that ply between our Atlantic ports and Central and South America, and which cross the equator going and coming, carry nobody but white men. Surely you can not find a hotter place than the equator—in this world, at least. [Laughter.] Another thing: In our coastwise trade between our Pacific ports that goes down to Panama the ships cross the hottest tract of ocean on the face of the earth, and nobody but white sailors are on board those ships.

One other fact: The Atlantic ships that go through the Suez Canal and the Red Sea carry nobody on board but white people. One other fact and then I will finish that branch of the subject: The Firemen's and Seamen's Union sent to me, and I suppose to every member of the committee and perhaps to every member of the House, resolutions asking that this section be put into this bill, asserting absolutely that they can find white sailors and white men to work in the stokeholds, contradicting any theory that heat will prevent it. Here are their resolutions:

Whereas during the subsidy debate, and also during the hearings on the Chinese-exclusion bill, it has been stated in Congress that white firemen, for reasons of health, can not be employed in the fire rooms of steamers trading in the Tropics; and

Whereas this statement is being used to deprive us of the protection against Chinese competition: Therefore,

Resolved, That we, the Firemen's Union of Philadelphia, call attention to the fact that we sail in vessels on the Gulf coast to Central and South America and in any vessels anywhere as long as we are wanted and paid; and

Resolved, That in our opinion it is not a friendly act to deprive us of work and give it to the Chinese; and further

Resolved, That it would be more frank and friendly to state the reason why Chinese are carried, it being known of all seafaring men that the wages of Chinese are $3, while we as American firemen insist upon about four times that amount; and further

Resolved, That, being good enough to fight under the flag for its honor, we ought to be good enough to make a living under it.

Approved by regular meeting March 25, 1902.

WILLIAM ROBERTSON, Chairman.
HORACE ATKINSON, Secretary.

Whereas Senator HANNA and Senator FRYE stated that the heat in the stokeholds of steamers trading to the Orient is such that no white stokers can endure the same; and

Whereas this statement appears to have been the cause of the Senate voting down the anti-Chinese amendment to the ship-subsidy bill; and

Whereas this statement is without any foundation in fact, the truth being that white stokers go in the transports from this coast through the Suez, the Red Sea, and the Indian Ocean to the Philippines, and that white stokers go to the West Indies, Central and South America: Therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Marine Firemen's Union, of New York, in regular meeting assembled, that we repudiate the heat argument and the idea that it had any justification in any humanitarian concern for the health of the stokers or marine firemen; and further

Resolved, That we have been and are now willing to serve as stokers in those vessels, and will gladly do the work now done by the Chinese; and further

Resolved, That we hereby urge upon Congress to give to us, who go to sea, the same protection from Chinese competition that it shall be willing to give to workers on land.

WILLIAM MACQUEEN, Chairman.
JAMES W. BIRD, Secretary.

MARCH 25, 1902.

My next objection to the proposals of our associates of the majority is to the striking out of the seventeenth section of H. R. 9330. The section provides that before certificates of status shall be viséed by diplomatic or consular representatives of the United States or shall be issued by other officers of the United States, in the case of the "exempt" classes of Chinese persons, there shall be careful investigation of status. We heartily indorse the opinion of the Bureau of Immigration experts that the section is one which, if made law, will be productive of much good and of no harm.

Experience has clearly proved that there would be a great deal less friction and much more expedition in dealing with Chinese immigrants on their arrival at our ports if careful inquiry were made on the other side of the Pacific. There should be a weeding out of the impostors before vessels sail from the Orient, and then there would be a minimum of fraud and scandal here. We have not heard any sound reasons for denying the Treasury experts' suggestion that section 17 ought to be retained as a valuable aid to early discovery of masqueraders and consequent safeguarding of immigrants having a right to enter our territory.

Now, your question [to Mr. WACHTER].

Mr. WACHTER. I would like to know when a ship strikes a port, and where they can not get anything but Chinese sailors, or at least the bulk of them Chinese, what are you going to do in that case?

Mr. CLARK. My judgment about it would be that when a ship struck a port it would have the crew that it started out with and could get back with that same crew, and if it leaves the Pacific ports with white men on board, it would bring them back again.

Mr. WACHTER. I am not speaking of the mail steamers, the regular liners, but I mean the tramps and sailing vessels.

Mr. CLARK. If they sail under our flag, if they leave the Pacific ports, and this section is put back into the bill, they have to have a white crew, and they can go out with a white crew and come back with it. I would not ruin American trade. There is nobody in this House who is constituted the special guardian of American trade, but here is my conclusion: That if all this talk and worry and propositions for expenditures of millions of dollars to have an American merchant marine means nothing more than that the profits of that business shall go to a job lot of Chinese, I say that all the talk about a merchant marine is tommyrot; but if white men are to profit by it, I am in favor of a merchant marine.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does the gentleman from Missouri mean, when he says white men, Americans or aliens?

Mr. CLARK. The best white men that you can get are American white citizens—either native or naturalized.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I agree with that.

Mr. CLARK. And I would not have sailing on an American ship any white man who is not either native born or naturalized, or who had not given notice of taking out naturalization papers as quick as the law will allow him to. [Applause.] The American merchant marine is the nursery of the Navy, and a Chinese having no patriotic impulse toward his own country will not have any toward ours [applause], and I would rather a good deal, if I had to fight at sea, be aboard a ship whose sailors, clear down to the lowest, were American citizens, than to have a lot of foreigners on board who were not American citizens, and who had never declared their intention to become American citizens, and who had no intention of becoming American citizens.

There testified before the Senate committee a man, Captain Seabury, who was very friendly to the Chinese, but they twisted it out of him on cross-examination—and it was a corkscrew performance, too—that the Chinese, if given a chance, would drive any other set of sailors off their own ships; that they have driven the Japs off theirs where they are permitted to compete; that they have driven the Lascars off the English ships, and the Americans off the American ships. There is one other thing about this business which is not true: That the difference in running a ship manned by Americans or white men and Chinamen would be as great as it is made to appear. Captain Seabury admitted that 20 white men were equal to 32 Chinese sailors. So that makes a good big difference of itself.

Mr. WACHTER. In what way?

Mr. CLARK. Why, in capacity to work; in disposition to work.

Mr. WACHTER. And in the amount of money, too.

Mr. CLARK. The American sailor gets $30 a month and the Chinese sailor $7.50.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, what does the Chinese sailor live on?

Mr. CLARK. On rice and fish, chiefly. I will tell you who will profit by having Chinese sailors. The owners of the ships, and nobody else. Now, if our stevedores and longshoremen will form a league, offensive and defensive, like those New Zealanders and Australians, not to handle cargoes carried by ships that have Chinese sailors on board, and if our legislators will act with as much sense in the preservation of the integrity of the white race as Australia and New Zealand have, and declare that under no conditions shall any ship carrying Chinese on board have any subsidy for carrying the mail or anything else, then you will never hear another howl as long as you live about this Chinese sailor business.

It is of no use to be deceptive about things, and I will confess that at one time I took the identical view of this section defining the Chinese that the majority do. I thought the rest of it was tautology; but I read this book of evidence, and put in about three weeks doing it. Our friends of the majority say:

That the term "Chinese" and the term "Chinese person" as used in this act are meant to include all persons who are Chinese either by birth or by descent.

That is where they stop, and at first blush it looks as though it is enough; but our minority put back the old section:

SEC. 52. That the term "Chinese" and the term "Chinese person" used in this act are meant to include all male and female persons who are Chinese either by birth or descent, as well those of mixed blood as those of the full blood.

Now, why do we want added these words:

As well those of mixed blood as those of full blood, and males as well as females.

I will tell you why. If you cut that section off at the word "descent," there is not a Chinese in Hawaii or in the Philippines who will not be able to prove that he has a strain of some other sort of blood in him. Every one of them will turn out to be a mulatto.

I have an argument that I can address to Southern men with the hope of intelligent appreciation, but not with much hope of belief to Northern men, simply because they do not understand the situation. That is that by common consent down South anybody who has one drop of negro blood in him is classed as a negro. If that applies to the negroes, it certainly ought to apply to the Chinese.

You know there are certain excepted classes. The fellows who are excluded are the laborers. If there was some way to pick out a laborer just by looking at him, there would be no difficulty about it at all. Teachers, merchants, officials, and persons traveling for curiosity or pleasure are exempted, and then any sort of a Chinese under certain conditions is permitted to pass through this country under what are called transit privileges. When it comes to defining these exempted classes it is an extremely difficult matter. The original bill and this substitute that we offer define teachers more elaborately than the majority bill does. Here is the way the Pacific coast people wrote it:

SEC. 6. That the term "teacher," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who, for not less than two years next preceding his application for entry into the United States, has been continuously engaged in giving instruction in the higher branches of education, and who proves to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that he is qualified to teach such higher branches and has completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States and intends to pursue no other occupation than teaching while in the United States.

The majority of the committee changed that to those who "have been engaged in teaching." The minority reported it as the Pacific coast people wrote it: "And has completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States and intends to pursue no other occupation while teaching in the United States." You want to know, in order to vote intelligently, what object we have in not leaving it simply "teaching" and making it "teaching in the higher branches."

Well, I confess that I learned a vast amount while the committee has been making its investigations. To my utter amazement, and I actually believe to the amazement of every man on that committee except the chairman, who has had large experience, but to my amazement, at any rate, I found out that primary education is well-nigh universal in China; that they have compulsory education, and they have a provision that if a Chinese child does not go to school they thrash his daddy for not sending him to school, instead of thrashing the child. [Laughter.]

If I had been called on two months ago to give an off-hand opinion as to what proportion of Chinese could read or write, I would have been willing to risk my head on the fact that not more than one in ten thousand could do so. I have increased my stock of knowledge on this subject at least. Now, you leave it at "teaching" and do not put in "higher education," and every coolie will apply to enter as a teacher. I am informed by credible men that before we had that restriction in there for higher education, primary Chinese schools sprang up in San Francisco and on the Pacific coast like mushrooms in a damp cellar, and that coolies who came to work as laborers really, by the score and by the hundreds, came into this country under the cloak of being "teachers."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CLARK. With pleasure.

Mr. ADAMS. They are to have a contract with an American institution of learning, are they not?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Therefore there would have to be collusion between an American institution of learning and the Chinaman?

Mr. CLARK. That is just it exactly, and there was collusion.

Mr. ADAMS. I have a better opinion of American institutions of learning than to believe that they would enter into collusion for the evasion of the law.

Mr. CLARK. What is an institution of learning? Why, a primary school is as much an institution of learning as Johns Hopkins, Yale, Harvard, Princeton, or the universities of Michigan, Virginia, and Missouri. Of course it is a different sort of institution of learning. The bill says, "a recognized institution of learning." It does not say an American institution of learning. Now, my friend from Pennsylvania, these are the schools, and this is just exactly the way the collusion was performed. I am opposed to it, and I want to say, gentlemen, that the whole difficulty of the situation grows out of the utter duplicity of Chinese character, and I am going to show you an instance.

Among other things which are provided in this bill, in the majority and minority report, is this: A Chinese merchant who is here and who has the right to be here, who goes back to China on a visit, and who claims entrance again by right of previous residence here, is required to show that he has at least $1,000 worth of property. Now, I want to show you how he gets around that. Here is a case. Mr. Dunn, of the Treasury Department, stated it. There was a boy who wanted to get in as a merchant. He had to make it appear that he had $1,000 worth of property and that he had been a merchant. Now, listen to this astonishing evidence:

I will not stop to read this testimony at length. This boy was asked about his history as shown in the certificate.

And as to his mercantile status. He claimed that in a certain year, which would have been at about the age of 18, he had invested $2,000 in a store in China.

And two years later he had invested $4,000 in still another store, and had disposed of his interests there.

I said, "You say that when you were a mere boy of 16 you were a merchant with an interest of $2,000 in a store?"

(That would be a small fortune to a man in China, you know.) He said, "Yes," very blandly. I asked, "Where did you get the $2,000?" He answered, "God gave it to me."

[Laughter.]

It was the first time I had ever known of a Chinaman claiming any direct assistance from the Almighty, and I was mystified. I said, "Do you mean to say that God gave you that $2,000?" He said, "Well, God gave me $1,500 and my father gave me $500."

[Laughter.]

"How did God give you the $1,500?" "Why, he sent it to me." "How? Right from heaven?" "Yes." Then he went on to describe how God sent the $1,500 to him, and that when he saw it fall from heaven he picked it up.

[Laughter.]

How are you going to get around witnesses like that? Questioning him a little more closely, I said, "You are sure it was exactly $1,500 that God sent you from the sky; you saw it fall and picked it up?" "Well," said the Chinaman, "God sent me the winning lottery ticket that won $1,500." [Laughter.] That is surely a remarkable bit of history. Now, that is the trouble; that illustrates it. There used to be a police judge in St. Louis who was death on tramps, but he had a very tender heart for laborers who got into trouble; and when a fellow would come into the police court, yanked up for loitering around, and claimed that he was a laborer, the police judge would make him stick out his hand and he would examine it, and if he did not have the proper marks on it he would send him to the workhouse. So at last the poor tramps would go out and rub their hands industriously on the brickbats and make corns on them and come in and undertake to deceive the judge that way. [Laughter.]

There is a provision in here that the Chinese shall be allowed to bring with him his minor children; and it is absolutely true that one Chinaman 40 years old tried to get into San Francisco as the minor child of another Chinaman. I heard a distinguished member of the committee tell this tale: The Canadian Pacific Railway has always tried to sneak these coolies over our border, and they let them get off the train about three miles and a half the other side of the border, and then they would send them through the bushes, and then they would take them on just this side of the border. They would haul them sometimes in wagons, and one night they undertook to haul five of them through concealed in a great big music box. Generally they went through like Old Nick was after them and never stopped anywhere; but that night the driver got thirsty and he stopped at a town to get him a drink, and the Chinese in the music box, thinking he had arrived at the destination, and as the consul was watching, out popped five Chinese ghosts from the music box. [Laughter.]

The second section of this bill is bothersome. Section 2 says:

That from and after the passage of this act the entry into the mainland territory of the United States of Chinese laborers coming from any of the insular possessions of the United States shall be prohibited; and the prohibition shall apply to all Chinese laborers, as well those who were in such insular possessions at the time or times of acquisition thereof, respectively, by the United States as to those who have come there since, and those who have been born there since, and those who may be born there hereafter.

I will tell you very frankly why I wanted to put that section in, and especially the last clause of it. The minority say they have grave doubts about the constitutionality of that section. Gentlemen, I do not believe—and I am not setting up to be a Solomon, either—I do not believe that the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Wong Kim Ark against the United States, declaring that the Chinese born in this country of Chinese parents are American citizens, is a sound and just decision. I want to see them compelled to decide that case over again, and the only way that you can compel them to decide that question again is to put that language in this bill.

Mr. LESSLER. What was the decision in that case?

Mr. CLARK. It decides that Chinese born in the United States of Chinese parents, subject to our jurisdiction—and that means everybody except diplomats—are American citizens, clothed with all the immunities, privileges, and duties of American citizens. I do not believe a syllable of it. They decided it under the first clause of the fourteenth amendment, which says that anybody born in the United States or naturalized here is a citizen. That is the strict letter of that amendment, but in construing a law it has always been held that you must consider the history of the times in which the law is written, and it was said in the celebrated Slaughterhouse Cases by Mr. Justice Miller that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments were passed for the sole benefit of the negroes.

I do not believe that the Congress that passed the fourteenth amendment was thinking any more about making citizens out of Chinese than they were of making a citizen of the man in the moon. [Laughter.] If the Supreme Court never had changed its opinion, I would hesitate a long time before I would say anything in the way of dissent from it; but I recollect, that it first declared the legal-tender act unconstitutional, and then the Supreme Court was enlarged and packed in order to get a majority that would hold the legal-tender act constitutional. It is within the recollection of persons who are yet children—that the income-tax portion of the Wilson-Gorman bill was declared unconstitutional because one supreme judge changed his mind over night. And if the court can change its ruling so quickly as that on a question like the income tax or a question like the legal-tender act, it certainly can change it on a question involving the momentous proposition of making American citizens out of Chinese.

A strange fact in this connection was stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] that there could not have been more than 200 Chinese born in the United States. And he was right, because the Chinese women who are brought over here for nameless purposes have a certain surgical operation performed upon them before they are brought here, so that they can not conceive or give birth to children. But notwithstanding the fact that there could not be more than two or three hundred born here, 5,000 Chinamen have claimed under that decision since 1897 that they were born here.

Mr. KAHN. Five thousand in the States of New York and Vermont alone.

Mr. CLARK. I am glad to have the gentleman make the correction; it makes the case that much stronger. The matter, it appears, is worse than I stated it. It is said to be an absolute fact that the records of the California courts show that one Chinese woman out there is the mother of 500 children. If she had been a short-horned cow she would have been worth more than a Cripple Creek gold mine. [Laughter.]

While the birth of Chinese in the United States proper—God save the mark—could not amount to much, because the women coming here are incapacitated for conception; the fact is not the same in the Philippine Islands. Governor Taft has reported that there are some 200,000 to 400,000 Chinese over there, and the representatives of the Federation of Labor say that there are a million and a quarter to a million and three-quarters of Chinese—full blood and mixed blood. With a million and three-quarters of them breeding over there, this becomes a very serious question.

I am willing to take the chances on this question of the constitutionality of section 2. I am willing to take the chances rather than have the Philippine Islands used as a breeding ground for Chinese that may become American citizens and may come here and compete with American labor. I thank God fervently and reverently this day that whatever calamities may accrue to this country in general, and the laboring people in particular, from the mania for universal annexation, that in the day of judgment nobody can say to me "Thou didst it." I fought the annexation of the Sandwich Islands on this very proposition. I fought the annexation of the Philippines on this proposition, and I want it written on my tombstone that I was one of the 35 men in this House, out of 357, who had the courage, the patriotism, the nerve, and the good sense to vote against paying Spain $20,000,000 for the Philippines.

My friend from New York [Mr. PERKINS] says that it would be an unnecessary expense to register these Chinese babies. It would not cost near as much as he says, anyhow. It will cost us only a dollar a head, and if there are only 300 babies born the expense will be only $300 instead of a million—a very considerable difference. In the original bill it was provided that in the Philippine Islands the Chinese themselves could pay for this registration, and I am in favor of that.

But I will state why I prefer that the Treasury officials should attend to this matter. They already know how. They have the machinery. They know the ways and the manners of these people. They can do this work more cheaply and more effectively than anybody else. But I will not particularly object to that part of the bill providing that the Philippine Commission shall arrange this business over there. I would not object very much to the Army doing it. But I want to ask my friend from New York, How can the Philippine Commission register the Chinese in Porto Rico? They have no jurisdiction there.

For these reasons I am in favor of these provisions going into this bill. I intend to offer them or somebody else will as amendments to the majority bill. If these and some 20 or 30 other amendments that have been prepared are inserted in the majority bill, I have no objection to that bill passing. But if we do not secure these changes by way of individual amendments, I intend to secure, if I can, a square vote on this substitute that the Democratic minority of the committee have reported that embraces all of these changes.

Now, some of us do not like some of the phraseology of this bill and do not want to stand for it. The truth is, that nearly all of this stuff that seems to be tautology and redundancy is either a part of the old statute on the subject or is a part of the decisions of the Treasury officials of the United States. There is not a lawyer in the House that does not know that finally somehow or other every word of a statute has to be construed; and where the statutes have been construed it is better to retain the old language even if it does not exactly suit us in its phraseology.

I do not believe that this bill will lose us the trade with China. The Chinese do not trade with us because they love us. They follow the rule of nature and of common sense, buying where they can buy the cheapest and selling where they can sell the highest. Senator BEVERIDGE has been writing some exceedingly interesting letters about China in the Saturday Evening Post. In one of them he thus discourses on force and kindness as applied to the Chinese:

Germany, too, is ingenious and insistent in creating an impression on the Oriental mind that she is the world's superior power. Wherever there is an excuse for the display of military force, German soldiery is seen. The writer never visited, on two extended trips to China, a single Chinese port in which one or more German war ships were not found.

The German military element was so predominant in Shanghai in the summer of 1901 that a casual and uneducated traveler might have been excused for thinking it a German colony. No one who knows the peculiar practical quality of the German mind will believe for an instant that all of this is for mere show. It is the working out of a carefully evolved theory about China and its inhabitants, and Orientals in general. With the same patience with which their scientists have evolved working theories, the stolid patience with which they have developed and put into practice theories of navigation, the German has developed his theories of the oriental mind and character, and bases his treatment upon it.

In a word, that theory is that the only two things which the oriental mind understands are a plain demand and overwhelming force. The German does not believe that the Chinaman is grateful for special favors shown him. The German theory is that the strong hand is the only thing an Asiatic respects. Therefore, everywhere the German bayonet, everywhere the German uniform, and everywhere German ships of war; and now there is the beginning of another "everywhere," and that "everywhere" is German barracks.

How does all this affect German trade? Alongside of the military phenomenon just noticed is a growth of German trade in the East quite unequaled in its rapidity. In Hongkong the most active and with one exception the largest commercial houses are German. In Shanghai there are 31 German firms, some of which, like Arnhold, Karberg & Co. and Carlowitz & Co., are immense establishments with branches at every treaty port.

Though the report and returns of trade issued by the China imperial maritime customs show the great bulk of trade at this central port to be still English, there is nevertheless a falling off of English and a rapid advance of German importation.

"But does not this constant military menace of Germany interfere with her trade? Does it not anger the Chinaman? Is it not natural that this people should buy of those they like rather than of those they hate?" were questions asked of the leading American merchant in China and one of the best-informed men in the Empire. "Naturally one would think so," he replied, "but it is not true. Chinamen come to us and abuse the German with words, but go to him and buy his goods. So far from decreasing German trade, this military reputation which they are working so hard for is the best advertisement they could have with Chinese customers."

There is a proposition pending here to this effect—not in this bill, for there have been 27 bills introduced in here—to make a four or five line bill just simply extending the present law. I will give you as good a reason as you ever heard why that should not be done and why it will not accomplish anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK. I believe I will take ten or fifteen minutes more, Mr. Chairman, and I will get through.

Mr. HITT. I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed until he has concluded. After he is done I trust we can make an arrangement as to time and not take the rules of the House, but some agreement to divide the time and have it allotted.

Mr. CLARK. Yes, we will do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri have the opportunity to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK. In order that you may understand that proposition I will state the facts as briefly as possible. The first treaty we had with China was in 1844, negotiated by Caleb Cushing, a great man. That simply provided for commercial relations. Then in 1858 there was another treaty extending that. Then in 1868 Anson Burlingame turned up here at the head of the Chinese embassy, as the first ever sent here—having resigned his position as United States minister there to accept that curious position—and negotiated the Seward treaty of 1868, in which we guaranteed unlimited Chinese immigration into this country. They came, and they came in such numbers that they scared the people of the Pacific coast to death, or nearly so, and they commenced a great clamor, and in 1888 another treaty was negotiated with the Chinese excluding the Chinese, bless your heart, and the Chinese dilly-dallied around about ratifying the treaty, and Congress went to work, thinking they were going to ratify the treaty, and passed the bill of 1888—in fact, there were two or three of them—that was extremely severe in its provisions.

Now, remember that, and lo and behold, the Chinese refused to ratify that treaty. Then in 1892 Congress passed another severe law and in 1893 amended it, and the Geary Act simply continues the act of 1888. That is, most of the Geary Act is simply the old act of 1888 continued. Then, in 1894, the present treaty was made, in which the Chinese say that they are anxious to keep the cooly from coming to the United States; they are anxious, so they have got no right to kick.

The treaty of 1894 continues until 1914, on the 8th of December, unless one country or the other gives the other six months' notice prior to the 8th of December, 1904, that it is coming to an end; so the longest that treaty is certain to run is the 8th of December, 1914, and the law expires on the 5th of May, 1902. Now, the representatives of these great trading concerns say, "We want to keep these coolies out; we are just as anxious to as you are."

Their attorneys declared before the Senate committee that they stand on identically the same platform as Mr. Gompers, the president of the American Federation of Labor, who really wants to keep the coolies out; but they simply want to keep them out by a five-line law, extending the law as it now is. That would seem fair on its face, would it not? At the very same time, however, they have three suits pending in the Supreme Court of the United States attacking the validity of the law of 1888, and it is the supposition of most people that it will go by the board, and here is the predicament you will be in if you do not pass the majority bill or the minority substitute. That is, you will go through the performance of continuing the laws that are in existence, and the Supreme Court will declare them all bad, and in three weeks they will import 100,000 Chinese coolies, and there you are.

Now, one of two things will happen. If they ever get here in large numbers they will drive the American laborers out, or the American laborers will kill them, mob them—one or the other. I believe that is all I want to say about the bill, except this: I asked Governor Taft how the Chinese in the Philippine Islands felt about this country. He said that they regarded it as heaven. What will be the effect? Why, if the Supreme Court ever decides those people can come over here, every Chinaman over there will head for the United States. They want to go to heaven, of course. [Laughter.] Nobody wants to go to hell.

I have named the principal things. I have not named all of them; I could not in an hour or five hours. This bill is no longer than all of the statutes on the Chinese subject that are supposed to be enforced now would be if they were all put together. Now, I know there are some people who want them in here. For instance, the Hawaiian sugar kings say, yes, they want them in Hawaii. They say that the white men can not work out there; that the negroes will not work and they must have the Chinese. That is what they say.

The Manila Board of Trade has sent a memorial here. They want the coolies let in over there. Of course they do. I have not a particle of doubt that a company that had a hundred thousand dollars or a million dollars or more that would operate in the Philippines and exploit the Philippines could make more money with Chinese coolies than with anybody else. But the Filipinos do not want them in the Philippine Islands. Why? Because they go to the wall in this Chinese competition.

I am teetotally opposed to anybody coming here that you can not make an American citizen out of, and the Chinese will not assimilate with white people—that is, it is a very poor assimilation and a very rare one. The evidence in the case shows, strange as it may seem, that the cross between the Chinese and the white race or the Chinese and the negro is inferior either to the white man, the Chinaman, or the negro. Why, they never had any law in California even against Chinamen marrying white persons until within the last few years. It was a recent enactment.

Mr. KAHN. The last legislature.

Mr. CLARK. And notwithstanding that they very rarely married. Now, there is a distinguished Senator who has a proposition pending that Christian Chinese shall be admitted into this country free. Why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I undertake to say that that is the most marvelous wholesale proposition for conversion to Christianity that has been made in this world since St. Paul started out on his great missionary tour. [Laughter.] If that proposition was to be accepted, every Chinese cooly who appeared at our ports would be a full-fledged Christian. Why, the Philippine Commission said that the Spaniards got tired of the Chinese once in the Philippine Islands, ran amuck on them and killed about 30,000 of them. Then they softened down the regulation and declared that Christian Chinese should be permitted to stay in the Philippine Islands. The result of it was, as the veracious chronicler says, that when the day of deportation came a very large majority of them had already embraced Christianity, and nearly all the rest were seriously considering the mysteries of the faith. [Laughter.]

I know that the provisions of this bill seem cruel. I understand perfectly well that they seem to run counter to everything that we have ever advocated or ever offered to the world; but, in my judgment, they are absolutely necessary to secure the desired end.

THE AMERICAN LABORER.

The policy of Chinese exclusion is bottomed on the instinct of self-preservation—the supreme law of nature. It is not a mere demagogical scheme to win votes for any party or for any man. It is a philosophical and patriotic movement, growing out of facts which can be neither denied, blinked, obscured, or shunted out of the way. It not only goes to the root of our institutions, but it lays hold of the foundations of Caucasian civilization on this continent.

It is largely a racial question, and it raises the paramount issue, "Shall the white man continue to dominate the Western Hemisphere, or shall he be placed in the process of ultimate extinction and be supplanted by the yellow man?" It is utterly futile to vaunt our superiority and vaingloriously assert that in free competition with the Chinese in any field of physical endeavor we shall triumph, for it is not true. Governor Taft, our great pro-consul in the Philippines, testified that a Chinese can live on 2 cents a day—not only live, but flourish like a tree planted by the rivers of water. A cloud of witnesses support the governor-general in that mystifying statement—so mystifying and so variant from our experience in living that I endeavored to ascertain how that seeming miracle can be wrought. The only answer I elicited was that a Chinese can live on 2 cents per diem because of centuries of enforced practice in the difficult art of curtailing his diet to the minimum.

By reason of both constitutional characteristics and of ancient habit an American can not compete with a Chinese in cheapness of living, even if he so desired; and in the fierce fight in the arena of labor, constantly growing fiercer as our population multiplies, for the right to live, the infinitesimal cost at which a Chinese can exist will inevitably give him the victory over the white man. The starvation test would end in a survival of the unfittest. It is written: "The laborer is worthy of his hire." The American laborer is the foundation of the Republic and of our civilization—the highest civilization the world has known since the primal curse was placed upon man: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

The American laborer produces the wealth of this country, a wealth that is too vast to be comprehended by the mathematical powers of the human mind, a wealth so stupendous that it eclipses the wondrous tale of Alroy or any story out of the Arabian Nights. We all take pride in the fact that American laborers are the most intelligent, the most skillful, the best clothed, the best fed, the best housed, the most public-spirited, and the most ambitious laborers on the whole face of the earth. For one I am unalterably opposed to anything that will deprive them of a single comfort or that will in any manner reduce their standard of living or that will lower them in the scale of civilization even in the estimation of a hair. So far as in us lies, it is our duty to prevent Chinese competition with American laborers either by land or sea. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT. I will defer conferring with my friend for a moment, and ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], and we will arrange the matter of time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, a most important and far-reaching question has been submitted to the Fifty-seventh Congress for its consideration, Shall immigration be entirely excluded, or to what extent shall it be restricted? Two bills have been introduced, one of which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and the other to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Shattuc bill, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration, referred more particularly to migration from the countries in Europe to the Atlantic seaboard, while the bill that bears the name of the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] had to do with the restriction or entire prohibition of immigration from the Orient.

It has been my good fortune to sit for many weeks with both of these committees and to hear the testimony which has been presented for their consideration by what may be held, I suppose, to be the conflicting interests in this question. Before the Committee on Immigration, on the one side, appeared the representatives of labor, many of whom, extreme in their views, would carry to the point of exclusion immigration on the Atlantic seaboard; others desired an educational test. On the other hand, we had those who employ labor and the steamship lines contending that it would be cutting off an absolute necessity for the development of our country to inaugurate any restriction in regard to free immigration. After a great deal of consideration the bill has been reported to the House and will come before it in the future for its action. I can state that the committee, irrespective of its political affiliations, have exercised their patience and best judgment in reporting a bill which they believed to be for the best interests of the country.

I come now, sir, to the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, relating to immigration from the Orient. During the hearings on this subject we have heard some extreme views—those who wish to exclude entirely immigration from China and other countries in the East, and those who say the necessity for increased labor exists in California and in the rest of the country and have entered their protest thereto. On the one hand we have the representatives of the labor organizations, and those, of course, from the Pacific coast are more urgent in their protests than those in more remote sections, for they claim that they understand the evil better. On the other hand we have had resolutions from the boards of trade in California and Oregon, representing the business interests, and claiming that the demands of labor are excessive and too restrictive. We had representatives of the agricultural interests who entered their protest, claiming that at certain seasons of the year it was impossible to gather the crops, and they were allowed to perish because of the want of labor.

We have had the women in their various organizations protesting against exclusion, saying that the domestic problem was a serious one, and that they needed the immigration of Chinese in order to supply the necessary wants of the household in the way of service. This will give some idea of the difficult problems which appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs for solution. On one point, Mr. Chairman, we were united, and that was that the immigration of the lower class of Chinese laborers, commonly known as coolies, must be prohibited in the interest of the purity of the morals of our country and in the interest of American labor. The one difficulty that might have arisen before the Committee on Foreign Affairs would naturally be our relation to a foreign government. It would strike anyone at the first blush that to have our country pick out a single nation on the face of the earth and say to that particular nation that the inhabitants of your country shall not enter ours with the same freedom as is extended to the balance of the powers of the world would cause a feeling between the two countries that in some instances might be the cause of war.

But China, with a liberality which, I must say, reflects great credit on the intelligence of that people and its rulers, recognized the difficulty which our country labored under owing to the protests of our laboring class, and with a liberality that I may say is extraordinary under the circumstances, for it almost implied an inference in our mind against the character and morals of her people, negotiated a treaty with the United States in 1894, and in that instrument inserted and agreed to the following clause in article 1:

The high contracting parties agree that for a period of ten years, beginning with the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers to the United States shall be absolutely prohibited.

Mr. Chairman, I can dismiss the consideration of the main feature of this bill by saying that the committee was unanimous on that point, and the existing conditions were continued that Chinese laborers as such should absolutely be prohibited from coming to our shores. This left us to deal with the remaining classes in China, and here came a somewhat more difficult problem. Under the existing treaties the classes who were to have free access to our country had been classed as officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure.

This may seem very large in its scope, yet there were many classes that were not covered by it. Mr. Chairman, in the last few years of our country a great change has taken place in its geographical and economic conditions. With the acquisition of the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, and Guam, with the events that have taken place in the Empire of China, a new status has arisen. The entire civilized commercial world is now struggling to obtain the trade of China, whose doors have been opened under the different treaties for the trade and commerce of the world. It is essential with the economic conditions developed in this country that America should have its full share of this trade.

The whole effort of our State Department, which deals with our foreign affairs, has been directed in this direction, and I am glad to say, in spite of some of the caustic remarks recently made on the floor of this House attacking our Secretary of State, that his policy has been most eminently successful; that America has almost brought the world to her own terms in regard to China. Our status has developed so strongly by the recent events that America is more potent than ever in laying down the rules that shall exist in negotiations about to take place between the powers of the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the proposition presented itself to our committee that if we wish to preserve this good feeling with China, if we wish to secure our share of the vast trade with 400,000,000 of her people, we must be careful not to go too far in this bill and not to affront China in its provisions.

We have, therefore, in this bill guarded with every possible restriction that the laborer as such should be excluded. We have left open the door, so that the intelligent and educated people of China, whether they come here as teachers or merchants or the traveler for pleasure, shall have free access to our country, to learn its resources and investigate its inventions and carry back to their own people the reports of what we have to sell and what they should want to buy, for all the advertising and all the drummers and all the agents of commerce that we could send to China would not have one-fiftieth of the influence that a native going back would be able to spread in his own tongue, and inform those people of the state of advanced civilization here and of our products; and it is for that reason your committee felt it incumbent on them to allow free access to the intelligent commercial people of China, and at the same time throw such safeguards around their entry that our officials would be enabled to discriminate between the laboring class and those to which I have referred.

I will refer to one other general feature in this bill. Under the new conditions the further question had to be met than the one which faced us in the treaties of 1880 or 1894. The acquisition of our new possessions of the Philippines and Hawaii and Porto Rico raised what was to be the course of conduct of this Government toward our new possessions. The status of the Chinese in Hawaii had already been settled by the legislation which was enacted in regard to that island, but the Philippine question still confronted us. We took much testimony on the question, and it was finally determined that we would refuse migration of Chinese from that Empire to the Philippines, and, furthermore, we would restrict the migration of Chinese already in the Philippines to the mainland of the United States. These provisions have been carefully guarded, so their evasion would be most difficult.

Having considered some of the general features of the bill and the reasons which actuated your committee in framing it in the form in which it is, I will endeavor to answer some of the objections advanced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. The gentleman made an unfortunate comparison, in my judgment, and it seems almost impossible for those who come from the section which he has the honor to represent to avoid dragging in the social evil which they claim surrounds them on all hands, the negro question. And he proceeded to argue to this House that there was some relation or some comparison between the Chinese question as it stands to-day and the negro question as it exists in the South. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is no relation between these two questions. One is a domestic question. The negro was brought here against his will. How to deal with him is an economic question, and it must be met and settled among ourselves. It does not concern an evil which can be prevented, as does the measure involving the Chinese question. In the one case the evil is an accomplished fact; the other, I am thankful to say, involves an evil which it is in our power to avert. The negro question will have to be settled at home, here among ourselves, as best we can, amicably, consulting all interests, as fellow-countrymen who have the best interests of the whole country at heart. And, sir, the Chinese question must be settled on similar grounds in its relation to the future.

The gentleman from Missouri committed himself to the ultra view maintained here by the gentlemen from California and other Representatives of that section, because, as he held, the persons locally concerned are the best judges as to how an evil shall be dealt with. Mr. Chairman, in my view that is not a sound proposition. If there is an evil, the people locally suffering from it are not necessarily the best judges of the evil as affecting the whole country. There are sections where this evil does not reach at all. But in undertaking to restrict it in an undue degree to benefit persons locally interested we may do some great wrong to other sections of the country, wrong which would not be compensated by advantages which might be gained by certain localities.

I can illustrate this by an incident that happened to come under my personal observation. During the pendency of this bill it has been stated that the Chinese are bad sailors; that they are cowardly; that when there was a collision between the steamship Oceanic and the City of Chester there was great loss of life; that the Chinese sailors became utterly uncontrollable and refused to launch the boats; that discipline disappeared on board the Oceanic, and that from this fact resulted the loss of life, because the Chinese sailors on board the Oceanic would not launch the boats necessary to give help. Now, sir, it is a curious fact that within two or three days after that testimony was given before our committee I met, while traveling from my home in Philadelphia to this capital, a gentleman who in the course of conversation stated that he was himself a passenger on the Oceanic, that the Chinese sailors behaved with the greatest courage, and that discipline was maintained. As the best proof of this fact that gentleman stated that the boats were so promptly launched that when the City of Chester sank, which she did very quickly, her spars as she went down struck a boat that had already been launched from the Oceanic, and in that way all on board the boat were lost because it had been launched so quickly.

This incident shows that persons locally interested are not the best witnesses on questions of national importance. They are carried away by their views of the evil pressing upon them and they do not take into consideration the interests of the entire country.

The gentleman from Missouri, in referring to the clause of the bill which our committee has with great unanimity struck out—the clause prohibiting the employment of Chinese sailors on ships—made the argument that as the Philippine Islands belong to this country, the trade with those islands would be a part of our coastwise trade, and therefore it would not be necessary for vessels to take down the American flag to secure it. But as the gentleman gained more information he found that the benefits from the Philippine trade, under the act, as coastwise trade, could not be thus enjoyed till 1904.

But I can not refrain from calling attention to the inconsistency of the gentleman's position. If another bill were presented here relating to the Philippine Islands he would be the first to rise here and maintain the doctrine of his party that we must let go these islands and not allow them to become a part of the United States. In that case his arguments in reference to coastwise steamers would certainly disappear.

But the gentleman does not reach out far enough when he limits his arguments to the trade of the Philippines. We do wish to develop that trade; but there is a larger and greater trade beyond—the trade of China, the trade of Australia, the trade of the East Indies—that our country desires to secure. The steamers engaged in this trade will not be coastwise steamers; they will be steamers plying with foreign ports. They will be thrown into all the competition as to the wages of seamen and every other species of competition entering into the running of steamship lines.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri were most potent arguments in favor of a measure that has passed the Senate, and is, I hope, soon to come before this House for consideration—the ship-subsidy bill—for he has shown conclusively by his argument that it is impossible for American ships on the Pacific Ocean, as it has been proved impossible for American steamships on the Atlantic, to ply in competition with foreign vessels, because we do not want to crush our seamen down to taking the wages that it would be necessary for them to take in order to compete with the vessels that fly foreign flags. How can they compete, Mr. Chairman, in view of the testimony given by the representative of the sailors' association before our committee in regard to the rates of wages paid on the Pacific Ocean? I read from the testimony of Mr. Andrew Furuseth, who represents the association of sailors on the Pacific coast:

Sailors of Chinese blood may be had in Hongkong in practically unlimited numbers at $15 Mexican per month, and firemen or stokers at $18 Mexican. This means, respectively, $7.50 and $9 in gold. The wages which would be paid to sailors if they were hired on the Pacific coast would be at least $25 gold—more likely $30 gold—and to firemen $40 gold, being four times the amount paid to Chinese in Hongkong.

He further testified that they had swept the Japanese sailors off the seas, and the Malays and the others, and yet he comes to the American Congress and wants us to forbid the employment of these people for merchant marines, and says that we can compete, when they have driven all other sailors off. How can we do that, Mr. Chairman? We had testimony and information before our committee that it would drive every American flag off the ocean. We had information that four large steamers, which are proposed to be put upon the Pacific Ocean to ply in the trade with China, would never so be placed and would be run under a foreign flag. On the eastern coast we had testimony that a large six-masted schooner that had been built for trade in the Orient would never be sent around Cape Horn if this provision was left in the bill.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, your committee took into consideration that that question was beyond the scope of present legislation. Heartily in sympathy with the protection of our operatives on land, we determined to put into this measure the restrictions we have on the immigration of the Chinese. I will now come to the other point, which was the only class that the gentleman attacked in regard to the provision that has been laid down in restricting them from coming into this country, and that was the term "teacher." He showed the high state of general education in China, that everyone was compelled to go to school, and therefore it was likely that these people would come into this country in the form of teachers. Why, sir, in the interrogatory I put to him he involved the institutions of our country in bad faith, if they would enter into collusion for the migration of these people. He did not read the entire paragraph. His argument was specious. I will read it for the information of the House:

SEC. 6. That the term "teacher," as used in this act, shall be construed to mean one who, for not less than two years next preceding his application for entry into the United States, has been continuously engaged in teaching and who proves to the satisfaction of the appropriate officer that he has completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States and intends to pursue no other occupation while in the United States.

The two conditions that the gentleman from Missouri omitted were, one, that he should prove to the satisfaction of the United States officer his intent, and the other, that he must prove that he was going to continue in the occupation of a teacher in this country. Why, Mr. Chairman, the compliance with the requirements of this act would make it simply impossible for anybody to evade it, and the Chinese who come here with honest intentions to teach in this country and to learn, if necessary, and to understand our institutions and to carry the information back should be admitted, in my judgment, as freely as possible. The gentleman from Missouri is much more expansive in his statements than he is in his ideas of expanding our country. With the greatest solemnity he announced that there were a million and a quarter of Chinese in the Philippine Islands, when if he were present the day that Governor Taft appeared before our committee, he would have heard his reply to that question put to him that there were about 150,000 Chinese in the Philippine Islands and 250,000 at the outside.

Mr. CLARK. If the gentleman will permit me, here is what I said: That the number of Chinese of the whole blood and of the mixed blood, according to the evidence before the committee, ranged from about 200,000 to a million and three-quarters. Mr. Livernash said there were about a million and a half in the whole gang.

Mr. ADAMS. I will take the statement of Governor Taft as against that of Mr. Livernash; for, if anybody heard his argument, he knows he is an extremist, and, representing the local people I have already referred to, he would be extreme in his statements.

Mr. CLARK. The statements of those two gentlemen do not conflict much. Governor Taft evidently was confining himself to the full blood and Mr. Livernash to the mixed blood.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that we did not carry our definition of Chinese down to the same fine point that he does his of the negro. He will trace it down to the thirty-third generation.

Mr. CLARK. That is what Booker Washington says.

Mr. ADAMS. That is all right. I am not quoting him; I am quoting you.

Mr. CLARK. Well, I am quoting him.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, you are quoting a very good man; but I am only saying that that does not hold good, for in this country where would you place the men who have mixtures of blood in their veins, men who make our people what they are. Take the fourth generation of the German and the fifth generation of the Irish, and where are you going to put them?

Mr. CLARK. They are all white and they all become Americans.

Mr. ADAMS. Where are you going to put them?

Mr. CLARK. Right along with us.

Mr. ADAMS. Is he of German descent or Irish?

Mr. CLARK. Why, no; they are Americans.

Mr. ADAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, in further reply to the section of this bill which prohibits the employment of Chinese on the Pacific Ocean, I have given the facts that appeared before our committee, that it would practically drive our commerce off the Pacific. I can not help stating here—my interest is so deep in the subject—that the provisions of the ship subsidy bill as it now stands would cover this, for it insists on an employment of a certain proportion—one-third at the beginning—of native or naturalized Americans, and increasing as time goes on; but the great question involved in this bill, and why our committee have made it as stringent as in our judgment it is safe to go, is to refer once again to the conditions under which we must develop our trade in the Orient.

It is absolutely essential that we keep the good will of China in that respect. It is absolutely essential that we have their merchants coming to our country to report on what we have to deliver to them for sale, and in the exchange of commodities. The bill is framed in the broad, liberal spirit which should dominate our country. We have already discriminated against China, keeping out the coolies, which I admit is necessary, and we are all together in that; but I protest against any over-strict regulations which would stop all intercourse between the educated of both countries. It is not in keeping with our American civilization, it is not in keeping with the views of the American people. We believe in the exchange of ideas.

China was civilized for centuries while we were wandering Huns and Goths in the forests of Europe and wild men on the heather of Scotland and Ireland. I believe China can teach us much out of her past history and much of her great sciences that were known to her before we were ever heard of. I want intercourse between the two countries. I want that development between the Orient and the rapidly growing West which will tend to the advancement of the world and to the benefit of mankind at large; and I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this bill as it has been framed by our committee is liberal in that direction, and I believe it will meet the consensus of opinion and the best judgment of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, it may be assumed that the committee, in stating that they were all agreed that Chinese laborers should be excluded from the United States, voiced the sentiment of almost all the people of the United States. The members from the Pacific coast, Senators and Representatives, met frequently after this Congress was convened and agreed upon the provisions of an exclusion bill.

It has been said that that measure was extremely stringent. Mr. Chairman, the people of the Pacific coast have had a large experience with this question. They did not always ask for stringent laws. Indeed, the early legislation upon this question was exceedingly mild, was exceedingly moderate; but the duplicity and the trickery of the Chinese themselves made it necessary from time to time to add new restrictions, to make new regulations in order that the cool laborer whom we were trying to keep out of the country should not be allowed to land upon our shores.

It may not be amiss at this time to state briefly the history of Chinese-exclusion legislation. The first act upon the subject passed Congress in 1879. Its purport was to limit the number of Chinese that each vessel could bring to any port of the United States.

At that period in the history of California, the cool class was arriving through the Golden Gate by the thousands every month. They had driven out the white skilled mechanic in the manufacture of shoes, cigars, brooms, underclothing, and overalls. They were making steady inroads in the field, the farm, the factory, and the workshop, and alarmed at the unrestricted immigration of this people, who, as a result of forty centuries of privation, had learned to support life upon the smallest quantity of food, whose creature comforts were few, who knew none of the blessings of home life, and who had a reserve population of 400,000,000 of equally undesirable elements to draw upon, caused the people of the Pacific coast to raise a cry of alarm which Congress did not fail to hear. The President, however, believing that the proposed legislation was in violation of treaty obligations, vetoed the bill, but forthwith appointed a commission to negotiate a new treaty that would give our Government the power to regulate Chinese immigration.

The Commission negotiated two treaties—one to regulate commerce, the other to regulate the immigration of laborers. These treaties were ratified on November 17, 1880, and in consonance with the provisions of the latter treaty Congress passed an act to suspend for the period of twenty years the further immigration of Chinese laborers. President Arthur vetoed this bill on account of the twenty-year limitation, but on May 6, 1882, an act was approved that for a period of ten years suspended the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States. The people of the Pacific coast States hailed this legislation with delight and believed that the flood of Chinese immigration had been effectually stopped.

Within a year it was discovered that the act of May 6, 1882, was seriously defective, and so Congress enacted a law amendatory thereof on July 5, 1884. By the provisions of these laws any Chinese laborer who had been in the United States prior to the enactment of the law of 1882 was permitted to return to this country. This provision gave rise to no end of fraud. By a decision of our courts it was held that parol evidence was sufficient to establish the prior residence of a Chinese laborer in this country.

With a supreme contempt for our judicial system and with a duplicity that is almost unparalleled among the nations of the earth, hordes of Chinese laborers did not hesitate to swear themselves into the country as former residents, and the acts of Congress, which the people of the Pacific coast had hailed with joy and expectancy, were soon found to have turned out "Dead Sea fruit." The invasion of the cool laborer was not arrested. He migrated to our shores in practically undiminished numbers. The suspension of immigration was found to be no remedy for the evil, and so the Administration at that time negotiated a new treaty with China, which was intended to give our Government the right to absolutely prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States for a limited period.

Believing that this treaty would be ratified by China, Congress passed an act, approved September 13, 1888, which was to go into effect upon the ratification of the said treaty, and shortly after, on October 1, 1888, the so-called Scott Act, which was intended to cure many of the defects of earlier legislation and which was supplementary thereto, became the law of the land.

But the treaty upon which the law of September 13, 1888, was predicated was never ratified by China, and there has always been a contention among able lawyers as to whether that act went into effect, notwithstanding the nonratification of the treaty. This act of September 13 is one of the great bulwarks of the existing exclusion laws. It is given force, however, simply by the decision of the Solicitor of the Treasury, who has held that all of the act, from section 5 to section 14, inclusive, with the exception of section 12, went into effect, notwithstanding that the treaty upon which it was based failed of ratification. At the present time, as my friend from Missouri has said, there is a case pending in the Supreme Court of the United States which tests the validity of this act of September 13, 1888, and should the Supreme Court decide adversely to the Government we would be left with practically no exclusion laws, except the totally ineffective suspension laws of 1882 and 1884, for the Attorney-General has held that the Scott Act, of October 1, 1888, was repealed by the treaty of 1894.

In 1892, the period of the first suspension law being about to expire, Congress enacted the so-called Geary law. Its first paragraph continued all the laws then in force prohibiting and regulating the coming into this country of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent for a further period of ten years. The rest of the Geary law provides for the registration of all Chinese in the United States and the issuing to them of certificates of residence. In case they failed to register, they were to be deported to the country of which they were subjects or citizens.

The Chinese in this country fought the registration provisions of the Geary law in the courts, but finally the Supreme Court sustained its constitutionality. In the meantime, the Chinese, with few exceptions, had refused to register, and the limitations fixed by the Geary law upon the period within which they were allowed to register had expired. In order that there should be no hardship imposed upon the Chinese who were then in the country, and who had failed to comply with our laws—and I do not doubt but that they were acting under legal advice that had been given them in all good faith—Congress passed the act of November 3, 1893, which was intended to give all Chinese laborers who were in the United States at that time six months further time within which to register.

It also defined the words "laborer or laborers" and the term "merchant." There had been a great deal of litigation in our courts to secure a judicial determination of what was meant by laborer and what constituted a merchant under the provisions of our exclusion laws. It also provided that the certificate of registration should contain the photograph of the applicant, and this provision has certainly done much to break up the fraud that had been practiced under the provisions of the earlier enactments.

After the Supreme Court had sustained our right to register Chinese laborers in this country, the Chinese Government negotiated a new treaty with our Government in March, 1894, acknowledging our right to absolutely prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States except under the conditions specified in that treaty. It was promulgated December 8, 1894. Under Article III thereof, Chinese subjects being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, were continued in their right of coming to the United States and residing therein. In recent years the frauds that have been attempted and that have been committed in the matter of bringing Chinese laborers into this country have been practiced principally under the exemptions of these privileged classes.

At the beginning of my address I stated that the Chinese, as a race, are known for their duplicity, and that this duplicity has compelled us to safeguard, as far as possible, every possible loophole in our exclusion laws. This characteristic permeates every grade of society. The Emperor is no more exempt from it than the cooly. Indeed, there are numerous instances in Chinese history where the Emperor deliberately tricked the representatives of foreign governments and practiced deceit upon his own people without hesitation or compunction. As early as 1796 the British Government sent an embassy, under Lord Macartney, to the Emperor Chien Lung. This potentate, with a great deal of flourish and ostentation, graciously condescended to receive the English lord. But in order that the Chinese people might be deceived as to the true intent of the embassy Chien Lung had a flag raised upon Lord Macartney's vessel which bore upon it the inscription, "Tribute bearer from the country of England."

Again, in June, 1873, the world was cheered with the intelligence that the Emperor Tung Chih had finally consented to receive the foreign ministers at Peking in audience. The whole civilized world regarded this act as a great triumph for occidental firmness and diplomacy. But after the audience was over the joy turned to chagrin, for it was discovered that the ministers of the great powers of the world, including the American minister, Hon. Frederick F. Low (I believe he came from California), had been received by the Emperor in the "Pavilion of Purple Light," where his majesty invariably gave audience to the envoys of "tributary states." This was doubtless done to deceive the common people of the Celestial Empire.

The same thing occurred under the present Emperor, Kwong Sui, in 1891, but after this second audience the diplomatic corps firmly denounced this act of duplicity by passing resolutions that they would forego the ceremony rather than again submit to the indignity. I could give many similar cases of official duplicity, but I merely cite these instances to show that even the highest in authority are guilty of the same trickery that we find among the common people.

It has been maintained that the attitude of our Government is exceedingly severe in the matter of Chinese exclusion; that our laws have been becoming more and more stringent and drastic; but I submit that if the Chinese people themselves would deal honestly with us, and if they resorted less to trickery and duplicity to circumvent our laws, there would be no need of closing up all possible loopholes in the law with the seemingly severely restrictive measures that the Chinese themselves make necessary.

I have already stated how they perjured themselves under the acts of 1882 and 1894 by swearing that they were laborers in the United States prior to the passage of the former act, and that therefore they had the right to return. Thousands of them who had never been in the United States before managed to gain ingress into the country by this system of perjury. They have invented all kinds of "coaching papers," which are sent to China from this country in the form of questions and answers so as to enable the prospective Chinese immigrant to evade the questioning and cross-examining of the inspectors at our various ports of entry. And in a few instances they have been caught smuggling written information and instructions in shrimp patés and other articles of food to some tricky cooly on board of a newly arrived ship, so as to permit him to baffle the efforts of our inspectors in his desperate endeavor to effect an entrance into the United States.

Thousands of alleged natives have crossed our borders in New York and Vermont alone, and I desire to quote from the report of Ralph Izard, a Chinese inspector in the Bureau of Immigration, made to the Commissioner General of Immigration on November 26, 1901, in which he shows a condition of affairs that speaks more eloquently than words of the thorough recklessness with which Chinese perjure themselves.

Mr. Izard says:

Since the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Wong Kim Ark case, in which it was held that all Chinese persons born within the United States of Chinese parents, regardless of the status of these parents, were entitled to full citizenship in this country, it is safe to say that at least 5,000 Chinese have been admitted through the United States courts in the States of New York and Vermont as native-born citizens of this country, upon the perjured testimony of pretended fathers and other relatives.

While it is well known that during the period of their alleged birth in San Francisco, namely, from 1875 to, say, 1882, there were no more than a few hundred Chinese women in San Francisco; that at this time they were being admitted with more and more freedom; that practically none returned to China during the period above named; that there is little question but that at least 80 per cent of such as were admitted were brought from China and sold for the purpose of prostitution; yet the invariable testimony of the witnesses for the defendants is to the effect that at the age of 5 to 8 years the defendant returned to China with his mother and both remained there.

The records of the commissioners' courts in northern New York and Vermont alone, according to sworn testimony of witnesses for alleged native-born Chinese, would require the annual departure from San Francisco, extending over a period of seven years, of twice as many Chinese women, including prostitutes, as ever dwelt in that city, and each one accompanied by from one to two healthy boys.

Now, that was in the matter of natives alone. But they have tried to bring into the country, under the guise of merchants, students, teachers, persons traveling for curiosity or pleasure, a great many cooly laborers.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does the gentleman refer to the Chinese Government?

Mr. KAHN. No; I exonerate the Chinese Government. I do not think they have any knowledge of this business. But our Immigration Bureau, by a system of rigorous investigations and examinations, eventually broke up the scheme of evasion by the so-called natives, and consequently new schemes were resorted to in order to circumvent the laws. The loopholes offered through the channels of existing law and regulations, so far as officials, teachers, students, and persons traveling for curiosity or pleasure are concerned, were soon closed up, but not before an effort had been made by interested parties to smuggle laborers into the country under the guise of each one of these privileged classes. The result of these efforts to circumvent the law was the promulgation by the Treasury Department of regulations defining in clear and unmistakable terms the status of these privileged classes. These definitions have had the desired effect, and to-day a bona fide Chinese official, teacher, student, or person traveling for curiosity or pleasure has little difficulty in establishing his right of admission into our country. The present bill undertakes to give the Treasury regulations defining the status of the privileged classes the full force and effect of enacted law. These are some of the sections of the bill which are denominated "drastic." Yes; they may be "drastic" to the unscrupulous evader of the law. They may be "drastic" to the men who desire to see our exclusion laws abrogated, but they have not been found "drastic" by the good-faith Chinese, who has endeavored to come into this country by reason of his bona fide status as one of the privileged classes.

But perhaps the most prolific source of fraud has been in the matter of Chinese laborers who endeavor to masquerade as merchants. Under existing law a Chinese merchant can come to this country, provided that he can produce a certificate from his Government or the government where he last resided, viséed by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence he departs. I think I can safely say that 90 per cent of the cases that are refused admission into this country are those of so-called merchants.

The term "merchant" as applied to Chinese has an entirely different meaning from what we consider the term to mean, and it is this ignorance of the so-called Chinese merchant class that makes many of our countrymen believe that our exclusion policy should be liberalized so far as this particular class is concerned. Many of the merchants of that race in this country came here as coolies. After having saved a little money they open a little shop and thereafter are classed as merchants. A number of such laborers will frequently put their joint earnings into a common fund and then each man becomes a partner in the concern, his interest being equivalent to the amount that his investment bears to the capital of the partnership. We of the Pacific coast, who know the Chinese better, perhaps, than our Eastern brethren, do not regard all of this class with the same reverence that they do.

It is this so-called merchant class that is largely responsible for the commission of most of the crimes committed by the Chinese in this country. It is they who import Chinese girls into this country for immoral purposes. It is they who hire highbinders and murderers to assassinate their business and personal enemies. It is they who own the gambling houses and the lottery joints. It is they who are the owners of opium dens and whose money is invested in houses of ill fame. Of course I do not intend to say that all Chinese merchants are of this class, but I do say, and I challenge contradiction, that a large number of Chinese merchants in this country are guilty of the things that I have mentioned.

The Rev. Ira M. Condit, D. D., who has been engaged in Chinese mission work for many years, in his recent work entitled "The Chinaman as We See Him," says of the traffic in Chinese women:

In Canton, Hongkong, and Macao are houses used for the sole purpose of training up young, innocent girls for a life of shame. None are too young to be secured, as they can be kept in these nurseries of hell until they are old enough to be sent out to their vile life.

There are different ways of procuring young victims. Many agents make this their sole business. They find parents who are so poor as to be willing to sell their daughters for a trifle; or who, to secure money for the vice of gambling or opium smoking, are willing to sell their girls to these traffickers in the flesh of innocent little girls. When the supply is scarce there are gangs of kidnappers who steal or inveigle young girls from their homes. In these ways a large supply is kept constantly on hand across the waters.

On this side there are agents whose only business is negotiating with parties in Hongkong to import these victims to our country. They are made willing to come by the promise that in this land of gold are wealthy merchants who want them for wives. Written statements are sent over for these girls to commit to memory and repeat, when questioned by officials on this side, such as they are coming to join their father or brother or relative of some sort. Since the passage of the exclusion law the only plea on which they can land is that of being American born. Hence fathers, brothers, uncles, and cousins are trained to play their part in testifying that the girl was born here and sent back when small. Highbinders generally act this part for a certain percentage on each one successfully landed. * * *

* * * It is known that a girl costing from $100 to $200 in China is worth here from $1,000 to $3,000. Since the enforcement of the restriction law, and the consequent greater difficulty in landing them, the market value of these girls has greatly increased. When they are safely landed, if not previously disposed of, they are decked out in gorgeous silk clothing, with gaudy jewels and highly-painted faces, and placed on exhibition for purchasers to see. When sold they are passed over to their reputed "husbands" to find themselves only brothel slaves. * * *

There is a class of little girls brought over who are held in families as servants. Few Chinese homes are to be found without having in them one of these bond slaves. They are compelled to do the drudgery of the household. Often they are well treated, as it is the intention of the owners to sell them as wives when they become older; and they are in this way a valuable piece of property. But oftener they are intended for a disreputable life, and are treated in a most cruel manner. Some of them who have escaped to the home have shown marks of the most brutal treatment. They are beaten, dragged by the hair, burned with hot irons, and scalded with boiling water. * * *

"The slaveholders do not easily give up their prey. Writs of habeas corpus are generally resorted to, and our American laws used to permit the return of escaped slaves into the dens of Chinatown. The arrest of girls and the attempt to get them out of the hands of those who are seeking to save them is done by villainous highbinders." * * *

The Chinese laborers are not identified with these transactions. They have not the means at their command. They can not afford to hire highbinders. They have no families. It is only the merchants who are so situated. The bond slaves that the reverend gentleman speaks of are servants of the merchant class; but if this were not sufficient evidence to prove that it is this merchant class that is guilty of these outrages, I submit the translation of a circular which was posted throughout the walls of Chinatown on the 4th of February, 1901. The translation was made by John Endicott Gardner, United States Chinese inspector and interpreter at San Francisco.

NOTICE OF SALE.

The stock in trade and good will of a house of prostitution for sale. Madame Law Wong Tsut, of this city, secretly escaped and returned to China on the 14th day of the present month, leaving behind the business, stock in trade of the house of prostitution on Sullivan Alley. Madame Law Wong Tsut owed a lot of money on goods advanced to her by people of wealth. The creditors have agreed to take the whole business and sell it to pay her debts. Any countryman wishing the business, let him go to the house of prostitution and talk to the creditors. As to the amounts owed by Madame Law Wong Tsut, they will be reported by the 20th of the month. Bills will be presented up to that time and not after. This notice is given so that there may be no after talk.

Dated Kwong Sui, 26th year, 14th day, last month (February 4, 1901).
 "The expression 'stock in trade' means the slave girls kept as prostitutes. The idea the Chinese would take out of that expression is that these girls would be auctioned off and nothing else. Note by translator."

I have in my possession here a solar-print copy of the original document in the Chinese language.

This, if you please, is the merchant class of whom we hear so much. These are the people whom it is desired to let in with a greater ease.

Referring to the highbinders of San Francisco the Rev. Dr. Condit has this to say:

On this coast there are many highbinder societies. Some are branches of the Chee Kung Tong, and are organized for special kinds of work; but many of them are rival tongs. Some are especially connected with the gambling interests, some are organized to protect the brothels, and some for the importation and traffic in women.

In case a woman seeks to escape from her life of slavery, as often occurs, the most common way of dealing with her is for a highbinder to swear out a charge of grand larceny against her, and she is cast into prison by the officers of the law. This puts her into the power of her owner, and if she returns, as she often finds it best to do, he lets the case of larceny go by default. But if she can get to the Refuge Home the missionaries can generally protect her from those who would drag her back to infamy. Woe, however, be to the Chinaman who helped her to escape if he is found out! * * *

eration, to undertake the task. In secret conclave they deliberate over the case of one who has offended them, and select the agent who is to make away with him. He gets a round sum for the job. If arrested, they agree to clear him in the courts; if he is imprisoned or killed, a goodly amount is given to his family. Few Chinamen have the courage to stand against the fiat of this dark tribunal, and they all fear its power much more than they do our own courts of justice. They have different ways of dealing with those who have incurred their enmity. If it is not deemed prudent to assassinate them, charges are made out against them in our courts by means of false witnesses. A complete chain of evidence is forged by which many an innocent man is condemned. It is not only difficult to clear one against whom the highbinders have laid charges, but it is equally difficult to convict one whom they have undertaken to defend.

Many are laid under tribute to their blackmailing schemes. Their victims generally find it wiser to submit to their demands than to offer resistance and be ruined in their business, or lose their employment, if not their lives. The revenue of these hatchet societies is very large, hence they never lack for money to carry on their nefarious work. Money and cunning seldom fail to thwart the ends of justice and accomplish what they undertake.

The highbinders have their regular band of paid fighters, who wear chained armor, carry revolvers, knives, and other kinds of concealed weapons. Nearly all the shooting affairs in the Chinese quarters of San Francisco and other towns may be laid to their charge. The street battles which so often occur are brought about by a contest between rival tongs. Perhaps there has been some slave girl stolen, who was under the protection of some other society, or blackmail is levied by a rival tong, or in some way the rights of others are encroached on and a deadly contest arises, which nothing but blood can wipe out.

These hired assassins are not employed by laborers. The poor laborer, working for a pittance, has no need for these scoundrels. It is the well-to-do merchant class, if you please, that alone can afford the luxury of hiring an assassin to put a rival to death.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Are the laws of California powerless in such cases?

Mr. KAHN. The laws of California are not powerless; and I am glad the gentleman has referred to the matter. The laws of California are ample; but I stated at the very inception of my argument that these people go into the courts and swear to almost anything. It is very difficult to get a conviction on the charge of perjury. So cleverly do they plot and execute their crimes that during the year 1901 there were committed in Chinatown, San Francisco, a part of my Congressional district, 17 murders, and not in a single instance was the assassin apprehended.

Let me tell you just what that would mean if that same ratio of capital crime were committed in other parts of the United States. I will give it to you in the exact figures. The urban population of the United States in 1900 was 35,849,516 persons. If that same ratio of murder had existed in the various urban settlements of the United States it would have aggregated the startling total of 23,664 homicides. You ask me if the laws of California are not able to reach these people. Yes, they are; they are adequate, but the Chinese works in the dark in many ways.

For ways that are dark
 And for tricks that are vain
 The heathen Chinese is peculiar,
 Which the same I shall always maintain.

[Laughter and applause.]

It is this merchant class also that has been most indefatigable in its efforts to break down our exclusion laws. To the average Chinaman a Government official is the embodiment of venality and corruption. All travelers in China admit that the Chinese official class are corrupt and dishonest. Reinsch, in his World Politics, says:

It is accepted calmly and as a matter of fact that those in office should provide for themselves and their relatives, while every group of relatives hopes in time to be made happy by the preferment of one or more of its members.

The inspectors at San Francisco have repeatedly told me of efforts made to bribe officials, and when the corrupt offers are spurned the wily Chinese begins to prefer charges against the inspector and does everything in his power to make his position a burden and a discomfort. I think I can safely say that nearly every inspector at San Francisco has been at various times under charges simply because he has endeavored to perform his duty faithfully and honestly.

But the most recent method employed to evade our exclusion laws was in the matter of Chinese laborers who desired the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States in the course of their journeys to or from other countries. Under the treaty of 1894 this privilege was to be continued to Chinese laborers, subject to such regulations by the Government of the United States as may be necessary to prevent said privilege of transit from being abused. It was recently discovered by the Treasury officials that large numbers of Chinese were being given this privilege of transit, and that subsequently they would leave the steamer upon which they had departed from the United States at the first Mexican port, and so would return overland across our border. It was only within the past year or two that this practice was unearthed. Since then our Treasury officials have made a strict investigation of every case, with the result that several hundred of these transit passengers have been returned to China.

The bill now under consideration seeks to enact into law necessary provisions for regulating these transit passengers. Under the existing treaty the Government of the United States may make such regulations as may be necessary to prevent the privilege of transit from being abused. Acting upon this provision of the treaty, the Treasury Department formulated and issued the necessary regulations; but it has been contended that the Treasury Department is not the "Government of the United States," and a case is now pending in the Supreme Court of this country to determine whether the Treasury Department has exceeded its authority in making the regulations that are now in force. If the contention that the Treasury Department had no such authority be correct, then all our existing regulations upon this subject will fall to the ground and this great loophole for fraud will be left unguarded. But I firmly believe that it is the desire of Congress to safeguard the interests of the laborers and mechanics of the United States, and I am satisfied that the sections incorporated in this bill to regulate the transit of Chinese laborers going to or coming from other countries will meet the hearty approval of the membership of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I am not unmindful of the sentiment that prevails in this country regarding the upbuilding of our trade with the Orient, and with China in particular. There is no disposition on my part to do anything to decrease or in any way hinder the development of our commerce with China, but I am free to admit that I think the possibilities of that trade have been greatly exaggerated.

It is true that for the time being and probably for some time to come our trade will increase with that country. It has constantly increased heretofore, notwithstanding the policy pursued by our Government in the matter of the exclusion of Chinese laborers. It has risen and fallen just as the trade with China of the other great commercial nations of the world has risen and fallen, the increase or decrease being invariably due to local conditions in China.

An effort has been made to lead the American people to believe that our exclusion legislation has at various times materially affected our commerce with the Celestial Empire, but an investigation of the facts will readily disclose that such statements are not based upon truth. For instance, in the year 1891 our trade was $8,701,008. In 1892, at which time the Geary law was enacted, it fell to $5,663,497, and then to $3,900,457 in 1893 (the year in which the Supreme Court declared the Geary law constitutional), and rose to $5,862,426 in 1894, after our latest treaty with China was ratified. An attempt has been made to draw from these facts and figures the inference that our trade relations with that country were influenced by our attitude in the matter of our exclusion policy. But let us examine China's trade with other countries:

In 1891 the United Kingdom did a trade with the Chinese Empire, exclusive of Hongkong (British) and Macao (Portugal) of £6,525,662. In 1892 this fell to £5,836,597; in 1893 to £4,699,336, and in 1894 to £4,363,536. And yet England passed no Geary law nor any other kind of an exclusion bill.

Again, France, which never passed an exclusion law, did a trade with China of 10,344,940 francs in 1891. This fell to 7,244,486 francs in 1892, and to 5,696,600 francs in 1893. In 1894 the trade suddenly rose to 19,971,563 francs. So that the experience of the French merchants, who lived in a country where the matter of an exclusion law had never even been suggested, found their trade fall and rise again, just as our trade has fallen and risen. All of these figures that I am quoting are from the Bureau of Statistics of our Treasury Department.

And so with Germany. In 1891 her trade with China was 33,280,000 marks. In 1892 it fell to 30,115,000 marks. In 1893 it rose to 33,443,000 marks, but in 1894 it fell back to 28,446,000 marks. And Germany has no exclusion laws. I am satisfied, however, from my intimate knowledge of German character, that if the interests of German mechanics and laborers were jeopardized by the threatened invasion of thousands of the pauper laborers from the Chinese Empire, it would not be long before the German Parliament would pass all needed legislation to afford the necessary protection to her own working classes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Do the Chinese go to those countries?

Mr. KAHN. They do not go to those countries. Those countries are not as accessible as the United States to the inhabitants of China.

It is universally conceded that commerce is not influenced by sentiment, and that commercial peoples purchase where they can buy to the best advantage. It has been admitted in the hearings on the exclusion bill before the Senate Committee on Immigration that China is no exception to this rule. Her trade with us at present is principally in the purchase of drills, jeans, sheetings, flour, raw cotton, machinery, and kerosene oil. Since the Japanese war China has made a remarkable progress in the development of her mines and the construction of railways. We have had a considerable portion of the trade developed by reason of the activity in those directions. We have succeeded also, for the time being, in supplanting, to a large extent, English manufactured cottons, especially in the northern provinces of China, by reason of the fact that we manufacture a heavier grade of goods, which are preferable in the cold climate of the north provinces.

The British consul at Nanchang reported to his Government in 1899:

That the Chinese prefer to go on buying the original brand of which they have had actual experience. The Chinese dealer will not change his usual purchases for new classes of goods, but as soon as equally good or even superior and cheaper goods are brought to his notice he will not hesitate to change his custom. It is perfectly immaterial to him whether the goods he deals in are manufactured in Great Britain or in the United States of America, and as a matter of fact I have asked native wholesale merchants here if they could tell me where the favorite sheetings and drills consumed in Manchuria are manufactured, and they have confessed their entire ignorance of the country of origin, stating at the same time that they merely indent for their purchases by the special brand or "chop." I am told that the proof of the superiority of the American goods is in the washing. When the English goods are washed and the heavy sizing removed, they are inferior to the American article when similarly treated.

But China herself is now manufacturing the cheaper grades of cotton goods, and no reasonable being can doubt that she is ultimately destined to retain her own market for the better qualities. Cotton mills have already been established at Shanghai, Ningpo, Wochung, Soochow, Hangchow, and several other ports. Consul-General Jernigan, in a report to our State Department, in discussing this question of Chinese competition in the great manufacturing industries of the world, says:

The influence of the cheap labor of Asia and its products upon future prices has become a subject of international importance, but the products of this labor in China in its competitive bearing upon the products of American labor is of more interest to us. The American laborer is very properly protected against the competition of the Chinese laborer on American soil, and such protection in no sense discredits the industry of the former; but whether the products of the Chinese laborer will seriously compete in American markets with the products of the American laborer is more the question of the hour. In this report I have indicated the belief that competition is not so much to be apprehended in our home markets as it is in the markets of China for our home products, and the plain facts would seem to justify the belief. There has been, and is now, a valuable demand in the markets of China for the products of British and American looms, but when the desired quality of cotton goods at present imported from Great Britain and the United States can be manufactured in China from the products of her soil, it is unreasonable to expect the importation from foreign countries to continue in such large quantities.

I recommend that to some of my friends from the New England manufacturing States and the Southern States—and when the products can be produced in necessary quantity on the soil of China and at a far cheaper price, as well as manufactured in China, also at a far cheaper price, it is no longer a question that cotton made and manufactured in China will supply the demand of Chinese for cotton goods. It will, and it therefore follows that the competition will first begin in the markets of China. The prices * * * paid a Chinese laborer are starvation prices to the American laborer, but the price of Chinese food is in proportion to the price of Chinese labor, and the money is received and the food eaten with contentment. Another consideration tending to cause this competition to be more energetic is that the machinery in the cotton mills of China is of the most improved pattern, and that quality as well as the quantity of the cotton goods will enter into the competition. It is certain that there can be produced in China a much superior grade of cotton to that now produced, and with improved machinery Chinese cotton mills will be able to supply the demand for a finer quality of cotton goods, as they are now supplying the demand for the more inferior quality.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The writer of that document does not say, does he, where that machinery is made?

Mr. KAHN. Much of it is now made in this country; but I want to call my friend's attention to this fact, that to-day in China, if you want a concession for anything there—for a railroad, for a mine, for a machine shop, for anything of that kind—there is invariably a provision inserted in the franchise that you must also open a school for the education of Chinese youth in the particular industry for which the concession is granted.

All writers agree that China has unlimited mineral resources. Her coal fields and her iron deposits will vie with those of the United States. I do not blame the Chinese for adopting this policy. I think it is farsighted; I think it is shrewd. But, sir, does any man who knows the character of that people—who, as Kipling says, "work and spread, pack close, and eat everything, and who can live on nothing"—that people "with a devil-born capacity for doing more work than they ought"—who will deny that when they have become proficient in the industries and professions which they are studying they will do their own developing without the aid or assistance of "foreign devils?"

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is the gentleman able to fix any time when that will be realized?

Mr. KAHN. I am free to admit that for the present we shall have our share of the market. I think our trade will continue to grow—I feel certain that it will grow—even if we pass the most drastic kind of a law. But I simply submit that in the near future—and we talk a great deal these days about "the awakening of China"—I submit that the very market toward which we are looking with so much pleasant anticipation will drop away from us; we shall awake some morning to find that it has gone; that the Chinaman has shrewdly secured it for himself; and as I have said I do not blame him for doing so.

Perhaps there is no people under the sun with the imitative ability and adaptability for all kinds of work and every condition of climate and environment of the Chinese race. They adapt themselves alike to the tropical heat of the Philippines and the icy cold of the Alaskan fisheries. They swarm in their own country by the millions. As I stated before, they have been injured to all kinds of privation for forty centuries. I again quote from the report of the consul-general at Shanghai as to the question of wages and prices in China:

* * * Human hands are all too plentiful and human life is cheap, so that it comes to pass that many skilled mechanics receive but 15 cents Mexican a day, while master workmen get 20 to 25 cents, and the common laborer saves himself from starving on 2 Mexican dollars a month. These wages must be cut almost in half for expression in United States money. Frequently there are wives and children to be supported, too; but in the poorest families these members frequently find employment in some of the minor industries, the women, perhaps, in the manufacture of shoe soles, the children in making paper money for offerings to the dead or, as in Shanghai, in the manufacture of match boxes, and so the slender earnings of the husband and father are eked out.

A gradual introduction of some Western industries—the building of railways and other improvements in communication, the opening of mines, and the development of the other resources of the Empire—will no doubt improve matters to some extent by giving a better market to the productions of China, by diverting labor from overcrowded channels to new enterprises, and by creating a greater demand for labor, which will somewhat improve the wages; but as things are at present we can not view with indifference the prospect of bringing the products of our own wage-earners into competition with these cheap toilers.

How the masses of China can live on the wages paid will appear from the following table, in which the present retail prices of some of the commoner articles are given in Mexican silver:

	Cents.		Cents.
Beef .....	per pound.. 8	Marrows .....	per pound.. 2
Pork .....	do..... 14	Onions .....	do..... 6
Fish .....	do..... 10	Rice .....	per picul.. 4
Eggs .....	per dozen.. 12	Bean oil .....	per catty.. 9
Cabbage .....	per pound.. 3	Peanut oil .....	do..... 10
Carrots .....	do..... 2	Flaxseed oil .....	do..... 14
Celery .....	per dozen.. 12	Bean curd .....	per cake.. 12

* Dollars.

♢ Mills.

NOTE.—One picul equals 33½ pounds; 1 catty equals 1½ pounds.

These are the published prices, but natives do not ordinarily pay as much as is here represented. These prices are somewhat higher than prevail outside of treaty ports, as the wages paid in Shanghai are also better than those received in the interior. The poorer families can not, of course, afford to eat meat often. Some will eat it twice a week; these are fortunate. Others count it a luxury to have meat once or twice a month. The vegetables are cooked in vegetable oil, so that even when there is no meat the food is savory and a certain amount of fat is obtained. Beans, too, are in a measure a substitute for meat. They are eaten in the form of bean curd, costing about 2 cash, or one-ninth of a cent in our currency, for a small cake that will suffice for one person at a meal. The poorest of families will live on 50 cash a piece per diem, which, at the present rate of exchange, is about 8 cents.

Under the guidance of Caucasian foremen these people can readily acquire the art of manufacturing fabrics by the most modern and improved machinery; and working as they do from sunrise to sunset practically the entire year for wages that would not support a 10-year boy in this country is there any doubt but that the fears expressed by our representatives in China, that the natives will ultimately absorb the greater part of the trade of the home market, are based upon substantial and logical conclusions?

But I am not content to rest my assertion upon this statement of an American consular officer alone. What do the representatives of other countries say in regard to this matter? Mr. F. S. A. Bourne, the head of a British commercial mission which traveled through central and southern China, observing and studying commercial conditions, in his report to the British Parliament, in May, 1898, said in part as follows:

The Chinese masses have always worn homespun cotton cloth for the most part, supplemented with imported drills and sheetings in the north and northwest, where it is cold and where domestic weaving is not common. The finer imported cottons, like sheetings, have been for the well-to-do only. About twenty-five years ago the import of foreign yarn—English and later Indian—led to the weaving of a cheaper cloth, which is displacing more and more native homespun. Before the war with Japan the Chinese were beginning to erect spinning mills, the enterprise being conducted in the half-hearted and incompetent way usual with them in large undertakings, and when, by the treaty of Shimonoseki (1895), foreigners obtained the long-coveted right to manufacture in China, four foreign-owned mills were put up in Shanghai, and others will follow. By the end of 1898 there should be about 500,000 spindles running in China. Mills here run in day and night shifts of twenty-one to twenty-two hours out of twenty-four in a year of three hundred to three hundred and twenty days, allowing for holidays. Taking the production per spindle at 10 ounces per day of twenty-four hours in a year of three hundred working days we arrive at an output of about 700,000 piculs of yarn. But considering that the operatives will nearly all themselves have to be first made out of raw hands that have never seen a power machine, it can scarcely be expected that even this result will be reached for a year or two. The import of cotton yarn into China during 1896 was 1,461,365 piculs.

It might be expected that the native yarn would reduce this foreign import, and some day this will no doubt happen, but I believe not yet. * * *

In regard to wages, employers in China are at a great advantage. The wages of an adult man on the Lower Yangtze for a day of twelve hours for, say, three hundred and twenty days in the year in such industries as native hand weaving and dyeing, average, at the present gold price of silver, 10s. to 12s. a month, all included. Wages may be expected to rise somewhat in the future for the more skilled classes of labor, as the number actually efficient must be limited, at least until the system of apprenticeship, which is universal in China, has had time to take root in regard to the new industry, but any great change in the level of wages among the plain workers must be very slow, as the operatives will have pressing upon them the mass of millions of cheap workers with just as good capacity as themselves, unless, indeed, manufacture is congested in one place and labor allowed to get into the power of Chinese middlemen. The truth is that a man of good physical and intellectual qualities, regarded merely as an economical factor, is turned out cheaper by the Chinese than by any other race. He is deficient in the higher moral qualities, individual trustworthiness, public spirit, sense of duty, and active courage, a group of qualities perhaps best represented in our language by the word manliness, but in the humbler moral qualities of patience, mental and physical, and perseverance in labor he is unrivalled. * * *

In regard to capital, the third agent besides land and labor in production, the Chinese have not sufficient to develop their country, even with the present backward methods of industry, and interest is accordingly very high. The country does not produce the precious metals to any extent, and the Chinese have, it is believed, no more of silver and copper than is required for the ordinary circulation; but they are likely to get ample capital for enterprises under foreign management from abroad, and there is no more promising field for the investment of English capital. * * *

From this report is there any doubt but that when foreign capital is introduced into the Chinese Empire, with the low rate of wages and the low cost of living, the inhabitants will be able to manufacture at home everything that they will require in the way of cotton goods?

In October, 1897, a French commission that had been sent to China to investigate commercial conditions reported that "the exceedingly rich soil is capable of producing incalculable quantities of cotton." So that it will be seen that she will not be lacking in the production of raw materials either. True, at present she does not grow the finer grades of cotton, but nearly all writers upon the subject agree that in time she will be able to materially improve the standard of the crop produced.

Mr. Chairman, since the enactment of the law of November 3, 1893, which is the latest general statute on Chinese exclusion, new conditions have arisen, new questions confront us. We have acquired the islands of Porto Rico, Guam, Tutuila, the Hawaiian Islands, and the Philippines. In the latter group the Chinese have already secured a firm foothold. But Congress in extending our exclusion laws over the Hawaiian Islands was also determined that the Chinese in Hawaii should not be allowed to enter our mainland territory, and in the joint resolution of July 7, 1898, whereby the Hawaiian Islands were annexed to the United States, this provision was inserted:

There shall be no further immigration of Chinese into the Hawaiian Islands, except upon such conditions as are now or may be hereafter allowed by the laws of the United States; and no Chinese, by reason of anything herein contained, shall be allowed to enter the United States from the Hawaiian Islands.

Subsequently, on April 30, 1900, when Congress passed the law organizing the Territory of Hawaii, the following provision was inserted:

That Chinese in the Hawaiian Islands when this act takes effect may within one year thereafter obtain certificates of residence as required by "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States," approved May 5, 1892, as amended by an act approved November 3, 1893, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States,' approved May 5, 1892," and until the expiration of said year shall not be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States if found therein without such certificates. Provided, however, That no Chinese laborer, whether he shall hold such certificate or not, shall be allowed to enter any State, Territory, or District of the United States from the Hawaiian Islands.

The bill under consideration will exclude Chinese from all our insular possessions and will prevent those who are in those possessions from entering the American mainland. There are probably 200,000 Chinese of the full blood in the Philippine Islands. Those of mixed blood are many times more numerous, and it has invariably been asserted that these latter are a much more dangerous element, because they combine in themselves nearly all the vices of the Chinese and the Malays, with practically none of the virtues of either race.

It has been suggested that we allow a limited number of Chinese laborers to enter the Philippine Islands for the purpose of rapidly developing the resources of our new possessions; but experience has demonstrated the fact that there, as here, the Chinaman does not remain a laborer long. He has a remarkable aptitude for trade. He is a born trader and is always ready for a bargain. He soon becomes a small tradesman, and the hatred of this class in the Philippines by the native Filipinos is much more intense and is of a different character than is the dislike of the Caucasian mechanic for the Chinese laborer.

During the past summer I had the pleasure of visiting the Philippines, China, and Japan. Even in the cockpits, which are patronized by all elements in the community, and which one finds in every populous settlement, the Chinaman is not allowed to mingle with the natives. He is compelled to accept accommodations in a part of the arena especially set apart for him. Men of affairs in Manila informed me that the life of a Chinaman in the interior and away from the seaports is not safe. Members of the Philippine Commission state that an effort to let them enter the islands promiscuously would probably precipitate serious race difficulties, and I am firmly convinced that if we do not crowd his islands with Chinese the Filipino will ultimately be able to take good care of himself.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Are they competitors to-day?

Mr. KAHN. In some lines.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit, just there, a question. Were there any restrictive laws in force under Spanish rule of the islands?

Mr. KAHN. I understand there was a head tax at that time. I am not sure. Governor Taft himself, who made the statement, said he was not positive, but he was under that impression.

Mr. SCOTT. Is it likely that many more Chinese would seek admission to the islands under American administration than under Spanish?

Mr. KAHN. No doubt of it; because the development of the islands will grow very much more rapidly.

But is it not the duty of the United States to preserve the islands for the natives thereof? Is it not better to retard exploitation, if need be, and thus enable the natives ultimately to participate in the development of their own land, rather than by opening the gates, allow a limited number of capitalists to aggrandize themselves at the expense of the population, whose future well-being should be our first and paramount consideration?

Governor Taft, Commander Harwood, who had several hundred Filipinos employed at the Cavite Navy-Yard, Brig. Gen. A. W. Greely, who was in the islands superintending the work connected with the operations of the Signal Corps of the Army, and who had quite a number of Filipinos in his employ, all informed me that they were quick to learn and were good mechanics. Let us give them a chance. Let us extend our exclusion policy to those new possessions. I firmly believe that the future will amply justify our decision in this matter.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. As a matter of fact, we propose to prohibit them from coming there.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly; and they ought to be prohibited. The same restrictive measures that we have for the mainland of the United States should be enforced there, and I shall at the proper time offer some amendments to this bill, so as to extend all the safeguards which we have for our mainland to our island possessions.

Mr. Chairman, I have referred to the fact that I visited China last summer. I saw the Chinaman on his native heath. I had opportunities for observing him when he is "at home." A distinguished Chinese diplomat stated that:

All Chinese in this country come from two or three districts in the Canton Province; that we never find here any Chinese from the northern part of China or from the central part of China; that we never hear of a Chinese from Shanghai coming here.

It was my good fortune to visit both Canton and Shanghai, and to my mind the Chinamen who dwell in the native city in both these places are very much alike. They know absolutely nothing of sanitation. They wear little clothing. Even in many of the most pretentious shops the salesmen are naked to the waist and do not even wear shoes, stockings, or slippers. The only garment many of them had on was a pair of very loose cotton trousers. They seemed to have no private dwellings and "no good equivalent for home or comfort." The poet Coleridge in describing the city of Cologne said:

I counted two and seventy stench,
All well defined, and several stinks.

But Coleridge never traveled through the streets of Canton. Had he visited that city, or Shanghai either, he would have simply been compelled to stop the count. [Laughter.] And Bayard Taylor says that Shanghai, in its horrid foulness, would be flattered by such a description. [Laughter.] All travelers in the Orient admit that Canton is even worse; and Canton, according to the Chinese officials here, furnishes and will continue to furnish most of the Chinese that come to our shores.

Many antiexclusionists tell us of the honesty of these people, their sobriety, their peaceability. I do not question the motives of these well-meaning but ill-informed persons, but the fact is that brigandage and piracy in the Canton Province are of the most commonplace occurrence. In traveling between Hongkong and Canton and Macao and Hongkong last summer the steamers in which I took passage compelled the Chinese passengers to go under the hatches, and as soon as we started on our journey these hatches were bolted down, while guards armed with rifles paraded up and down the deck so as to prevent possible pirates among the passengers from taking possession of the vessels and looting them.

Rev. George Cockburn, M. A., who has lived among them for many years, and who is anything but unfriendly to the race, in his entertaining work entitled John Chinaman, speaking of their business dealings, says:

Proverbial wisdom cautions the intending purchaser to ask the price at three shops, if he does not want to be cheated. The shopman is generally content with half he asks. The following maxim is to be observed: "When the merchant asks up to Heaven in his price, bid him down to earth in your offer." Buyers are careful to guard against mistakes by taking their own scales and measures along with them. A Chinese shopkeeper would be as much surprised at a customer who did not check the quantity as one who did not count the change. * * * There is but one way of avoiding being cheated at times—never buy.

So much for their business honesty and integrity!

As for their sobriety, it is probably true that they do not get drunk on whisky or spirituous liquors, but they are frequently besotted with opium. The latter vice is much worse than the liquor habit, and "the 'opium ghost' is as bad as the alcoholic wreck, despite a hundred blue books to the contrary."

I desire to say but a few words as to their peaceableness. It is true that gambling and sensuality are the great vices of the Chinese, the latter taking unnatural forms with terrible frequency. And no doubt many of the 31,162 arrests for misdemeanors during the past twenty years, from 1880 to 1900, among the Chinese in the city and county of San Francisco were made on account of infractions of the laws against such crimes. But they do not confine themselves to petty offenses exclusively. As I have already shown, murder is not an uncommon thing among them, while murderous assaults, robberies, kidnapping, and blackmail are of frequent occurrence. It costs the city of San Francisco more to properly police Chinatown than three times its area in any other part of that city—and still they baffle the police constantly. That gives you a fair idea of their peaceableness.

Mr. Chairman, that distinguished American statesman, traveler, and author, Bayard Taylor, visited China as early as 1853. At that period we did not know much about the Chinese. Mr. Taylor was a New Englander, and could not be accused of the so-called "California anti-Chinese prejudice." In his India, China, Japan, speaking of this people, he says:

It is my deliberate opinion that the Chinese are morally the most debased people on the face of the earth. Forms of vice which in other countries are barely named are in China so common that they excite no comment among the natives. They constitute the surface level, and below them there are depths of depravity so shocking and horrible that their character can not even be hinted. There are some dark shadows in human nature which we naturally shrink from penetrating, and I made no attempt to collect information of this kind; but there was enough in the things which I could not avoid seeing and hearing—which are brought almost daily to the notice of every foreign resident—to inspire me with a powerful aversion to the Chinese race. Their touch is pollution, and, harsh as the opinion may seem, justice to our own race demands that they should not be allowed to settle on our soil. Science may have lost something, but mankind has gained by the exclusive policy which has governed China during the past century.

For nearly fifty years the Chinese have lived in this country. Their daily intercourse with the Caucasian has not materially changed their customs or habits. Mr. Taylor's description of the conditions in China is undoubtedly equally applicable to any Chinese community in our country.

We of the Pacific coast are perhaps more deeply concerned in this question than any of our fellow-citizens. We feel their presence among us more than any other section of the country. Under the census of 1900 there are 4,091,349 inhabitants west of the Rocky Mountains. Included in this population are 67,729 Chinese, while but 23,134 Chinese are distributed among the 71,994,445 inhabitants throughout the other States of the Union, and two-thirds of those in the Western States are found in California.

We have probably learned to know him better than our fellow-citizens elsewhere. He is a present, living, vital problem with us, and we feel that our cause is also the cause of the laborer and the wage worker in the Eastern States. It is only the sordid and the selfish, who prefer a low standard of wages and a low grade of morality—men who want cheap labor because it will increase their individual profits—who would open loopholes in the barriers we have erected after many years of hard, bitter, practical experience.

Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the committee would see fit to allow the section giving to American seamen that same measure of protection against Chinese competition that we accord the shoemaker, the tailor, and all other skilled and unskilled mechanics to remain the bill. I do not desire at present to take up the time of the House in discussing this phase of the question; but when the bill comes up for discussion under the five-minute rule, I shall again offer the section as an amendment and shall have something to say in favor of that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HITT. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. I shall not take up the time of the House. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

In conclusion, however, let me say that our exclusion laws have been a great boon to the laborers of this country. They now ask us to continue extending our shelteringegis over them, and I feel that there is not a patriotic, loyal, liberty-loving American who does not desire the workingmen of his country, its "hewers of wood and drawers of water," protected against this unequal competition. The American laborer and mechanic, in his neat and comfortable home, seated at his fireside, surrounded by his wife and little ones, is the peer of any wage worker in any part of the world. Let us keep him so. [Loud applause.]

APPENDIX.

[From the Washington Post, March 2, 1902.]

CHINATOWN—ITS LIGHTS AND SHADOWS—ITS LESSONS ON THE CHINESE PROBLEM.

[By Hon. Julius Kahn, Member of Congress, Representative of the district including Chinatown, and introducer of the Chinese-exclusion bill.]

Kipling it was who said that "the Chinese quarter of San Francisco is a ward of the city of Canton set down in the most eligible quarter of the place." Having visited Canton last summer, I am ready to bear witness to the truth of the distinguished author's observation.

Chinatown in San Francisco comprises about fifteen squares. It is located in the older part of the city, where the streets are narrow and where numerous cul-de-sacs abound. It is after nightfall that the place assumes its most picturesque appearance. The houses are lighted with lanterns of every shape and size, the streets and alleys are crowded with a dense mass of gesticulating Chinamen, the shrill notes of Chinese orchestras and the strident shouts of vendors of various Chinese wares fill the air and make one feel that perhaps he is at the portals of pandemonium.

SQUALOR AND FILTH.

To get an idea of how John Chinaman lives, one should visit the "Palace Hotel" of Chinatown. Just why this ramshackle old establishment should be named after our famous hostelry is not clear, unless it be that each has its courtyard, one of magnificence, the other of vileness and stench. It is about this place that the Chinaman is found at home. Within the rookery live several hundred Chinese, huddled together in quarters that would hardly house 50 whites. All the rooms look out upon the central court, which is common property to all the occupants. In the center of the court stand innumerable kerosene cans which serve as stoves, on which the life-supporting rice of the Celestial is cooked. The foul smells from the reeking stoves, together with the noisome odors arising from the accumulated filth, cause the white visitor to hold his nostrils and to heave a great sigh of relief as he emerges into the outer air. It is not an infrequent sight to see in this court some wretched white victim of the opium or morphine habit, offering for a dime to "take a shot" to show how the deed is done. There are said to be quite a number of men who eke out a miserable existence in this fashion.

PRINCE AND PAUPER.

There are a number of fairly well-to-do merchants in the Chinese quarter. But by far the greater proportion of the people are exceedingly poor. Many of the latter class live in basements and sub-basements, and their homes might be likened to rabbit warrens. They have none of the ordinary conveniences to which white men are accustomed. The occupant sleeps upon a shelf, with a piece of matting stretched over it, 10 and 12 men occupying a room that would be considered small for two Caucasians. There are no adornments, no pictures, no chairs, no conveniences of any kind; but at the entrance of every room there is a small table upon which stands a teapot and cup, and the visitor may partake of that which cheers but not inebriates. Even the wealthy class occupy quarters that the average American mechanic or clerk would not consider comfortable. True, there are not so many people huddled together in the well-to-do quarters, but there are the same smells as in the hovels of the paupers.

"LAST CHANCE" HOSPITAL.

At one time there was a so-called hospital in Chinatown known as the "Last Chance." It was here that those suffering with incurable maladies were brought to die. The very presence of this place spoke more eloquently than words of the utter heartlessness of the people. I remember visiting the spot one evening. There was a man in the last stages of consumption. As we entered he appealed piteously to us for money with which to buy opium. He said that his last penny had been taken from him by those in charge. The police authorities finally insisted upon having the place closed up.

The Chinatown of to-day is much cleaner than that of a few years ago. During the past summer a determined effort was made by the combined forces of the Federal, State, and municipal governments to give the quarter a thorough cleansing. Surgeon White, of the Marine-Hospital Corps, was in charge. He informed me that Chinatown was the greatest accumulation of utter filth that he had ever seen. Ten tons of dirt and rubbish were removed from every square.

THE SIX COMPANIES.

Practically all the Chinese in this country are allied with one of the so-called Six Companies. In reality there are now eight companies. Indeed, it may safely be said that practically all the Chinese in the United States have been brought to this country by these companies. They have numerous societies among themselves, and many of their feuds arise as a result of membership in these organizations. Each one of these societies has its highbinders or hatchet-men. When for some reason or other it is determined to avenge a fancied injury to a member of the tong or society by blood atonement, the hatchet-men are called into action, and it is not long before the selected victim is put out of the way. Then the vendetta begins. The tong of the murdered man makes reprisals, and so the fight goes on until both sides are weary of the slaughter, or by paying a money indemnity one side or the other purchases peace.

For many years the two leading tongs were the Sam Yup and the See Yup. Little Pete, a Chinese who had established an unsavory record, but who had been able to amass a fortune of about $100,000, was president of the Sam Yups. Big Sam, another notorious character, who was at the head of many gambling institutions in Chinatown, was the president of the See Yups. These two tongs became involved in a dispute and a price was put upon Little Pete's head. For upward of two years he never ventured from his home or his business without a bodyguard. One evening, about three years ago, he drifted into a barber shop and thoughtlessly sent his bodyguard on an errand consuming four or five minutes. During that short space of time the highbinders of the See Yups entered the shop, and quick as a flash Little Pete fell riddled with bullets. The Sam Yups went wild in their indignation. They at once placed a price upon Big Sam's head and the latter has not been seen in Chinatown since.

PLAYING FAN TAN.

The Chinaman is an inveterate gambler. His favorite game is fan tan. It is a simple diversion, but the Chinese player frequently loses every cent he has during a night's sport in Chinatown. Fan tan is played after this fashion: The players range around a large table, in the center of which a small square is marked off. The dealer takes from a bag a cupful of buttons, and then inverts the cup in the center of the square. Betting now begins, and after everybody has laid his wager the cup is withdrawn, and with great deftness the dealer begins to count the buttons. He removes them from the table with a closed fan, four at a time. As he draws near the end of the pile the excitement increases in intensity. The result is determined by the number of buttons remaining in the last count. If there are four, those who bet on that number win; if there are one, two, or three, then the supporters of these numbers are the winners in the game. A percentage of all the bets goes to the keeper of the gambling house, while the rest is divided proportionately among the lucky players.

There is an ordinance against gambling in San Francisco, and the police frequently raid the gambling houses; but from past experiences John has become very wary, and the authorities are obliged to adopt many ruses in order to make a successful raid on the joints. Sometimes a policeman will disguise himself as a Chinaman and thus gain admission into the forbidden game. But this device has been resorted to so often that it is not likely to prove successful at the present time.

GAMBLING HOUSES.

There is scarcely a gambling house in the Chinese quarter that has not innumerable secret panels, sliding and trap doors, and all kinds of odd receptacles into which all tell-tale evidence can be secreted upon the first signal from the lookout. The outer doors of these establishments are generally shielded with half-inch steel plates, and it requires the energy of three or four sturdy policemen, armed with sledge hammers, to batter them down. One of the most successful raids ever made was from the roof of one of the buildings. A policeman lowered himself by a rope to the window of the gambling den and caught some thirty-five of the occupants flagrante delicto. The Chinese gamblers are afraid of the officers and readily submit when caught committing an offense. But the gambling instinct is so strong that I doubt whether any law will entirely eradicate the evil.

In order to obtain the means to gratify their taste in this direction many Chinese pawn anything of value they have. Pawn shops in Chinatown are numerous, and one sees upon their shelves everything from the murderous double knives of the highbinders to the padded winter blouse that is almost a necessity in the San Francisco climate at all seasons of the year. Just before the Chinese new year, however, every Chinaman manages to get his belongings out of pawn. He may start in again the day afterwards, but he is scrupulously careful to settle up his accounts before the last day of the old year.

OPIUM SMOKING.

Opium smoking is the recreation of the entire race. Whether you visit the rooms of the wealthy or the hovel of the pauper you find the inevitable opium outfit. I have seen men who can smoke twenty-five or thirty pills before the drug begins to have any effect upon them. Every Chinese home also has a clock and a cat, and I have frequently seen one of these feline pets perched upon the shoulder of the owner inhaling the smoke of the opium after it leaves his nostrils. A Chinaman told me that his pet cat took as much enjoyment in his smoking as he did himself. I regret to say that the pernicious habit has grown among white boys and girls, and many an aspiring youth has broken down as the result of opium smoking contracted in the Chinese quarter.

The opium outfit is unique. It consists of a long pipe of bamboo or reed, about an inch in diameter. Near the lower end is inserted a hollow bowl about 3 inches in diameter, with the top entirely covered over and a hole in the center about the size of a pin head. The drug itself looks like and has the consistency of molasses. A lamp, in which burns nut oil and dried seaweed, completes the outfit. The smoker inserts a long pin into a little jar of opium and withdraws an amount about the size of a pea. He cooks this in the flame of the lamp, rolling it on the bowl of the pipe until it has acquired the necessary consistency. During the cooking process the opium smells like roasting peanuts. After the smoker has baked it sufficiently he thrusts the pin through the little hole in the bowl and fastens the opium securely thereto. He then places the bowl alongside the flame and begins to draw on his pipe. Two or three puffs serve to exhaust the little pill of opium and then the process is renewed. It requires only a few operations to send a novice into the realm of dreams, but the veteran can smoke twenty-five or thirty of these pellets before the effect is felt.

JOSS HOUSES.

There are some four or five joss houses in Chinatown, maintained by the various tongs, or societies. During the year the members of the organizations make whatever offerings they can afford to the joss, and forthwith a little piece of red paper is posted on the walls of the temple announcing that Ah Sam, or whatever his name may be, has contributed for the benefit of the joss. The walls of many of the temples are practically papered with these little slips. At the end of the year they are all removed, and the process begins again, and every member of the tong can see just what his neighbor is giving in the cause of religion.

The josses or idols are never beautiful to look upon. They are at once grotesque and hideous. They are supposed to exercise a great influence over a man's daily avocation. They are appealed to on all occasions and for all purposes. For example, when a Chinese is sick, he goes to the god of medicine, carrying a little bamboo vase filled with slips upon which strange characters are printed. These characters designate the various commodities of the Chinese pharmacopoeia. After having told the joss his ailment, he begins to shake this vase vigorously until one of the slips rises from the vessel and falls to the ground. He picks it up and notes what medicine the god has told him to get for his ailment. If a cure is not effected, he concludes he has not propitiated the joss sufficiently, and contributes a little more money to the temple. He tries it over again until he finally gets some kind of drug that gives him some measure of relief.

THE CHINESE DEVIL.

The Chinaman's principal fight, however, is with the devil, and if he has been unfortunate during the day he buys a bundle of firecrackers, repairs to the joss house, and begins to explode the crackers in order to drive off his satanic majesty. It is a part of his creed to endeavor to fool the devil. The latter is particularly watched at all funerals. On these occasions a friend of the deceased, seated on the hearse, usually scatters pieces of paper, which are supposed to represent money, as the funeral cortege drives to the cemetery. The Chinese devil is known for his cupidity, and by stopping to pick up all the money which the friend of the deceased scatters along the roadside he loses so much time that the corpse gets a good start on his satanic majesty. When the body is duly interred roast pigs, bowls of rice, condiments of various kinds, and pots of tea are placed upon the grave in order that the spirit may not go hungry as it wends its way to the Celestial heaven. The Chinese color of mourning is white. Professional mourners are frequently hired to lament the demise of the departed, and for a trifling fee the surviving relations manage to purchase a sufficient display of grief to gratify the vanity of the most exacting corpse.

The queue, which is a distinguishing characteristic of the Chinese, was really thrust upon them by their Tartar conquerors. It is erroneously believed that the queue is a part of the Chinese religion. I am told that this is not so, but that it is the custom for rebels in China to cut their queues. By so doing they show their contempt for the Tartar dynasty, which at present occupies the throne of the Chinese Empire. There is little foot binding in Chinatown. There are only three or four girls in the Chinese quarter, so far as my knowledge goes, who are being brought up as small-footed women. The Chinese are exceedingly tenacious of the customs and ceremonies of their people. They do not adopt even the clothing of Americans, except, perhaps, in the matter of hats. The Chinese skullcap, with its little red button in the center, is worn only on state occasions. The soft, low-crowned hat of American make has supplanted the oriental headgear among the men, but they cling to the blouse and felt shoes and the big linen trousers, even though they may have been in this country for an entire generation.

YELLOW v. WHITE.

It is generally believed that the so-called Chinese laborer works in fields that no white man would enter; in other words, that he simply performs manual toil. This is not the fact. There are few races that have the imitative faculty more strongly developed than the Chinese. They may come to this country without the knowledge of any trade, but they are quick to learn, and very soon they enter the ranks of skilled labor. They will work from sunrise to sunset without complaint, and having no high ideals or high aspirations, they are like so many machines. Indeed, I have been told by men familiar with their method of working that a Chinaman can and does toil sixteen hours a day seven days a week and requires only a little rice and a piece of fish to nourish his body. He is absolutely without nerves. He does not seem to be possessed of ambition or desire to better his condition in life. The idea of a home, which is such a characteristic of the American mechanic, never enters the Chinese laborer's mind.

There are few women in Chinatown, but as woman is much lower than man in the social scale, she does not exert any refining influence upon the male population. It would be impossible for white men to live as these people do. They can exist on 10 cents a day, including room rent and incidental expenses. I think I may safely say that scarcely a single laborer in Chinatown is married. True, some of the merchant class have their wives, but the laborers have only themselves to support.

THE EVIL OF IT ALL.

The average number of mouths an American mechanic feeds from the result of his toil is five. How can a man who desires to bring up a family decently, honestly, and respectably compete with a being who knows nothing of home life, and who, machine-like, day after day, toils from twelve to sixteen hours for wages which probably do not exceed $1 a day? This is the practical aspect of the Chinese-exclusion question, and after a trip through Chinatown I think no one will doubt the wisdom of making the barriers so strong and so high against Chinese laborers and the vicious and depraved of the race in general that the end will be in sight of Chinese quarters on this side of the Pacific.

Mr. NAPHEN. Mr. Chairman, we are charged with disloyalty to our grand traditions, and our high ideals of hospitality, by legislating against the Chinese. A serious study of the question shows that we are justified in restricting the immigration of this race, and that there is nothing unnatural in what we have done, and are doing. The natives of all lands have made this Republic, and are to-day numbered in the elements of its population. Not a people, even to the remote Iclander, but has its representatives among us now, at the opening of this twentieth century.

They differ from one another in language and in tradition. As the fusion of the metals, in the temples of Corinth, produced a metal more precious than gold, the blending of all races here promises to produce a race that will excel any other individual race. Nevertheless, a fear exists in many quarters, that the limits of our capacity to absorb the surplus population of other nations are in sight. I do not join in this alarm. No such danger exists. I admit that we are not exempt from the ordinary laws of nature. Self-preservation is a duty, in the fulfillment of which, humanity will be the gainer as well as ourselves. Prudence has prompted us to serve notice on the other nations of the world, that we are in danger of becoming industrially congested.

This may seem strange in so young a land, with so sparse a population in proportion to its area. With one exception, the tests imposed or suggested against those seeking the hospitality of our shores, have been standards of character, education, and property, not racial. We have drawn the race line only against one nationality. In other cases we admit the people and exclude the individuals. In the Chinese case we admit the individuals and exclude the people. Obviously, there must exist special reasons for the exception made in this particular class. The characteristics of this race justify our action with overwhelming force. They are the most completely alien of all who knock at our doors for admission. The others who come, are for the most part members of one family—Europeans—the family of the earlier settlers, the family of the men who freed it from the yoke of oppression; but the subjects of this law, are separated from us by a wide gulf of distinction.

Everywhere the white race has recognized this distinction, and acting on a deep and trustworthy feeling, has imposed checks on the encroachment of this people. We are not singular in our policy of Chinese exclusion.

Our British neighbors in the north impose a capitation tax of $50 upon Chinese immigrants, and they propose to increase this tax to $500.

British Australasia began legislating against them in 1855. Regulations of ever-increasing severity were enacted, the capitation tax in New Zealand was raised to $100, and the number of immigrants restricted, to one to every 200 tons of shipping; but all these measures failed to effect the desired result, and Tasmania, South Australia, and the other colonies of the new federation have adopted the policy of exclusion.

Peru, where 80,000 coolies were landed between 1850 and 1894; Venezuela, and Ecuador, and Uruguay have also adopted this policy. The Spaniards in the Philippines three times expelled the Celestials at intervals of a century—in 1605, in 1709, and in 1804. In Cochin China the foreigners of this race are registered and taxed, and the same is true of Dutch Java. Be the motive what it may—fear, antipathy, or contempt—there is a striking unanimity on this yellow peril among the peoples to whom it has been presented.

Industrially considered, the Chinese are a menace to the wage earner. They are unique in the combination of small wages and great labor. He who in Canton earns $5 a month and lives on 6 cents a day, easily underbids the white laborer and reduces wages to the lowest possible plane. Persevering, imitative, tireless, needing no holidays or recreation—a mere human machine—he supplants his rivals in trade after trade.

We find him the cigar maker, the shoemaker, the garment maker of San Francisco; the orchard and vineyard worker and the fruit canner of California, and the laundryman of Eastern cities and will drive the bone of our population from every occupation if permitted. He adapts himself to the work of women and becomes the house servant, and will, if necessary, perform the work heretofore done by children. With the white wage-earner skill and competence mean a higher standard of living, and the distribution of his earnings through the community, but the Oriental seems to obey another law. That which is parsimony to us, is prodigality to him. The copper coinage of his native land subdivides itself into fractions, which we have not yet learned to reckon.

The instinct of self-preservation compels the white laborer to oppose this immigration. You can no more condemn him for it, than you could condemn the father who divides the bread he earns among his own children, instead of sending it to starving little ones, perhaps equally deserving, on the banks of the Ganges or the Hoangho. It is no answer to the protest of white wage-earners against throwing open the door closed against Chinese labor, to say that the cheap labor of the Chinaman will develop the land and that he will give full return for what he receives.

Economically, there is no advantage to the country from a body of laborers who remain as strangers, consume few of our products, in fact, barely sufficient to maintain life, and export a large proportion of their earnings. True, there may be a financial benefit to certain landed properties and manufacturers who profit by cheap labor; but the consideration which shapes our governmental policy can not regard individuals alone, or be wholly material. We aim to develop men as well as to exploit lands, and increase our industries. Of what avail is it to us, to multiply production, so as to undersell all the nations of the world, if this will depress the wage-earning classes and lead to the destruction of the peace and purity of the home—which is beyond anything that money can secure? I am not overstating it, when I say that if Chinese labor be permitted to compete with white labor, it will destroy domestic life.

The Chinese do not assimilate with us, perhaps owing to the fact that they realize that they are not bone of our bone or flesh of our flesh.

They live apart in quarters which have no parallel for secrecy. They maintain their foreign dress and speech. They administer justice among themselves, according to laws which are not ours. They persistently violate the sanitary laws. Chinatown in our cities is a plague spot, not a land of romance, to be seen by proxy through the eyes of entertaining magazine writers.

Their language is separated from ours by thousands of years of structural development. Their social system is one which suppresses individuality, and inclines the whole race to a conventional type. If they have an emotional life akin to a European, it is screened behind a mask of passiveness. No part of their industry is dedicated to the common weal. They are indifferent to our welfare, seeking only to secure our money, and dream of the day when they shall leave us. Even their lifeless bodies spurn the embrace of our soil. Of no other race in this country can these statements or any parallel statements be made.

In a letter to Mr. G. T. Seward, dated August 31, 1876, Mr. Fish, Secretary of State, said:

The application of the settled principles of international law to the Chinese in the United States, is to be modified by the fact that the Chinese decline to accept these principles, leading an isolated life in the communities in which they are settled, always expecting to return to China and never, therefore, becoming domiciled among us, and that they maintain the same system of isolation toward Americans in China, regarding them always as strangers more or less outside the protection of law.

In June, 1896, many merchants and manufacturers in the Philippines sent an anti-Chinese report to the government of Spain in which they said:

There is no room to doubt that the Chinese merchant corrodes and sterilizes the most valuable germs of the national wealth everywhere, being the personification of the ignorant man in the fable who killed the goose that laid the golden egg; * * * a race which corrupts and dries up every place through which it passes, whose enumeration has always been a fraud to the Administration, for by fraud only about 25 or 30 per cent of them are calculated; a race which is excessively stubborn in persisting in maintaining their own peculiar customs and manner of life, which is stubborn in resisting everything pertaining to good government, public hygiene, and the police, * * * which altogether is a permanent menace to all the principles of the economic vitality of the country. (Report of the Philippine Commission, p. 153.)

The Philippine Commission, in their report to the President, say: There was testimony before us to the point that the Chinese take out of the country everything they can; that they spend little in the country because they live on little; that they intermarry with the Filipino women, and that they produce a race which does not furnish good citizens; that many of the great troubles on the islands are caused by Chinese and their descendants.

Some years ago nearly all the artisans such as carpenters, stonemasons, builders, and bricklayers were natives; now they are nearly all Chinese; you can hardly find a native carpenter or bricklayer.

The idea of the Chinese immigrating to a foreign country is simply to gain a livelihood. They only seek their own advantage, and do not consider that they should even indirectly advance the commerce and the industries of the country which is their second home. * * * They have a great love for their native land, where they hope to live when they obtain a fortune, that they may not be separated from the remains of their ancestors. * * * All of the Chinese who have obtained importance in the Philippines have been Christians. Their baptism was their initiation into power. It can not be said, however, that they have really abandoned their own religion, but they tolerate Christianity in their families.

Mr. R. Mayo Smith, in his work on Emigration and Immigration, in speaking of this race, says:

They come here with the single object of making money and then returning to China. They have no intention of becoming permanent residents and no desire to adopt our customs and habits of life. The most earnest defenders of the Chinese could not prove that during thirty years of contact our civilization had made any impression upon them.

Our efforts to Christianize them has, with few exceptions, been an entire failure. They have shown no desire to become acquainted with our political institutions or to take part in our political life. It may be contended that we refuse to admit them to political life and that the treatment they receive at our hands has not been such as to excite the admiration of civilization. But the very tenacity with which, notwithstanding all this persecution, they have clung to peculiarities of costume and living, causing them to be singled out for abuse, shows that they are singularly conservative in their ideas.

The whole history of intercourse between China and the western powers has exemplified the fact that with their four thousand years of civilization behind them they are imbued with a thorough contempt for the mushroom growth of European life. * * * The question of receiving them, therefore, assumes an entirely different aspect from that of receiving immigrants from Europe. The latter blend with the native stock, and all become one people.

Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State, in his letter to Mr. Cheng Tsao Ju, on February 18, 1886, says:

Causes growing out of the peculiar characteristics and habits of the Chinese immigrants have induced them to segregate themselves from the rest of the residents and citizens of the United States and to refuse to mingle with the masses of population, as do the members of other nationalities. As a consequence, race prejudice has been more excited against them.

It can not be said with any semblance of truth that those statements and conclusions are concessions to practical politics. They come from men who have made the Chinese subject a special study. Secretary Seward, the "zealous" defender of this race, admitted that it would be well to protect ourselves if there were danger of their coming here in great numbers.

Do we desire immigrants of this character? Are these bland Orientals, stealing in and out, tireless as automata, seemingly impervious to impressions, the material for American citizenship? Mr. Chairman, a Chinese can no more become an American citizen, than an American, proud of his ancestors and proud of the institutions and traditions of his country, can become a citizen of China. Can it be wondered, then, that this race should act as an irritant upon the populations amidst which it intrudes, and be made the object of special legislation?

Other considerations strengthen the position we have taken on this question. The presence of Chinese has given rise to serious disorder on many occasions. It is the part of justice, I admit, to punish the perpetrators of such wrongs, but it is the part of prudence to remove the inciting cause. We are dealing with human nature as it is, and must take account of its weakness. These people are a large portion of the human race. They are estimated at 400,000,000 by some; 750,000,000 by others.

Without sensible diminution of their numbers they could displace the entire population of America, and set in motion such a tide that no obstruction could be reared which would save us. Already, in spite of prohibition acts, through loopholes in the law and crevices in its execution, they have insinuated themselves among us. If less than 100,000 disturb industrial conditions, what would be the effect if the barriers were thrown down? It would be fatal to the interest of the wage-earner and would intensify the social problem, which is already acute. It is the duty of the wise legislators, acting upon this problem, to make laws for the future even more than for the present.

The forces which favor the admission of the Chinese are easily defined. The most formidable advocates are the Six Companies, the Canadian and Pacific Railroad, and the steamship lines which carry these immigrants as passengers. All our Chinese immigration is regulated at San Francisco and at Hongkong, a British island seized from China during the infamous opium war. We have the testimony of Sir John Pope Hennessey, five years governor-general at Hongkong, that the loudest protests in his time against Chinese exclusion came from the managers of steamship lines. Five lines, according to Mr. Scharf, late Chinese inspector at the port of New York, connect Hongkong with our Pacific slope, two running to San Francisco and one each to Vancouver, Tacoma, and Seattle. The Canadian and Pacific Railroad transports hundreds of Chinese each year along our northern frontier, giving a bond to the Canadian government to carry them out of that country, which means into ours.

The keenest opponents of this bill urge the reenactment of the present law. They do not seem to be aware that the validity of a large part of the laws and regulations governing Chinese exclusion is assailed in cases now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. The question involved goes to the vital part of the existing law. An examination of the various Chinese-exclusion laws disclose the fact that section 8 of the acts of September, 1888, is the law upon which the Secretary of the Treasury bases his right to make regulations governing the transit of Chinese laborers across our territory to another country. The act was passed to secure governmental regulations, to prevent the abuse of the transit right referred to in article 3 of the treaty between the United States and the Emperor of China then under consideration, and as the treaty was not ratified, it is claimed that section 8 of the act did not take effect.

Article III of said treaty was the same as Article III of the present treaty, which is as follows:

[Article III of the treaty of December 8, 1894.]

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed by Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, of coming to the United States and residing therein. To entitle such Chinese subjects as are above described to admission into the United States, they may produce a certificate from their Government or the Government where they last resided, viséed by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence they depart.

It is also agreed that Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries, subject to such regulations by the Government of the United States as may be necessary to prevent said privilege of transit from being abused.

This contemplated the passage of a law by Congress, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make regulations necessary to prevent the privilege of transit, referred to in said article, from being abused. Congress has not passed any law giving this authority to the Secretary of the Treasury. Regulations made by an official are not regulations made by the Government of the United States, as provided for in the treaty. The power to regulate transit does not include the power to prohibit it. It is therefore claimed that a Chinese laborer coming to any of our ports of entry, with a passport and a ticket for his passage across our territory, can not be refused admission, though his purpose be to go just across our border and return to us within a few hours.

It is said that if Congress extends the exclusion act beyond the expiration of our treaty with China it will seriously affect our commercial relations with that nation. Have no fear; this prediction is unfounded. This objection was urged at the time the Geary Act was before Congress. We were told the passage of the Geary Act would cause China to cease purchasing our goods. We have not suffered through our exclusion of these people, and China is more indebted to us now than she was at that time. The memorable circular note of Secretary Hay to the powers on July 3, 1900, as Mr. Dunnell, in his article on the settlement with China, in the Forum of February, 1902, well says was "the chief cause that prevented a declaration of war against China, and it brought the other nations to quick agreement as to the steps to be taken."

This made possible the treaty between England and Japan; and recently, when Germany made a demand upon China for an additional indemnity of 10,000,000 taels, our Government again came to the aid of China, and in a circular note to the powers suggested that the demands of all be cut down, so as to allow the latest claim of Germany to come within the 450,000,000 taels originally agreed upon as the amount of indemnity to be paid by China. We have otherwise manifested our friendship for China on many occasions.

The fear of retaliation by China should not affect us. If the passage of this bill cost us the entire trade with China, and it were all profit, we must not hesitate. It is by far better to have a commercial war, if it must come in consequence of our exclusion law, than have a labor earthquake in the near future.

The following table is taken from the Summary of Commerce and Finance for June, 1901, by O. P. Austin, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department:

Trade of the United States with China.

Year ended June 30—	Imports, free.	Imports, dutiable.	Total imports.	Exports (from United States to China).	Excess of imports.
1889 .....	$11,583,611	$5,444,801	$17,028,412	$2,791,123	$14,237,284

1900 .....	14,496,283	12,400,643	26,896,926	15,250,167	11,646,759

According to the above report, we have imported from China for ten years, beginning with 1890 and ending with 1900, almost $134,000,000 worth of merchandise more than we have sent to that country. Almost two-thirds of our imports have been free of duty. Four articles comprise the principal part of our imports. In 1900 our imports amounted to $26,896,926, $20,000,000 of which were silk, tea, opium, and goatskins, and about $14,000,000 of the entire imports were free of duty. In the consideration of this bill I do not deem any comments necessary on the above. [Applause.]

There is no evidence of bad faith on our part in the passage of this bill. The treaty of 1894 contemplates the continuation of an exclusion act and a change in the law from time to time. The treaty states that it is the desire of the Government of China to absolutely prohibit the emigration of laborers from China to the United States, and article 2 of the treaty recites that a Chinese laborer shall be furnished by the collector of the port from which he departs with such certificate as the laws of the United States may now or hereafter prescribe. Assuming that we pass a law to expire with the treaty, what guarantee have we that China will ratify a treaty to take effect on the death of the present one?

We had enough revealed to us of Chinese policy and Western diplomacy in our attempt to secure the ratification of the treaty submitted to China by the United States in May, 1888, which failed, and on the failure of which is based the attack on our present law to which I have referred. President Cleveland, in his message accompanying the approval of the act of October, 1888, which absolutely prohibited the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, declared:

That the Chinese Government in delaying the ratification of the treaty had violated its pledges, and that its demands for further consideration meant an indefinite postponement of the objects we had in view.

The recent Russia-Chinese bank negotiations demonstrate Chinese duplicity. They were only devised to deceive the powers. The agreement granting Russia exclusive mining and other concessions in Manchuria were given with imperial consent and ratified long ago by Li Hung Chang.

Sir Frederick Bruce, one of the ablest ministers England ever had at Peking, wrote to his Government in 1862, declaring that—

In a country like China, where the principles of administration differ entirely from those practiced by us, the conclusion of a treaty is the commencement, not the termination of difficulties.

The passage of an exclusion law to expire with the treaty would mean much trouble. The Chinese Government would undoubtedly refuse to enter into a new treaty until first assured of a satisfactory exclusion law. But one of two courses would then be open to us—either concede to its wishes or enact a law to protect ourselves regardless of the protests of China, and thereby lead to strained relations, and if perchance a treaty were secured by compromise and a law passed subsequently, it might be open to China to claim that we disregarded the terms upon which the treaty was secured and be open to the charge of obtaining a treaty under false pretenses, which would place us in a very unenviable position before other nations.

Mr. PALMER. If the gentleman will allow me, was not the charge made against the United States in the passage of the act of 1888 that the United States violated the treaty obligations?

Mr. NAPHEN. Yes, it was contrary to the terms of the treaty of 1880. China had violated its pledges before the passage of the act of October, 1888. We assumed that China would ratify the treaty then under consideration. She was playing false. The first information we had that the treaty was to be rejected was by way of England. After waiting a long time Congress grew impatient. An answer was forced from China. She refused to ratify the treaty; then we passed the act. We felt that she had deceived us.

Mr. PALMER. Did not that violate the treaty regulations we had with China, including the treaty of 1880, which gave the Chinese the unrestricted right to come to this country and the rights of the most favored nation?

Mr. NAPHEN. The most-favored-nation clause is in all the treaties of China with other nations. It creates no peculiar rights. If you deem the passage of the act of October, 1888, a violation under the circumstances—there was a violation.

Mr. PALMER. Did not the Supreme Court decide, under the act of 1888, that the treaty had been violated and that the United States had a right to violate it?

Mr. NAPHEN. Yes; we had a right to ignore it.

Mr. PALMER. Then what is the use of finding fault with China, when we did the same thing?

Mr. NAPHEN. I find fault with her by her deception at the time she refused to ratify the treaty. We were acting in good faith with her at the time, and expected a ratification of the treaty.

Mr. PALMER. I do not think the United States is in a position to fling rocks at China about violating treaties. I am in favor of this bill, but I do not think we are in a better position in that regard than China.

Much reference is made to the treaties with China. It is claimed that they are of great benefit to us.

Mr. Fish, Secretary of State, in his letter to Mr. Bancroft, dated August 31, 1869, said:

The treaty negotiated by Mr. Burlingame and his colleagues * * * came voluntarily from China and placed that power in theory on the same diplomatic footing with the nations of the Western World. It recognizes the Imperial Government as the power to withhold or grant further commercial privileges. * * * While it confers the international jurisdiction conferred by former treaties upon European and American functionaries over the properties and persons of their countrymen, it recognizes at the same time the territorial integrity of China and prevents such a jurisdiction from being stretched beyond its original purpose.

Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State, placed a true estimate on them. In his letter to Mr. Cheng Tsao, February 18, 1886, he said:

To sum up, as the treaties stand, American citizens not of diplomatic or consular office may resort to China for trade, for curiosity, or as teachers, and then only to certain carefully limited localities, having due regard to the feelings of the people in the location thereof. If the citizens or subjects of any other power should be granted other or greater privileges, then the citizens of the United States will have equal treatment.

Secretary Bayard placed a correct estimate on the then existing treaties.

No extra rights were granted to us by China under the treaty of 1894. Under Article V of that treaty China was given a right to enforce regulations for the registration of skilled and unskilled laborers who are citizens of the United States residing in China, and the United States was obliged to furnish the Government of China annual reports showing the full name, age, occupation, and residence of all other citizens of the United States, including missionaries residing within and without the treaty ports of China.

Article V reads as follows:

ARTICLE V.

The Government of the United States, having by an act of the Congress approved May 5, 1892, as amended by an act approved November 3, 1893, required all Chinese laborers lawfully within the limits of the United States before the passage of the first-named act to be registered as in said acts provided, with a view of affording them better protection, the Chinese Government will not object to the enforcement of such acts, and reciprocally the Government of the United States recognizes the right of the Government of China to enact and enforce similar laws or regulations for the registration, free of charge, of all laborers, skilled or unskilled (not merchants as defined by said acts of Congress), citizens of the United States in China, whether residing within or without the treaty ports.

And the Government of the United States agrees that within twelve months from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, and annually thereafter, it will furnish to the Government of China registers or reports showing the full name, age, occupation, and number or place of residence of all other citizens of the United States, including missionaries, residing both within and without the treaty ports of China, not including, however, diplomatic and other officers of the United States residing or traveling in China upon official business, together with their body and household servants.

Mr. PALMER. Since 1844, when the first treaty was negotiated with China, it has been altered four times, and every time at the request of the United States, and every time China has reluctantly granted consent. In 1888 China refused consent to ratify that treaty.

Mr. NAPHEN. China did not send answer of refusal. The answer was that the treaty needed further consideration.

Mr. PALMER. The point I want to make is this: That in the beginning of our treaty relations every time the treaty has been altered it has been at the request of the United States and the reluctant consent has been wrung from China. Under the treaty of 1880 we granted free and unlimited immigration to Chinese subjects, and agreed to respect the Chinese and not interfere with her internal affairs.

Mr. NAPHEN. We had no right to absolutely prohibit, but if the coming to the United States or residence of Chinese laborers here affected, or threatened to affect, the interests of our country or endanger the good order of any locality, we had a right to limit or suspend such coming or residence in a reasonable manner.

Mr. PALMER. And every time the treaty has been changed it has been changed at the request of the United States against the wish of China. Is not that true?

Mr. NAPHEN. We were justified. Self-protection demanded it each time. And self-protection calls for the passage of the bill now before us.

Mr. PALMER. I agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. NAPHEN. I desire to call the attention of those who oppose this bill on the ground that they anticipate much from our trade with China to a communication of Consul-General Jernigan, from Shanghai, to the State Department on the question of Asiatic competition in the great manufacturing industries of the world. He informs us that—

Goods manufactured in India, Japan, and China are now in the Asiatic markets. * * * China and Japan can now manufacture goods that will seriously compete in foreign markets with our manufactured goods. The energy and skill of the American laborer fear no rival in the home markets, but a new civilization is lighting up China and competition in Chinese markets for our manufactures will be one of the consequences. I have not failed to consider that civilization will increase the wants of the Chinese, but their progress may enable them to supply their wants. It is, therefore, Chinese competition in Chinese markets that is first to be feared, and not so much in our home markets. The success which has attended cotton mills at Shanghai within a few years past has stimulated the formation of companies for similar enterprises elsewhere in China. * * *

The American laborer is very properly protected against competition with Chinese labor on American soil, and such protection in no sense discredits the industry of the former, but when the products of Chinese labor will seriously compete in American markets with the products of American labor is more the question of the hour. In this report I have indicated the belief that competition is not to be so much apprehended in our home markets as it is in the markets of China for home products, and the facts would seem to justify the belief. * * *

The quality of cotton goods at present imported from Great Britain and the United States can be manufactured in China from the products of her soil, and it is unanswerable to expect the importation from foreign countries to continue in such large quantities, and when the products can be produced in necessary quantity on the soil of China at a far cheaper price it is no longer a question that cotton made and manufactured in China will supply the demand of the Chinese for cotton goods.

It will, and it therefore follows that the competition will first begin in the markets of China. * * * The prices paid a Chinese laborer are starvation prices to the American laborer, but the price of Chinese food is in proportion to the price of Chinese labor, and the money is received and the food eaten with contentment. * * *

It is certain that there can be produced in China a much superior grade of cotton to that now produced, and with improved machinery Chinese cotton mills will be able to supply the demand for a finer quality of cotton goods, as they are now supplying the demand for the more inferior quality.

In another report he informs us that "the poorest families will live on 50 cash apiece per diem, which at the present rate of exchange is about 3 cents."

In this report of the commerce of China we are informed "that the cotton industry and cotton demand in China are an especially important subject in considering that country from the standpoint of American commerce. Cotton and cotton goods form the largest item of our exports to China."

Much as I am in favor of an exclusion act, I desire to place on record my opposition to section 2 in its present form, which provides that the prohibition of Chinese immigration shall apply to those born in our insular possessions since their acquisition, and those who may be born there hereafter.

We have no right to prevent the free transit of any person born in the insular possessions whose parents have a permanent residence and domicile therein, be they Mestizos or Chinese. It should seem unnecessary for me to argue that our insular possessions are not foreign territory.

Mr. Chief Justice Marshall and Mr. Justice Story define a foreign territory to be one exclusively without the authority of the United States (see the cases of the boat Eliza, 2 Gall., 4; Faber v. United States, 1 Story, 1; the ship Adventure, 1 Brook, 235-241), and this decision is sustained by a long line of decisions and by numerous authorities on constitutional law.

In the recent case of De Lima v. Bidwell (182 United States, 1), Mr. Justice Brown, who delivered the opinion of the court, says:

From a résumé of the decisions of this court, the instructions of the Executive Departments, and the above acts of Congress, section 2 of the Foraker Act, it is evident from 1803, the date of Mr. Gallatin's letter, to the present time there is no shred of authority, except the dictum in Fleming v. Page (practically overruled in Cross v. Hansen), that a district ceded to and in the possession of the United States remains for any purpose a foreign country.

Mr. CLARK. Will my colleague on the committee answer one question?

Mr. NAPHEN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. If the Philippine Islands are a part of the United States, does it not necessarily follow that Congress has no power to restrict the free locomotion of citizens of the Philippine Islands, just as it has no right or power to restrict the free locomotion of any other citizens of the United States?

Mr. NAPHEN. May I ask my colleague a question? When he speaks of "citizens," does he mean those born there since or those who were subjects of Spain at the time of the acquisition? There is an important distinction to be drawn.

Mr. CLARK. I mean those who were subjects of Spain at the time of the acquisition and those who have been born in those islands since—the whole gang of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. NAPHEN. Those who were citizens of Spain at the time of the acquisition and did not preserve their allegiance to Spain must be protected in their natural rights under the Constitution. Those who were born there since we acquired the possessions, whose parents have a permanent residence therein, are citizens of the United States. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts be true, that they became citizens of the United States, then how do we get any authority from the Constitution of the United States to prohibit those people who by the terms of the cession became citizens of the United States from coming to this country—in other words, from going from one part of the United States to another?

Mr. NAPHEN. The rights I refer to are given to them by the Constitution. In the case of De Lima v. Bidwell (182 U. S., 1) the court said:

Whatever may be finally decided by the Americans as to the status of the islands and their inhabitants, it does not follow in the meantime, awaiting that decision, that people are in the matter of personal rights unprotected by the provisions of our Constitution and subject to merely arbitrary control of Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to keep them out, but I want to know how to do it.

Mr. NAPHEN. Permit me to call your attention to the latter part of Article IX of the Treaty of Paris, and perhaps you will see the distinction.

Mr. KLEBERG. Well, they could still come here under the Constitution if they are citizens of the United States.

Mr. NAPHEN. Under the latter part of article 9 the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress. A man has three rights. He has his natural right, he has his civil right, and he has his political right. This exclusion is contained within his natural rights, and I have not touched the civil or political rights yet, even should it be said under this section that we had a right to define what the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants were. I say they can not apply to those that were born there since or who may be born there hereafter. That contemplated those who were then native residents of the insular possessions.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman if he does not consider it a natural, inalienable right of every American citizen to go where he pleases and to have equal protection of law and Constitution of the United States.

Mr. NAPHEN. Certainly, sir; and I am coming to that, and that is just the reason I am not in favor of section 2 in its present form.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then I think you and I agree.

Mr. KLEBERG. That is all right.

Mr. NAPHEN. I do not agree with my colleague on part of section 2.

Mr. BARTLETT. I misunderstood your position. Of course the gentleman has read the decision of Justice Brown in the celebrated Downes and Bidwell case, which discusses somewhat the same propositions.

Mr. NAPHEN. It is discussed in all of the cases.

Mr. BARTLETT. In which he says, enumerating the natural right of people in these islands:

That the inhabitants of these territories are subject to an unrestrained power on the part of Congress to deal with them upon the theory that they have no rights which Congress is bound to respect.

Mr. NAPHEN. That is what I say. It is claimed by some that Congress brought the Constitution there. It went there of its own force.

These possessions are a part of the domain of the United States and our dominion extends over them. Our Constitution has been stretched under the implied-powers doctrine. Instead of a power confining and restricting the power of the Government, it has come to be regarded as a document in which the Government can find a warrant for the exercise of any power, but the most strenuous advocates of this doctrine will not claim that a person born in our insular possessions since our acquisition of same, he being subject to our jurisdiction, can be denied his personal rights except he forfeit them for a crime.

Those rights are life, liberty, and property. His right of liberty permits him to go to any part of our Republic and work there. This can not be denied him, and it rests on the same principle as his right to free speech and his right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. If we claim the right to arbitrarily deprive him of one of those, then we can deprive him of all. Judge Day, who was one of the peace commissioners, and who knows well the spirit as well as the letter of the treaty, in an address before the Michigan Bar Association, since the signing of the treaty, said:

Whatever the power of the American Government under the Constitution, the American people through their Executive and Representatives in Congress may be trusted to see that there goes with American sovereignty the underlying principles of freedom and liberty for which our fathers fought and for which they set up a government of and by and for the people. A party which should ignore or forget these principles would be relegated by the people from power to obscurity.

It may be urged that under the treaty Congress has a right to determine the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territory ceded. That referred to the native inhabitants then there, and not to those who have been born there since or may be born there hereafter. The Constitution takes care of their status.

Usually when territory comes by cession or annexation to a country the terms of the treaty determine the status of the people under their new master. But when we apply this proposition to the United States the terms of the treaty must not run contrary to the Constitution, the fountain head of our Government. Mr. Justice Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Law, says:

The Constitution never yields to treaty or enactment. It neither changes with time nor does it in theory bend to the force of circumstances.

Therefore, we hold our insular possessions under authority from the Constitution and must be governed according to its terms. You can not violate or set aside a single sentence or clause under any circumstances. If we admit that Congress can do this, then the whole instrument falls to the ground and there would be no Constitution and no Congress. The Constitution creates Congress, and to say that Congress is greater than its creator and can act outside and beyond the power which the Constitution gave it is a proposition repugnant to law and to common sense. Mr. Justice Cooley says:

It is believed, however, that the securities for personal liberty which are incorporated in the Constitution were intended as limitations of its power over any and all persons who might be within its jurisdiction anywhere, and that citizens of the Territories, as well as citizens of the States, may claim the benefit of their protection.

The same Constitution which governs us here must, of course, govern the people in the insular possessions. Every prohibition which binds Congress here binds it there. Liberty can not mean one thing here and something else there. As I have shown, these possessions are as much a part of the domain of the United States as the Territory of Alaska. Congress may extend political privileges according as in its judgment the people shall be found to be capable of exercising them, but at all times the Constitution is there, every clause of it. By virtue of the first clause of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, a child born in the United States of the parents of Chinese descent, who have a permanent domicile and residence in the United States, becomes at the time of his birth a citizen of the United States.

In the case of Cross v. Harrison (16 Howard, 201) it is said California by ratification became a part of the United States, and if a part of the United States, then Congress did not need an enactment to bring it there, for in the very preamble it is declared to be a Constitution for the United States of America. If Congress could extend the Constitution to-day, it could take it away to-morrow, for the power to repeal is incident to the power to enact. In holding and governing our insular possessions no clause of the Constitution which has thrown its protecting mantle over them can be violated, ignored, or set aside, no matter what the emergency or what the motive which prompted the act. The same right which it guarantees us is theirs also. We can not by legislative action discriminate against persons born in our insular possessions, after the ratification of the treaty, so as to exclude them from their natural, civil, or political rights. [Loud applause].

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, the question for decision is, Shall the policy of excluding Chinese laborers from the United States be continued and made perpetual?

How and why this policy originated may be learned from a brief review of the relations of the United States and China.

Our first treaty with China was negotiated in 1844.

In 1857 Great Britain and France invited the United States to join in an armed demonstration against China in order to compel that nation to grant additional commercial privileges. Following the long-established policy of avoiding all entanglements with foreign countries, which Washington recommended, the invitation was declined.

In 1858, by friendly negotiations, the United States secured from China all the advantages that Great Britain and France obtained by an armed occupation of Peking.

In 1868 additional articles were agreed upon, securing greater privileges to citizens of the United States in China, recognizing the autonomy of the Empire, disavowing any intention of interfering in its internal affairs, prohibiting the coolie contract system, guaranteeing the free and unlimited immigration of Chinese subjects into the United States, and extending to them the treatment accorded to the most-favored nations.

The opportunity to find work, accorded by the construction of the Pacific railroads, brought some hundreds of thousands of Chinese laborers to this country. They were brought under contracts made by Chinese companies, which included a provision for their return in a given number of years, if living, and a removal of their remains to China for burial, if dead.

Difficulties arose between native and Chinese laborers, riots occurred in which many of the Chinese immigrants were killed, and the Government felt obliged to pay China large sums of money as damages.

In 1880 a commission was dispatched to China for the purpose of negotiating a modification of the treaty of 1868 with respect to restricting the immigration of Chinese laborers, which was successful. China reluctantly consenting.

In 1888 another effort was made to obtain further concessions, which was unsuccessful, when Congress passed an act which violated the treaty of 1880. Nevertheless the Supreme Court held the act to be within the power of the Government.

In 1894, for the fourth time, the Chinese consented to negotiate a new treaty of immigration, which took the place of the treaty of 1880, modified the act of 1888, and allowed Chinese laborers lawfully in the United States to visit China and return, under certain restrictions. That treaty, which was limited by its terms to ten years, with the act of 1892, which expires by limitation in May of this year (which regulates the coming and going of resident Chinese), are the laws now in force upon the subject of Chinese immigration.

The policy of the Government from 1868 to 1894 has been modified from free immigration in 1868 to prohibition in 1894. From 1868 to 1880 there was free immigration; from 1880 to 1888, restriction; from 1888 to 1892, exclusion, and from 1892 to this time, prohibition.

The question is, "Shall this policy be definitely and finally adopted and laws passed declaring it free from any time limit?"

The reasons urged for the exclusion of the Chinese are that they are an undesirable class, not assimilative into the body of our people; that they can work and live under the most unfavorable conditions; subsist on an astonishingly small allowance of food; that they are not burdened with families to support, and are therefore able to underbid others who have wives and children; that they are immoral in character and fatalists in religion; that their only purpose is to earn as speedily as possible a sum of money with which to return to China; that they have no interest in building up society, supporting schools or churches, or in the success of free institutions; that no free-born and self-respecting laboring man can maintain himself and his family in competition with Chinese laborers. They are "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise."

The political economist urges that the laborer who can produce value to the extent of $2 per diem and who can subsist on 20 cents is not as valuable to the community as one who consumes a dollar in living, especially if the first takes his earnings out of the country to be expended elsewhere.

The statesman contends that the perpetuity of the Republic depends upon the virtue and intelligence of the people, and that whatever impairs virtue or decreases intelligence must be forbidden; that the standard of American citizenship is high because the citizen is able not only to obtain the necessities but some of the comforts of life, and occasionally get within hailing distance of the luxuries. He is able to buy books and educate his children and support the church of his choice.

The mechanic who has a commodious six-room house, with modern improvements, and who can earn an average of $2.50 a day the year round, lives better and more cleanly and has more of the comforts of life than did the English nobility in the days of Elizabeth. This condition results from his ability to buy and his disposition to consume. Whatever diminishes his ability to buy will decrease his opportunity to consume. The competition of Chinese labor will inevitably tend to lower the wages of labor, and therefore degrade the standard of citizenship.

The moralist points with horror and dread to the unblushing vice of the Chinese quarters in all cities where considerable numbers are congregated; to their contaminating influences on the youth of other races; to their utter disregard of all laws of health, cleanliness, or morality, and fears, not without reason, that all possible benefits to be derived from Chinese labor would be far overbalanced by the importation and dissemination among our youth of vice and disease.

The strength and glory of the Republic is in her matchless army of laboring men. Her true and only aristocracy is to be found among those who work with brain or hand. Merchant, miner, mechanic, unskilled laborer, lawyer, doctor, preacher, teacher—it matters nothing—all who honestly and earnestly toil belong in the ranks ennobled by labor. The idle rich, who toil not, are only camp followers of the grand army of laborers.

Says Thomas Carlyle: "Labor is discovered to be the grand conqueror, erecting and building up nations more surely than the proudest battle."

Little by little, but more and more, the rights of labor are conceded. Little by little, but more and more, the share of the laborer in the fruits of his toil is increased. In fifty years the average of wages of the laborer in this country has increased 40 per cent, while the hours of daily toil have steadily decreased. Our laboring people are better clothed, housed, and fed than any other on the earth. Capital has not lost by labor's gain. The wealth of the country has increased by leaps and bounds. Perhaps the share of labor in the great enterprises in which capital and labor are jointly engaged is not yet fairly rendered. Neither can prosper without the other; therefore the division of profits should be fair and just.

Whatever tends to cheapen, degrade, or debase labor should be forbidden in the interest of capital, labor, and the state.

Across the sea, but within a few days journey, lies a land in which 400,000,000 human beings, nearly a third of the population of the globe, struggle for the bare necessities of life. Forty centuries of toil, privation, and starvation have bred a race with a power to work with little food or rest, with a perseverance that no Caucasian men can equal; a race without morals or sensibility; calm, secretive, persistent, and servile; with quickened intellectual power enabling them to copy, imitate, and become proficient in any work; subsisting on a few handfuls of rice, taking no account of heat, cold, times, or seasons; having no recreations that are not vicious; stoics in practice and fatalists in belief. Of them millions die of starvation annually; being unable by the severest toil to earn even the few mouthfuls of food upon which they could subsist.

Shall the United States open her ports and let them in? Shall the workers of this land be put into hopeless competition with the swarming millions of China?

Shall the standards of citizenship be lowered, the wages of labor decreased, the opportunity for educating children diminished, our army of workers reduced to the necessity of adapting themselves to the starved condition of a servile oriental race, and the body politic be infected with the leprosy of Eastern vice?

To those who fly from the persecution of tyrants, if they are industrious, law-abiding, and God-fearing, and if they seek homes and citizenship in this fair land of opportunity and freedom; if they come to cast in their lot with us, renouncing all allegiance to foreign princes and potentates, to help in building up the great Republic, the gates should not be closed. For the anarchist, who would destroy all government; the pauper, who would become a burden to the industrious; for the criminal, fleeing from punishment for crimes committed, and for the Chinese, whose coming in large numbers would tend to lower the standard of citizenship, lessen intelligence and impair virtue, and therefore weaken the support upon which the perpetuity of the Republic depends, we have no room.

O Liberty, white goddess! Is it well
To leave the gate unguarded? On thy breast
Fold sorrow's children, soothe the hurts of fate,
Lift the downtrodden; but with hand of steel
Stay those who to thy sacred portals come
To waste the gifts of freedom. Have a care
Lest from thy brow the clustered stars be torn
And trampled in the dust. For so of old
The thronging Goth and Vandal trampled Rome,
And where the temples of the Cæsars stood
The lean wolf unmolested made her lair.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks somewhat by inserting certain matters that I just referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL, the Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13031 (the Chinese-exclusion bill), and had come to no resolution thereon.

CUSTODIANS OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to report the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives two persons whose duty it shall be, under the direction and supervision of the Superintendent of the Capitol Buildings and Grounds, to properly arrange and temporarily be the custodians of the documents formerly stored in the gallery of Statuary Hall and now in the old library space, said persons to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $100 per month.

The following amendment recommended by the committee was read:

At the end of the resolution insert the word "each."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to report the following resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an additional clerk to said committee, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $0 per day during the remainder of the present session.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this is the usual resolution passed usually a month before this time by the Committee on Enrolled Bills. It is the same thing that has been done not only in this Congress, but in every preceding Congress of which I have been a member, and those before. It is nothing new; it is the usual thing, except that it comes a month later than before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHARLES E. GLYNN.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I also submit the following resolution to the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Charles E. Glynn, for services for ten days as secretary to Albert D. Shaw, late member of Congress from the Twenty-fourth district, New York, the sum of $35.70, said service being rendered from February 1 to February 10, 1901, inclusive.

Mr. BULL. There is a substitute for that.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, miscellaneous items, 1901, to Charles E. Glynn the sum of $35.70, being the amount due said Glynn for services rendered as clerk to the Hon. Albert D. Shaw, Representative-elect to the Fifty-seventh Congress, who died while a member of the Fifty-sixth Congress, said services having been performed from February 1 to February 10, 1901, inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute in lieu of the original resolution.

The substitute was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 46.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be appointed a committee by the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House to attend the ceremonies incident to transfer of the remains of Gen. William S. Rosecrans from California to the cemetery at Arlington, Va., said committee to be a joint committee of the two Houses.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bills of the following titles:

- H. R. 7250. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret Hendry;
- H. R. 6687. An act granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo Blackman;
- H. R. 3275. An act granting an increase of pension to William G. Johnson;
- H. R. 1190. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert S. Whittier;
- H. R. 1988. An act granting an increase of pension to Helen V. Rorer;
- H. R. 725. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph B. Arbaugh;
- H. R. 809. An act granting an increase of pension to James P. Burchfield;
- H. R. 1714. An act granting an increase of pension to Levi H. Winslow;
- H. R. 10141. An act granting an increase of pension to William R. Armstrong;

H. R. 8048. An act granting an increase of pension to James A. Bramble;
 H. R. 10692. An act granting an increase of pension to David C. Maples;
 H. R. 283. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert M. McCullough;
 H. R. 918. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Misner;
 H. R. 9791. An act granting an increase of pension to John Reep;
 H. R. 9621. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew Y. Transue;
 H. R. 7811. An act granting a pension to Mary King;
 H. R. 5712. An act granting an increase of pension to Alice Bozeman;
 H. R. 5761. An act granting a pension to Thomas F. Walter;
 H. R. 8651. An act granting a pension to Maggie Helmbold;
 H. R. 10415. An act granting a pension to Sarah M. Smith;
 H. R. 8471. An act granting a pension to Eliza A. Wright;
 H. R. 610. An act to correct the military record of John F. Antlitz;
 H. R. 12095. An act to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes relating to the signing of letters patent for inventions;
 H. R. 6196. An act transferring a lot in Woodland Cemetery to city of Quincy, Ill.; and
 H. R. 11053. An act providing for issuance of patent to the town site of Basin City, Wyo., to the municipal authorities thereof for the use and benefit of said town, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:
 H. R. 8696. An act granting an increase of pension to William B. Rowe; and
 H. R. 2770. An act granting an increase of pension to Otilia M. Smoot.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3984. An act granting land for a miners' home—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
 S. 3091. An act granting an increase of pension to Matilda R. Schoomaker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
 S. 4506. An act granting an increase of pension to Ann E. Collier—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
 S. 4749. An act granting an increase of pension to Eunice A. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
 S. 1225. An act granting an increase of pension to Clara W. McNair—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHARLES T. PARKER.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I also submit the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to pay to the widow of the late Charles T. Parker, late printing clerk of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' salary, and funeral expenses not exceeding $250, the same to be immediately available.

The resolution was agreed to.

ABBIE GEORGE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1872) granting an increase of pension to Abbie George.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was concurred in.

ROBERT S. WOODBURY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3910) granting an increase of pension to Robert S. Woodbury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
 To Mr. MOODY of North Carolina, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. BLACKBURN, for six days, on account of important business.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented a petition of Local Union No. 16, Lithographers' International Protective and Beneficial Association, of Louisville, Ky., and a petition of the Charity Organization Society of Louisville, Ky., praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bedford, Ky., and a petition of sundry citizens of Meade County, Ky., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue laws; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HETTFELD presented a petition of Gibbonsville Miners' Union, No. 37, Western Federation of Miners, of Gibbonsville, Idaho, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BERRY presented the memorial of I. W. Duncan, of Fayetteville, Ark., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. TELLER presented a memorial of the legislature of Colorado, favoring the pursuit of a policy in the Philippine Islands which will ultimately insure the independence of the Philippine people and for the establishment of a protectorate in the meanwhile; which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 5. By Mr. H. L. Lubers.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Colorado, in extra session assembled, respectfully petition as follows: That

Whereas the questions now pending before our nation in relation to the Philippines are of vast moment, involving the future history, not only of the Philippines, but of our own country as well, and also requiring new and unlooked-for interpretation of our fundamental laws and principles; and

Whereas, in addition to the question of the contested political sovereignty, there are other subjects and results, accrued and accruing, to wit: The loss of thousands of American lives and tens of thousands of Filipinos, uncounted numbers of widows and orphans, country devastated, a whole people changed from friends to enemies, and hundreds of millions of expense incurred, and the end not yet; and

Whereas it would seem not only meet and proper, but urgently incumbent on all American citizens to consider these great questions and to express their sentiments thereon, to the end that, if possible, further bloodshed and devastation shall cease, that errors may be corrected or avoided, and that right principles be discerned and adopted; and

Whereas the burden of the cry of these people is for their independence, to which, in our opinion, they are as justly entitled as are we to our own, and upon the granting or promising of which we firmly believe all their resistance would cease: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That we deplore that interpretation of religion and protest against the idea of national honor which seeks to compel, by shot or shell, our flag to float over an alien and unwilling people; that while we are expansionists yet we desire our flag to float, not over those who hate, but over those who love it;

Resolved, That our highest national honor and duty, not only to the Filipinos, but also to ourselves, require that we should without delay clearly outline and declare our national policy toward the Filipinos, and that said policy should be along the lines of assisting them to form a stable government, which said government when thus formed should be their government, not ours, and that we should exercise protection over them as we are now doing over Cuba and the South American Republics until such time as they become reasonably established;

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, duly signed by the governor and attested by the secretary of state, shall be forwarded to the President of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

B. F. MONTGOMERY,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

WILLIAM J. HAMILTON,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

D. C. COATES,

President of the Senate.

W. H. KELLEY,

Secretary of the Senate.

JAMES B. ORMAN,

Governor of the State of Colorado.

DAVID A. MILLS,

Secretary of State.

Mr. TELLER presented a memorial of the legislature of Colorado, remonstrating against all national legislation calculated to transfer the control of the volume of money from Congress to any other authority; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint resolution No. 4. By Mr. Ballinger.

Whereas since the panic of 1893 the people of Colorado and the great West have earnestly labored to adjust their affairs so as to meet the changed conditions forced upon them by the almost complete destruction of their then leading industry, pay their debts, preserve their homes, build new ones, and keep the peace within their own borders; and

Whereas through the interposition of Providence in their behalf, in their unprecedented economic struggle, new and unexpected discoveries of gold, of oil, and other natural resources essential to a permanent restoration of a beneficent prosperity have been multiplied until the State of Colorado is now upon the threshold of an unequalled development in every one of her industries; and

Whereas it is reported that a fresh attempt is about to be made in the National Congress to deprive the people of this State and of the nation of a just recompense for their sagacity, enterprise, and thrift, through a process of financial legerdemain by which the volume of our national currency is to be reduced and its control made to pass from the people to an international banking syndicate, by which reduction and transfer the surplus earnings of our people will be filched from them and turned over to a greedy and unpatriotic syndicate of home and foreign manipulators of money and of values, calling itself the world power; and

Whereas the people of Colorado have never shirked any of their obligations as citizens of the Republic, but have faithfully discharged every one of them to the utmost of the spirit as well as the letter of every demand made upon them, in war as in peace: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the general assembly of the State of Colorado (the senate concurring),

First, That the bills now pending in the Congress of the United States which propose to transfer the power to regulate the volume of the circulating medium from the Congress of the United States, or the people, where the people's Constitution has placed it, ought not to be enacted into laws, because to do so would be a betrayal of the rights of the people of the United States, and could possibly have no other effect than their ultimate subjugation to the will of a foreign or international or domestic money trust.

Second, Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to cast their votes and to do everything that they may legally and rightfully do as representatives of the State and of the people to prevent such legislation and to increase rather than diminish the present volume of the circulating medium.

Third, Resolved, That the legislative bodies of our sister States now in session and their representatives in the National Congress be invited to give this impending national calamity their immediate and most earnest consideration, to the exclusion of any and all other business, to the end that, by our united action, most disastrous consequences to our country may be averted.

Fourth, Resolved, That a duly engrossed copy of these resolutions be at once forwarded to each of our Senators and Members in Congress, to the Speaker of the House, and the President of the Senate, in Congress, and to the President of the United States; also that a duly engrossed copy be sent to the presiding officers of each house of the legislature of the several States now in session, and one to the Associated Press, without any delay, with a request for its immediate and widespread publication throughout the United States.

B. F. MONTGOMERY,

Speaker of House of Representatives.

WM. J. HAMILTON,

Chief Clerk.

D. C. COATES,

President of the Senate.

W. H. KELLEY,

Secretary of Senate.

JAMES B. ORMAN,

Governor of State of Colorado.

DAVID A. MILLS,

Secretary of State.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 4993) granting an increase of pension to Jessie S. Copeley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4994) granting an honorable discharge to Robert Colored; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment authorizing the President to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the present senior major-general of the Army to the rank of lieutenant-general, and place him on the retired list with that grade, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate a sum of money sufficient to pay the State of California 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the cash sales of the public lands which have been heretofore made by the United States since the admission of said State, or may hereafter be made in said State, to aid in the support of the public or common schools of said State, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment, proposing to appropriate $45,000 for constructing a modern steel light-ship for Southeast Shoal, Point au Pelee Passage, Lake Erie, and an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,000 to maintain such light-ship, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $225,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of land on Cushings Island, Portland Harbor, Maine, to be used to erect additional batteries and for buildings for the troops, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment, proposing to appropriate $225,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of land on Cushings Island, Portland Harbor, Maine, to be used to erect additional batteries and for buildings for the troops, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be examined the materials furnished and the work and labor done since May 22, 1901, in accordance with the method and system and under the plans of the United States engineer officer in charge, to prevent the erosion of the banks at or near Sawyers Bend in the harbor of St. Louis, so as to improve the channel, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate

$175,000 for the repairs of the jetties at the mouth of the Brazos River, Texas, and also $150,000 for the completion of the existing project at the mouth of that river, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted 12 amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent; which were ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

UNIVERSITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the bill (S. 3943) to establish a university of the United States be recommitted to the Committee to Establish a University of the United States. I was not present when the bill was considered by the committee, and yesterday I notified the chairman, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DEBOE], that I should to-day make a motion to recommit. The motion was agreed to.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

On motion of Mr. PROCTOR, it was Ordered, That H. R. 8306, to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory of the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be reprinted with the Senate amendments numbered.

THE ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. KITTREDGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That pages 33 to 47, inclusive, of Senate Report No. 783, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, being the views of the minority of the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals, be printed as a document.

LIFE-SAVING STATION ON OCRACOE ISLAND, NORTH CAROLINA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10363) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station on Ocracoke Island, on the coast of North Carolina. It is a very short bill.

Mr. STEWART. I will give way for that, but for nothing else. I desire to call up the Indian appropriation bill and continue it this morning. I gave notice yesterday that I should do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not desire to displace the Indian appropriation bill. This bill will take only a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the Indian appropriation bill.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11353) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs will be read.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 4, to insert:

For payment to the Indians occupying the Mille Lac Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay said Indians for improvements made by them, or any of them, upon lands occupied by them on said Mille Lac Indian Reservation, said payment to be made upon investigation, examination, and appraisal by the Secretary of the Interior, upon condition of said Indians removing from said Mille Lac Reservation: Provided, That any Indian who has leased or purchased any Government subdivision of land within said Mille Lac Reservation from or through a person having title to said land from the Government of the United States shall not be required to move from said reservation, but shall be entitled to the benefits of said appropriation to all intents and purposes as though they had removed from said reservation: And provided further, That this appropriation shall be paid only after said Indians shall, by proper council proceedings, have accepted the provisions hereof and declared the manner in which they wish the money disbursed; and said Indians upon removing from said Mille Lac Reservation shall be permitted to take up their residence and obtain allotments in severalty either on the White Earth Reservation or on any of the ceded Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota on which allotments are made to Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 5, to insert:

For paying the expenses of surveying and locating allotments heretofore made upon Net Lake Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 9, to insert:

For payment of the balance due various merchants of Cloquet and Fond du Lac, Minn., from certain Fond du Lac Indians for supplies furnished said Indians at the request of the Indian farmer, as ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, under the provisions of the Indian appropriation act approved June 10, 1898, as follows: H. B. Allen, $24.14; Charles Gasper, $1,049.46; J. A. Rene, $44.91; James A. Wallace, $252.68; Kelly & Moses, $40.49; Mrs. James Peacha, $116.85; James Peacha, $186.12; Frank P. Thompson, $964.51; A. H. Simmons, $178.85; in all, $2,856.11; said sums to be payable out of funds belonging to said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 4, to insert:

For payment to Jean Louis Legare, of the Dominion of Canada, in full compensation for services rendered and money expended in bringing into the United States and procuring the surrender of Sitting Bull and his followers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask if it is proper at this time to offer an amendment? I have one to offer which I wish to come in at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the committee amendments were first to receive consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the head of "Support of schools," on page 69, line 5, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

For the erection of an Indian training school on the Tulalip Reservation, Wash., $30,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 2, before the word "exceeded," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That the number of pupils in any school entitled to the per capita allowance hereby provided for shall be determined by taking the average enrollment for the entire fiscal year and not any fractional part thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Was it the understanding that individual amendments were to be offered to the bill after the reading was completed? I have an amendment that I desire to offer on page 82, and I want to reserve the right to do so.

Mr. STEWART. That will be in order after the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 7, on page 85, line 12, after the word "decendent," to strike out "and if there be both adult and minor heirs, then the minor heirs may join in such sale and conveyance," and insert "but in case of minor heirs their interests shall be sold only;" in line 21, after the word "allottee," to insert:

And when, pursuant to any treaty or agreement with an Indian tribe, or pursuant to any act of Congress relating to Indian allotments, land has been or shall be allotted to a white person without Indian blood who is a citizen of the United States, final patent shall be issued to such white allottee without awaiting the expiration of the usual trust period, and he shall thereupon be authorized to sell or dispose of the land so allotted without restriction.

And on page 86, after the word "children," to insert:

Provided further, That any Indian over the age of 21 years to whom an allotment of land has been or shall hereafter be made may dispose of such land by will, subject to the conditions and limitations of such allotment and in accordance with the laws of the State or Territory in which such land is situate.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That the adult heirs of any deceased Indian to whom a trust or other patent containing restrictions upon alienation has been or shall be issued for lands allotted to him may sell and convey the lands inherited from such decedent, but in case of minor heirs their interests shall be sold only by a guardian duly appointed by the proper court upon the order of such court, made upon petition filed by the guardian, but all such conveyances shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and when so approved shall convey a full title to the purchaser, the same as if a final patent without restriction upon the alienation had been issued to the allottee. And when, pursuant to any treaty or agreement with an Indian tribe, or pursuant to any act of Congress relating to Indian allotments, land has been or shall be allotted to a white person without Indian blood who is a citizen of the United States, final patent shall be issued to such white allottee without awaiting the expiration of the usual trust period, and he shall thereupon be authorized to sell or dispose of the land so allotted without restriction. All allotted land so alienated by the heirs of an Indian allottee and all land so patented to a white allottee shall thereupon be subject to taxation under the laws of the State or Territory where the same is situate: Provided, That the sale herein provided for shall not apply to the homestead during the life of the father, mother, or the minority of any child or children: Provided further, That any Indian over the age of 21 years to whom an allotment of land has been or shall hereafter be made may dispose of such land by will, subject to the conditions and limitations of such allotment and in accordance with the laws of the State or Territory in which such land is situate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 16, to strike out section 8, in the following words:

That the judge for the Indian Territory, appointed under the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," shall reside at Muskogee; and hold terms of court at all places of holding court within the boundaries of the Creek country and the Seminole country, and court shall be held at the places now provided by law in the northern district of the Indian Territory and at the towns of Okmulgee, in the Creek country, and the town of Sallisaw, in the Cherokee country.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the part of the northern district of the Indian Territory consisting of the Creek country, the Seminole country, and that part of the Cherokee country lying west of the Arkansas River be, and the same is hereby, made the western district in said Territory, and the places of holding courts in said western district shall be Muskogee, Wagoner, Sepulpa, Wewoka, Eufaula, and Okmulgee. The judge appointed under the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1897, shall be the judge of said western district, and he is hereby authorized to appoint a clerk, who shall reside and keep his office at one of the places of holding court in said western district. The United States marshal of the present northern district shall be marshal of the western district, and there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a district attorney for said western district, and a United States marshal for the northern district. The said officers shall be appointed and shall hold office for the period of four years, and shall receive the same salary and fees and discharge like duties as other similar officers in said Territory. The cases now pending in that part of the northern district which is hereby made the western district shall be tried the same as if brought in said western district. Terms of court shall continue to be held within the territory remaining in said northern district at the places now provided by law for the holding of courts therein, and in addition thereto at the town of Sallisaw, in the Cherokee country. All laws now applicable to the existing judicial districts in the Indian Territory, and to attorneys, marshals, clerks, and their assistants or deputies therein, not inconsistent herewith, are hereby made applicable to the western district. In addition to the places now provided by law for holding courts in the southern district, courts in that district shall also be held at Tishomingo and Ada.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A committee amendment was passed over on page 49, which will now be stated.

Mr. STEWART. I think that amendment ought to be adopted. On further consultation with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I find that it is necessary to enable him to pay the clerks who were detailed to do this work in the Indian Office in this city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment which was passed over on page 49 will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, after line 22, the Committee on Indian Affairs reported to insert the following:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to allow in the settlement of the accounts of the disbursing officers in charge of the warehouses for Indian supplies such sums as may have been disbursed by them during the fiscal years 1901 and 1902 in payments of clerks appointed to clerkships in such warehouses and detailed for duty in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in Washington, D. C.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada to make a brief explanation of that amendment. I confess I do not understand it.

Mr. STEWART. The clerks referred to were detailed to duty in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in this city from the warehouses, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs tells me there is some difficulty in passing the accounts for their payment in the Comptroller's office. This amendment does not amount to anything, as it is a mere matter of accounts, as I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will excuse an interruption, I should like to ask if these clerks are in the classified service or simply detailed?

Mr. STEWART. They are in the classified service, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that this amendment proposes to cure a difficulty that arises from the fact that these clerks were employed under the warehouse fund and were detailed to duty in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whereas the fund contemplates that they should be employed elsewhere. The statute, which I have before me, authorizes the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to temporarily detail clerks from his office to the warehouses, and this amendment implies that the clerks were detailed from the warehouses to the Indian Office.

Mr. GALLINGER. A reversal.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, a reversal, and so I do not quite understand it. It seems to me that those clerks should not be paid from this fund unless they are employed in the warehouses where the fund should be expended.

Mr. STEWART. It has been suggested that the clerks had to be brought here to close up the accounts. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs was compelled to bring those clerks here in order to have that work done.

Mr. ALLISON. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs could probably do that temporarily.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. But this appears to be a permanent purpose, outside of this fund.

Mr. STEWART. It was necessary that the clerks should be brought here in order to close up the accounts.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me that if this has been done, and it is necessary to cure it by this provision, we ought to provide that it shall not be done in the future. So I would suggest the insertion of a provision to the effect that "hereafter such details to the Indian Office are hereby prohibited."

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Iowa read the provision of the law to which he has referred?

Mr. ALLISON. This is a general statute as to appropriations. It reads:

That no civil officer, clerk, draftsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employee shall, after the 1st day of October next, be employed in any of the Executive Departments, or subordinate bureaus or offices thereof at the seat of government, except only at such rates and in such numbers, respectively, as may be specifically appropriated for by Congress for such clerical and other personal services for each fiscal year; and no civil officer, clerk, draftsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employee shall hereafter be employed at the seat of government in any executive department or subordinate bureau or office thereof or be paid from any appropriation made for contingent expenses, or for any specific or general purpose, unless such employment is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided in the law granting the appropriation, and then only for services actually rendered in connection with and for the purposes of the appropriation from which payment is made, and at the rate of compensation usual and proper for such services, and after the 1st day of October next section 172 of the Revised Statutes, and all other laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the employment of officers, clerks, draftsmen, copyists, messengers, assistant messengers, mechanics, watchmen, laborers, or other employees at a different rate of pay or in excess of the numbers authorized by appropriations made by Congress, be, and they are hereby, repealed; and thereafter all details of civil officers, clerks, or other subordinate employees from places outside of the District of Columbia for duty within the District of Columbia, except temporary details for duty connected with their respective offices, be, and are hereby, prohibited.

If these clerks were here temporarily to perform their special duties, they would be paid under this statute; but if they are here permanently, I take it they could not be so paid, and this provision is intended to cure the difficulty which would be encountered from that statute.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator from Iowa thinks an amendment is necessary to prevent difficulty in this case, I will accept it; but I understand the object of the employment of the clerks to be a temporary one merely, to close up the accounts; and if that be so, I think they can be paid under the existing law. I do not care about the matter particularly.

Mr. ALLISON. I should think they could, but I am not quite sure of it.

Mr. STEWART. But the Commissioner thinks that the clerks can not be paid without the adoption of the provision in the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was not present at the committee meeting when this amendment was inserted in the bill. I know nothing about the matter or the reason why it was inserted, but on looking at it I should suppose that the facts were these: That at the warehouses the clerks were appointed under some authority of law—

Mr. ALLISON. And to be paid out of an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And to be paid out of an appropriation; and that those clerks, in order to close up their accounts, had to come to Washington—

Mr. STEWART. That is the way of it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And that some controversy has arisen between the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the accounting officers of the Treasury, as questions very often do arise there, in which the accounting officers object to accounts. I do not suppose that those clerks have been detailed for permanent service in the Department here. The accounting officers may have thought that they stayed longer than was necessary, or something of that kind. I know nothing about the facts of the case, but I feel very sure—

Mr. ALLISON. I should say, if the Senator will allow me—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will after I finish this sentence. I feel very sure that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs would not attempt to get the permanent services of clerks in the Indian Office here in Washington by an improper detail, and I should not like to believe that he had done so.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me a moment, he knows how technical the accounting officers of the Treasury are at times. It is very possible that the detail of these clerks for temporary work in the Department has not been sufficiently stated to satisfy the proper accounting officer. I do not know what the facts are, but I suppose that is the case.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has prepared an amendment which covers the case.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Connecticut that in line 6, on page 50, in the amendment of the committee, before the word "detailed," there should be inserted the word "temporarily;" so as to read:

In payment of clerks appointed to clerkships in such warehouses and temporarily detailed for duty in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEWART. That is right.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That, I think, will cover the difficulty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 22, the committee propose to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent thereto of the majority of the adult male Indians of the Uintah and the White River tribes of Ute

Indians, to be ascertained as soon as practicable by an inspector, shall cause to be allotted to each head of a family 80 acres of agricultural land which can be irrigated and 40 acres of such land to each other member of said tribes, said allotments to be made prior to October 1, 1903, on which date all the unallotted lands within said reservation shall be restored to the public domain: Provided, That persons entering any of said land under the homestead law shall pay therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any mineral lease which has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or any permit heretofore issued by direction of the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with said Indians for a mineral lease; but any person or company having so obtained such approved mineral lease or such permit to negotiate with said Indians for a mineral lease on said reservation, pending such time and up to thirty days before said lands are restored to the public domain as aforesaid, shall have the preferential right to locate under the mining laws not to exceed 640 acres of contiguous mineral land, except the Raven Mining Company, which may locate 100 mining claims of the character of mineral mentioned in its lease; and the proceeds of the sale of the lands so restored to the public domain shall be applied, first, to the reimbursement of the United States for any moneys advanced to said Indians to carry into effect the foregoing provisions, and the remainder, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be used for the benefit of said Indians. And the sum of $70,064.48 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the Uintah and the White River tribes of Ute Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to be immediately available.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] has an amendment to that amendment, which he desires to offer in pursuance of suggestions made here.

Mr. RAWLINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk, to come in after line 10 of the amendment of the committee, on page 52.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment on page 52, line 10, it is proposed to insert:

Said item of $7,064.48 to be paid to the Uintah and White River Utes to cover claims which these Indians have made on account of the allotment of lands on the Uintah Reservation to Uncompahgre Indians and for which the Government has received from said Uncompahgre Indians money aggregating $90,064.48, and the remaining $10,000 claimed by the Indians under an act of Congress detaching a small part of the reservation on the east and under which act the proceeds of the sale of the lands were to be applied for the benefit of the Indians. This amount to be advanced as a compromise in settlement of these claims and to remove all objection of the Indians to taking allotments and the opening of said reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment—

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator will wait until the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I supposed the committee amendments had been disposed of.

Mr. STEWART. No; and we have not disposed of the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 23, the Committee on Indian Affairs reported an amendment to insert the following:

For payment to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota entitled thereto, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, the money now to their credit in the Treasury of the United States derived from stumpage on dead and down timber cut on ceded Indian lands under the act of June 7, 1897 (30 Stats., p. 90).

Mr. CLAPP. In regard to that clause I would suggest, after the word "as," in line 25, to strike out the word "he" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior;" and then, at the end of the provision in line 5 on page 63, to avoid any question, I would suggest adding these words: "and which money is hereby appropriated for said purpose." Then there can be no question about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment stated by the Senator from Minnesota has already been agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I did not know that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, line 5, of the amendment of the committee, after the word "ninety," it is proposed to insert "and which money is hereby appropriated for said purpose."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

Mr. LODGE. Is that the amendment on page 63?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment on page 63, commencing in line 6, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Indian Affairs propose to insert on page 63, after line 5, the following:

For payment to the trustee or executor or administrator of the estate of Eli Ayres, deceased, the sum of $155,200, the same being the amount of the purchase money paid by the said Eli Ayres in his lifetime, for 134 sections of land situate in the State of Mississippi, at $1.25 per acre, the price agreed upon, to the Chickasaw reservees, the owners in fee of said lands, under and by virtue of the treaty made by the United States with the Chickasaw Indians in 1834, upon the sale and conveyance to the said Eli Ayres by said reservees of said lands in conformity with the requirements of said treaty, and which said lands were subsequently appropriated, sold, and disposed of by the Government of the United States without authority of law and without regard to the rights acquired by said Eli Ayres by virtue of said purchase in and to said lands, and with knowledge of the fact that said Indian grantors of said Ayres had already sold and deeded said lands to him under the terms of said treaty: Provided, That such payment, when made, shall operate as a settlement in full between the said representatives of the estate of said Eli Ayres and the United States, and shall further operate to forever quiet all such land titles in the State of Mississippi conveyed to the said Ayres affected by reason of the premises. (Reimbursable.)

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] made a point of order on that amendment under clause 4 of Rule XVI, that it was an amendment carrying a private claim, and not called for by the provisions of any existing law or the stipulations of any treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order has already been made?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the point of order was made by the Senator from Connecticut yesterday when I had the honor of occupying the chair.

Mr. STEWART. I doubt whether that point of order is well taken. The amendment is for the disposition of Indian funds that are in the Treasury—putting them where they properly ought to be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the payment provided for by law or is it contained in any treaty stipulation?

Mr. STEWART. It grows out of a treaty stipulation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may say a word on that point, I will say that I took occasion to examine the treaty yesterday, and there is absolutely no treaty stipulation for the payment of a claim of this character. The treaty referred to in the amendment is a treaty with the Chickasaw Indians for the regulation of certain land claims bought as lands of the Indians, which claims the United States subsequently sold and received the money therefor. It is a question between the claimant and the United States. There is no stipulation in that treaty to pay this claimant or any other claimant.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, has any Senator got the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the point of order?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. Has the Chair decided the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, this is an amendment which was taken from a bill to quiet title to certain lands in Mississippi, and in that point of view I think it is not amenable to the objection made to it on the point of order. With all due deference to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the provision does arise out of treaty stipulations with the Chickasaw Indians, made in 1832 and 1834, under which those Indians were permitted to retain their residence in Mississippi and to have a reservation of 640 acres of land and to dispose of that. In the treaty of 1834 there was made a deed in fee to those Indians. This purchase was made in 1829 under this power granted by the treaty.

I will say that the supreme court of Mississippi and the Supreme Court of the United States have decided this point. It was in a case in which the claimant for the money paid out got a power of attorney from the Indians concerned. It is reported in the Mississippi reports, and I believe in 18 Wallace, United States Reports, and this very point was decided, that these Indians had a right in fee to these lands; that their right to grant and convey was perfect; that the Chickasaw Indians in the tribe had no right to the land, and that the United States had no right to the land; that it was the property in fee of these Indians, and that they had a right to dispose of it.

Now, the deed was not perfected by the signature of the President, because under a misconception of the law the officers of the Interior Department did not present it, but refused to present the deed to him.

I do not care to argue at this time the merits of the case, but upon the point of order it seems to me clear that this is a matter which can be carried on the pending bill, because it is to settle a tax title to a large quantity of land, amounting to 150 sections of land in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss this claim on its merits, because if it is to be discussed on its merits it will take a good deal of time; but on the point of order the facts are just these: Under the treaty mentioned there, made with the Chickasaw Indians, they had a right to select some lands in the State of Mississippi; that they did go forward and make the selections, and that certain of the Indians, after having made the selections, sold, as it is claimed, lands to Eli Ayres; that the Government afterwards, not recognizing the rights of the Indians, sold the lands as belonging to the Government, and what this claim is for is to have the United States pay to the representatives of Eli Ayres the money which it got for these lands. It is a private claim on the part of Eli Ayres and his descendants against the United States for having sold lands which they claim belonged to Eli Ayres. It has nothing to do with a treaty at all.

Mr. STEWART. It is a little different from that. When the lands were sold the money was covered into the Treasury and kept as a distinct fund, and interest has been paid on it for the benefit of the Indians—$58,000. It has paid interest on it up to date. The Indians have received their pay for the land, as they acknowledge. They are not entitled to it. Still the interest has been paid to them all this time. It seems to me it is not quite an ordinary claim.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this case rests upon the failure of the Government of the United States to carry out a treaty which it made with the Indians. The Government of the United States agreed that certain Indians might select land, and it made a grant to those Indians, so the Supreme Court said; not a contract to make a deed, but made a grant. These Indians selected the land, and sold the land to Mr. Ayres. He complied with every provision of the law that had been laid down and was thereupon entitled to a deed from the Indians, to be approved by the President of the United States, which the treaty required to make it valid.

The authorities declined afterwards to approve, and so the title did not pass out of the Indians into their grantee, Mr. Ayres, but remained in the Indians, and not as the Senator from Connecticut says, that it was supposed to remain in the United States. The Government of the United States insisted that it did not belong to the individual Indians, but belonged to the tribe, and thereupon sold the greater portion of it at auction for sums of all sorts, amounting to less than a third of what Mr. Ayres had paid for the property, and turned the money into the Treasury, not as its property, but into the Treasury as the property of the Indians, and proceeded to invest it at 5 per cent interest.

Mr. Ayres, unable to get a deed carrying to him the title, prosecuted two cases in the name of his grantors (Indians) in the State of Mississippi, and the supreme court of Mississippi sustained Ayres's title. Another case came to the United States Supreme Court—Best v. Polk, 18 Wallace—which Judge Davis decided, and he decided first that the treaty created, when it was approved, a grant to the Indians, not a contract for a title, but absolute title in the Indians, and that they had a right to sell. He decided also that Mr. Ayres had complied with every requirement of the treaty and that Mr. Ayres was entitled to the approval of the deed by the President of the United States, which would have conveyed all of the Indian title to Mr. Ayres.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not see how the court could have decided that Mr. Ayres complied with any provision of the treaty. He simply bought from the Indians. He had nothing to do in order to complete his title.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator does not know as much about this case as I do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Perhaps not. I think I do, however.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is very ignorant of the facts, judging from his statement, at least.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Or the Senator from Colorado is if he differs with me.

Mr. TELLER. The treaty provided certain steps to be taken before the Indians could part with the title. The court held that the Indians and Mr. Ayres had taken every step required, and that all that remained to be done was that the President should approve the deed, which was necessary to make it a valid deed. So in equity Mr. Ayres was the owner of the property, but not in law.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But, Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I want this little difference between the Senator from Colorado and myself understood. I do not think we shall disagree. The Senator said that Mr. Ayres had complied with the provisions of the treaty which were necessary to perfect the title.

Mr. TELLER. He did. I say so now.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. He had nothing to do with perfecting the title. He purchased of the Indians. The Senator now says that the Indians of whom Mr. Ayres purchased did everything that was necessary to complete the title.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is sticking in the bark.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not at all.

Mr. TELLER. That is all it is. Mr. Ayres had certain things to do. He had to pay for the land. He had to pay an amount that two men, who were designated out of a certain number, would agree was a proper payment. Then the Indians had to sign and do certain things, and Judge Davis held that everything had been done, that there was nothing further to be done, except for the President to approve the deed, and that it was obligatory on the President to approve the deed. The President never did approve the deed. He has not approved it yet.

Thereupon in one of the cases the Government having sold the land, Congress provided by an appropriation for the payment to the man who got the land under a patent of the United States for the loss of the land, leaving the land of course in the Indians, where it is still subsisting, so far as I know, although I believe in point of fact the white man who had the invalid patent stayed on there and still holds it. I have been told so. I do not know whether that is a fact or not.

Here is a case where a citizen of the United States invested $155,200. That is in proof. There is nothing to the contrary unless somebody will get up here and say that he did not, and he can not back it up by a single particle of proof, because the testimony is ample that he did pay it; that the Indians made the deed; that they were the owners in fee, but incapable under their condition of making a title except with the approval of the President, which they could not get; and Mr. Ayres, now dead, and his heirs have been kept out of this property since 1839, and they have been here ever since trying to get some relief. Of course during the war there was a time when this proceeding was suspended. But every report ever made declares that this man has been guilty of no laches, and there have been four reports made in the other branch of Congress in his favor and four in this. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1882 or 1883 reported in his favor. The Secretary of the Interior at that time approved also of the finding.

The controversy between the Senator from Connecticut and the committee is this: The Senator says Mr. Ayres ought to have fifty-eight thousand and some odd dollars which the Government received for the sale of a portion of his land.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not admit that he ought to have that, but I did at one time agree that if the amount were limited to that sum, I would consent to it to settle and get the claim out of the way; to compose it.

Mr. TELLER. The Government repudiated the purchase, not upon the ground that it was not made in good faith, for every branch of the Government which has dealt with the question has declared that it was made in good faith. There are two reports from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that it was made in good faith. But it was upon the ground that these reservees were not entitled to take the land. The Supreme Court, absolutely without any qualification, held that they were entitled to take it. They settled that question, and the property was theirs.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Did the Supreme Court hold that these reservees were entitled to it?

Mr. TELLER. They did.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In the case of Best v. Polk?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; and the other case escapes me for the moment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That was not this particular case, but a different case altogether, was it not?

Mr. TELLER. Not at all. It was these two Indians who made their title good, and the Commission which was authorized to determine who was entitled to this land held that these two who made good their title were, and that all the others, in fact, stood on the same ground.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think that appears from the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Best v. Polk.

Mr. TELLER. I say positively that it does.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have just had it here and read it, and if the Senator will read it, he will see that the evidence was excluded. There is nothing in that case to show whether they were the parties who had been found by the Chickasaws to be entitled or whether they were not, as I read the case.

Mr. TELLER. But they determined that the Commission had a right to settle that question, and that that finding had never been set aside, and that they had not any right to set it aside. Thereupon the Government assumed to sell a hundred and forty-odd pieces of this land, and it received at public sale $38,000. I could give the exact amount, and will if we debate the question on its merits. It received the money into the Treasury, selling the property, as I say, for a third of what Mr. Ayres had paid for it, according to the evidence, and probably selling it for very, very much less than it was worth, even if they had sold it for what he had paid for it, for it was worth even more.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Can the Senator tell us why the money was paid before the purchaser obtained the deed?

Mr. TELLER. The Supreme Court said he had to pay the money before he could get the deed. The President would not approve the deed until the money had been paid. You will find that in the case if you will look it over.

Mr. BURTON. Then, after it was paid, he refused to approve it?

Mr. TELLER. Then, after it was paid, the President refused. I say the President. Of course, it was then in the War Department, and the War Department refused. That is the truth about it.

Mr. MONEY. I will ask the Senator if the President ever had an opportunity to sign the deed—whether he was ever afforded by the Department an opportunity?

Mr. TELLER. No; I suppose the War Department never presented it. The Secretary of War in those days acted as Secretary of the Interior. Perhaps it never was presented to the President, but he never did approve it, and it was his duty to do it, the court said. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Price, who was a careful man, reported in favor of the whole claim. I approved of his finding as Secretary of the Interior. So I have had some acquaintance with this claim, and as a member of the Committee on Claims I have reported it at this session of the Senate for $155,200. The $58,000 was reported, I suppose, upon the theory that the Government had got that money, and therefore the Government could not lose anything if it paid it back, but totally ignoring what the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs found in 1882 or 1883. But if he is entitled to that money, he is entitled also to the interest on it which the Government has been getting, which would make the claim $60,000 more than the present report makes it.

I merely desired to debate this matter far enough to show whether this is not one of those cases that fall within the rule of carrying out a treaty; whether it does not arise out of a treaty stipulation, and so is outside of the Senate rule. It seems to me it does. While it has been before the Committee on Claims, it is a proper case for the committee, if it sees fit, to take jurisdiction of, which it has done. It seems to me it is close enough to that principle that it is entitled to remain upon this bill, and that it is not amenable to the objection made by the Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from Massachusetts, whichever it may be, that it is a purely private claim. It is a claim arising as clearly out of a treaty as any claim can possibly arise, it seems to me.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. He will hear the Senator from North Dakota, however.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to understand what is the objection. I did not hear the point of order that was raised.

Mr. STEWART. That it is a private claim.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply wish to know what is the point of order raised by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The point of order I made was that, under clause 4 of Rule XVI, this is an amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim. The rule provides:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation.

This does neither.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is correct, that the Government sold land belonging to Eli Ayres and this claim is based upon that, I can see the connection of the objection to the matter. But that is not a correct statement. Eli Ayres had no title to those lands. All he had was an inchoate right, one which might be prosecuted for the purpose of securing specific performance and nothing more. Now, to whom did the land belong? To the Indians, as already held by the Supreme Court of the United States. How did they get it? They got it under a treaty. So the title of the Indians is a treaty title. The Government turned around and sold the property, belonging to the Indians, which they obtained under a specific treaty.

Mr. LODGE. This is not an Indian claim.

Mr. McCUMBER. The claim may not be an Indian claim, but the person who has the right to receive the money, a mere equitable right, is Mr. Ayres, simply because the Indians had been paid, and the Government has so ruled.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Chair for a moment to a view which perhaps has not been discussed. The question raised by the point of order, as it seems to me, is whether this provision of the appropriation bill is to carry out the provisions of an existing law. That is all there is of it. What was the law? In 1834 Congress passed an act in behalf of the Chickasaw Indians. There were just two propositions in that act—first, that those Chickasaws should have a title; second, that they should have the right to alienate that title just as a white man might. Those are the two propositions.

Suppose, sir, that instead of the claim being in favor of Eli Ayres, it were in favor of a Chickasaw Indian who had title by virtue of that act, and the Government of the United States had taken that land, contrary to its engagement, and converted it into money, and this were an appropriation to that Chickasaw Indian for the proceeds of the land. Would the point of order lie, Mr. President? Would not the claim of the Chickasaw Indian here rest down upon that act, and would it not be in accordance with existing law to pay him the proceeds of that land? Can there be any doubt about it? His right is bottomed on that statute, an existing law, and could you raise a point of order against the Chickasaw? Manifestly not. Let us see.

That statute not only conferred title on the Chickasaw, but it conferred upon him the right of alienation, just as sacred a right as the other, and we are just as much bound to preserve it. He did alienate, pursuant to that statute, to Eli Ayres, and therefore, if you admit the second proposition I make, namely, the right of the Chickasaw to alienate, Eli Ayres stands here, by virtue of existing law, precisely where the Indian would stand by virtue of existing law, by virtue of the enactment which says that the Chickasaw may alienate to Eli Ayres, and when you interrupt or interfere with that right you are in contravention of existing law.

Now, Mr. President, the principle of equity everywhere recognized is that wherever land is sold and a fund is created the parties who have an equity to the land have the same equity to the fund. In equity the fund takes the place of the land, and the same rights and the same equities exist to the fund that would exist to the land. Here is this fund, which represents that land. Eli Ayres's claim to it is just as good as if it still remained in the form of land. Therefore it seems to me there is a construction of the fourth proposition of Rule XVI which will well enable the presiding officer to rule that this amendment to the appropriation bill is a recognition of the original Chickasaw's right, of his right to alienate, and that Eli Ayres, standing here as the representative of the Chickasaw, is clothed with the same right under existing law that the original Chickasaw would have, and that when you pay Eli Ayres you are carrying out and effectuating an existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin misapprehends the rule. He may be correct in his statement of what the law provides, but he misapprehends evidently the purpose of the rule. When the rule says that appropriations must be to carry out existing law, it means an existing law which provides for an appropriation and not as to the rights of parties at all. Certainly that act could not be construed to authorize an appropriation to be made to pay somebody who may have bought lands either from Indians or anybody else or to repay any man. The existing law must provide for the payment which is to be carried out by an appropriation. It has no reference whatever to the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TURNER. Are amendments now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the amendments of the committee were first to be disposed of. Are there any other committee amendments that were passed over?

Mr. STEWART. There are not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington is in order with his amendment. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert on page 58, at the end of line 16:

That the mineral lands only in the Spokane Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, shall be subject to entry under the laws of the United States in relation to the entry of mineral lands: Provided, That lands allotted to the Indians or used by the Government for any purpose, or by any school, shall not be subject to entry under this provision.

Mr. STEWART. The committee have examined that amendment and are in favor of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURNER. I submit the following letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in explanation of the amendment just agreed to:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., April 5, 1902.

SIR: Referring to the proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill opening for mineral entry Spokane Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, under the laws of the United States, provided that lands allotted to the Indians or used by the Government for any purpose or by any school shall not be subject to entry under such provision, I will state that the office has no objection whatever to this amendment.

Respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

HON. GEORGE TURNER,
United States Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. On page 68, at the end of line 9, I move to insert:

That the proviso to the act of August 15, 1894 (28 Stat., 295), permitting the sale of allotted lands by members of the Citizens' Band of Pottawatomie Indians and of the Absentee Shawnee Indians of Oklahoma, as enlarged by the act of May 31, 1900 (31 Stat., 247), is hereby extended to the Wyandotte Indians of Indian Territory who were given allotments under the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat., 388), and to their heirs; and all conveyances under this act shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "exceeded," in line 2, page 82, I move to insert the following proviso:

That rations shall not be withheld from any Indians by reason only of attendance at any other than a Government school.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make a point of order on that amendment. It is general legislation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the paragraph under consideration is one providing for the support of Indian schools. The Government in acquiring the territory from Indians on more than half of these reservations stipulated as one of the conditions on which the land was to be transferred to the United States and given up by the Indians that the Indian children should be educated and that rations should be issued to the members of the tribe. There were other provisions. I will not take the time to read them. I could read a dozen of them, but there is no question about that being the case. This amendment is to carry out treaty stipulations making provision that rations shall be issued to these children.

Some time last year the Commissioner of Indian Affairs reversed the action of the Department in this matter. Up to that time the ruling had been that whenever under the treaty agreements any Indians on a reservation were entitled to rations, by reason of the fact of their being in a contract school or a private school, they were not deprived of their right to those rations; that they were entitled to the rations under the treaty, and their going to a school on the reservation did not deprive them of any rights they had, if they were outside of a Government school and on the reservation. The Commissioner made a ruling last summer in which he held that while the Indians might be entitled, under the treaty, to rations, and draw their rations as members of the tribe on the reservation, if they attended a contract school by reason of that fact they should not be entitled to rations.

It seems to me that it is an arbitrary ruling directly in violation of the law. If there is an obligation on the part of the Government to supply these people with rations, the fact that they prefer to go to a private school instead of going to a Government school should not deprive them of the right to have rations. That is the whole case in a nutshell.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is a revival in a modified form of the appropriation to the contract schools. It is proposed to be delivered in the form of rations. That whole subject has been debated here at great length and Congress arrived at a decision. The whole system of appropriating for contract schools was abolished after elaborate discussion, and abolished gradually during a period extending over five or six years. If we do this, we return to the old general legislation, and we change the existing law in regard to the schools. It is not estimated for, not provided for, and not reported by any committee. It seems to me that it is clearly obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Massachusetts does not seem to get the point. I read a paragraph from the agreement with the Sioux of North Dakota and the Northern Cheyenne of Montana:

In consideration of the foregoing cession of territory * * * the United States does agree to provide all necessary aid to assist the said Indians in the work of civilization; * * * to provide the said Indians with subsistence consisting of a ration for each individual of a pound and a half of beef, etc., * * * such rations, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be continued until the Indians are able to support themselves. Rations shall in all cases be issued to the head of each separate family; and whenever schools shall have been provided by the Government for said Indians no rations shall be issued for children between the ages of 6 and 14 years * * * unless said children shall regularly attend school.

The effect of the amendment as I offer it is to allow children who are attending private schools to draw the rations that they would be entitled to receive if they were not attending the schools; that is all. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has no right to visit a punishment upon an Indian because he chooses to attend a private school instead of going to a Government school. He has no moral right or any other right to do it.

I do not think the point made by the Senator from Massachusetts is good at all. This is not an appropriation for the support of contract schools. It is simply a proposition to carry out the Government obligation to furnish rations to these Indians where the treaties require that rations shall be supplied.

Mr. STEWART. This matter is very fully set forth in the opinion of the Attorney-General, and as it will take only a few minutes, I send it to the desk and ask that it be read, so that the Senate may understand exactly what is involved in the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Attorney-General does not discuss the point of order, I suppose.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. He states what the law is.

Mr. STEWART. I can wait until the point of order has been passed upon before it is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes that the amendment is general legislation and subject to the point of order.

Mr. STEWART. Then that is the end of it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the opinion of the Attorney-General go into the RECORD.

Mr. STEWART. Very well, let it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it will be printed in the RECORD.

The opinion referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 10, 1902.

The PRESIDENT.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo inclosing communications addressed to the honorable the Secretary of the Interior by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with reference to an application by the Rt. Rev. William H. Hare, missionary bishop of the Episcopal Church, in which Bishop Hare requests that the Interior Department distribute the rations and annuities for Indian children of the Sioux tribe through the mission schools of his church, when the children are in the care of these schools. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for reasons which are fully set forth in his communication of January 6, 1902, has declined to grant this application, and you request my opinion as to whether "the position of the Interior Department in this matter is correct."

These annuities and rations are, at the present time, paid to Indians of the Sioux tribe under the appropriation bill of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. L., 1069), by which it is provided as follows:

"For subsistence of the Sioux and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement, ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $900,000: Provided, That this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat transportation, and in this service Indians shall be employed when practicable. And provided further, That the number of rations issued shall not exceed the number of Indians on each reservation, and any excess in the number of rations issued shall be disallowed in the settlement of the agent's account."

It thus appears that the appropriation in question is made in execution of an agreement with the Sioux Indians which was ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877 (19 Stat. L., 254).

A reference to the agreement which was thus ratified discloses the following obligation on the part of the Government in the matter:

"ARTICLE 5. In consideration of the foregoing cession of territory and rights and upon full compliance with each and every obligation assumed by the said Indians, the United States does agree to provide all necessary aid to assist the said Indians in the work of civilization; to furnish to them schools and instruction in mechanical and agricultural arts, as provided for by the treaty of 1868; also to provide the said Indians with subsistence consisting of a ration: r each individual of a pound and a half of beef (or in lieu thereof one-half pound of bacon), one-half pound of flour, and one-half pound of corn; and for every 100 rations, 4 pounds of coffee, 8 pounds of sugar, and 3 pounds of beans, or in lieu of said articles the equivalent thereof, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Such rations, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be continued until the Indians are able to support themselves. Rations shall, in all cases, be issued to the head of each separate family; and whenever schools shall have been provided by the Government for said Indians, no rations shall be issued for children between the ages of 6 and 14 years (the sick and infirm excepted) unless such children shall regularly attend school. Whenever the said Indians shall be located upon lands which are suitable for cultivation, rations shall be issued only to the persons and families of those persons who labor (the aged, sick, and infirm excepted); and as an incentive to industrious habits the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may provide that such persons be furnished in payment for their labor such other necessary articles as are requisite for civilized life. The Government will aid said Indians as far as possible in finding a market for their surplus productions, and in finding employment, and will purchase such supplies, as far as may be required, for supplying food to those Indians, parties to this agreement, who are unable to sustain themselves; and will also employ Indians, so far as practicable, in the performance of Government work upon their reservation."

It is apparent, therefore, that the character of the rations to be distributed is left to the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the qualification that no rations shall be issued for children between certain ages unless they regularly attend a Government school, where such is provided, and further, that the family shall be treated as a unit for the purposes of distribution, and the rations or the equivalent thereof shall be issued to the head of such families. Congress has furthermore provided in the act of June 7, 1897 (30 Stat. L., 79) that it is "the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school," and by the act of March 1, 1899 (30 Stat. L., 942), contracts were authorized with sectarian schools at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for Indian children, and after providing for an equitable division of such appropriations between schools of the different denominations, Congress adds: "This being the final appropriation for sectarian schools." While these provisions may only refer to direct appropriations to sectarian schools, yet the issuance of rations to them for the benefit of Indian children in their care would certainly offend the spirit of the acts of Congress last cited, for in saving the necessary expense of maintenance it would have the beneficial effect of a direct appropriation. I am therefore of opinion that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who must respect the settled policy of the Government as thus declared by Congress, has no authority to grant Bishop Hare's application.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully,

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. On page 72, line 23, after the word "necessary," I move to insert:

For heating system, $10,000, in addition to the $5,000 and $10,000 heretofore appropriated, which are reappropriated, and all made immediately available; for electric-light plant, $200, in addition to the $1,800 and $1,200 heretofore appropriated, and now reappropriated, all of the amounts hereby appropriated for steam-heating system and electric-light plant to be immediately available.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is a mere reappropriation of the amount.

Mr. STEWART. So I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What did the Senator from Nevada say?

Mr. STEWART. I say I have no objection to this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The total amount will have to be changed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will move an amendment changing the total.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. On page 72, line 23, it will be necessary to change the total amount to $89,000 instead of $60,800, so as to include the money reappropriated.

The SECRETARY. In line 23, before the word "dollars," strike out "sixty thousand eight hundred" and insert "eighty-nine thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In connection with this amendment I desire to have inserted in the RECORD a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs covering the argument in favor of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

The communication referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 3, 1902.

SIR: In the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1900 there were appropriated for the Fort Totten Indian School, North Dakota, for steam-heating system $5,000, for electric-light plant $1,800, and in the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1901 there were appropriated for steam heating $10,000, this to be in addition to the sum of $5,000 heretofore appropriated for the purpose, which sum was reappropriated, and for a lighting plant $1,200, this being in addition to the sum of $1,800 heretofore appropriated for such purpose, which sum was reappropriated, making total amount for steam heating $15,000 and for electric-light plant $3,000. There has been great difficulty, as you are aware, in getting the necessary plans and specifications drawn for the utilization of these two amounts, and bids were opened, after proper advertisement, in this office on January 24, 1902.

The lowest bid for the electric-light plant was $3,175, and for the steam-heating system $24,208. The same party bidding on steam heating bid $3,840 for electric light, but if awarded both contracts would do the entire job for $30,700. As will be noticed, the combined bid includes the electric light at $3,840, which is out of all reason as compared with the lowest bid—$3,175. As you are aware, Fort Totten School is an abandoned military post consisting of a number of brick buildings erected around a quadrangle. To successfully heat this plant is a most difficult undertaking. However, in view of the cheapness of coal in that section of the country, after being once installed the cost of maintenance would be practically much lighter than it is at present, with the numberless stoves and danger from fire. From the investigations of this office it has developed that a heating plant for the Fort Totten School can not be successfully installed for the amount of the appropriation—$15,000—and if the original ideas in reference to this matter are to be carried out it seems necessary to secure an additional appropriation for this purpose. It is believed that if the appropriation could be made to read:

"Ten thousand dollars for a heating system, in addition to the $5,000 and $10,000 heretofore appropriated, which are reappropriated and all made immediately available; and also $200 for electric-light plant, in addition to the $1,800 and $1,200 heretofore appropriated, and now reappropriated, all of which to be immediately available" the proper systems of heating and lighting could be secured for this school.

I desire to say that the prospects of success for the Fort Totten School were never brighter than at present. This school is filled beyond the limit of its capacity. Under the present superintendent, who has had the hearty cooperation of the agent, there has been no difficulty in securing a full attendance of the Indians of Devils Lake and Turtle Mountain for this Fort Totten School. It is the only school in North Dakota.

All bids for electric light and steam heating have been rejected, and therefore nothing further can be done, and the appropriations must lapse into the Treasury unless you deem it advisable to secure the additional appropriations as above set out.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES,
Commissioner.

Hon. H. C. HANSBROUGH,
United States Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suggest that it is not necessary to include the amount reappropriated in the total amount.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It, however, would be covered into the Treasury if it is not used.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But my point is that it does not seem to be necessary or proper to put the amount reappropriated into the total which is appropriated.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not insist upon it at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What would be the total, then, without the amount reappropriated?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It would be $71,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be agreed to in the absence of objection.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Now, Mr. President, I have another amendment here, which carries no appropriation and simply provides for the construction of a bridge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.
The SECRETARY. Insert the following at the end of the bill:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to permit the construction of a free bridge to span the narrows of Devils Lake, in the State of North Dakota, at the point on the south shore of Devils Lake 63 chains and 70 links due north and 33 chains and 30 links due west of the southeast corner of section 23 in township 132 north, of range 63 west, of the fifth principal meridian. If said bridge shall abut on an Indian allotment, the consent of the allottee shall first be obtained. The Secretary may also authorize the taking of stone from the shores of the lake on the reservation side in the construction of the said bridge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is the purpose of the amendment? It seems to me that if a bridge ought to be provided for it should be done in a separate bill. Certainly there ought to be some explanation, showing the necessity for it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The amendment simply authorizes the Secretary to allow a bridge to be constructed which abuts on an Indian reservation. It is in the precise language of an amendment on the same subject which I had put in the last Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is not the intention that the Secretary of the Interior shall construct the bridge?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Not at all; it is to be constructed by private parties.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. For whose benefit is the bridge to be constructed?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The public.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is on an Indian reservation?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Not wholly; one end of it abuts on an Indian reservation and the other on private land.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that the amendment should come in on page 55, line 5, after the word "dollars."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to changing the place of the last amendment? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer an amendment to be inserted after line 17, page 44. It has been reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 17, insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a fee simple patent to Elizabeth McKinny, a citizen of Pottawatomie, for the land purchased by the said Elizabeth McKinny from the United States under the act of May 23, 1872, and located in Cleveland County, Okla. T., and described as follows, to wit: Lot numbered 4, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 1, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 2, all in township 5 north, of range 1 east, Indian meridian, containing 157.41 acres.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer another amendment, to be inserted after the amendment which has just been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after the amendment which has just been adopted, insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patents in fee to Mary Keith and Benny Keith, Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, for the lands heretofore allotted to them in the Territory of Oklahoma, to wit: The northeast quarter of section 11, township 12 north, range 6 west, and the east half of the northwest quarter and lots 5 and 6 of section 8, township 12 north, range 7 west of the Indian meridian; and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the vote on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be taken in gross?

Mr. COCKRELL. The committee amendment on page 49, striking out "ten" and inserting "eight," before "thousand," and the amendment to it, should be reserved. Let the others be concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that an amendment may be reserved, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 14, the amendment striking out "ten" and inserting "eight," before "thousand," and the amendment following that at the bottom of the page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to taking the vote on the rest in gross? The Chair hears none.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. HALE. Let the unfinished business be laid aside for a few minutes.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until we can finish the Indian appropriation bill. It will not take more than five minutes to dispose of the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the reserved amendment which has been stated.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask that the Senate do not concur in the amendment on page 49, line 14, where the word "ten" was stricken out before "thousand" and "eight" inserted; so as to make the clause read:

To maintain at the city of Omaha, Nebr., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian service, $8,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment striking out "ten" and inserting "eight" in line 14, page 49.

Mr. STEWART. Let it be nonconcurrent in.

The amendment was nonconcurrent in.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I ask that in the St. Louis amendment the amount be made the same as in the amendment in regard to the Omaha warehouse. The Commissioner recommends $10,000 as the amount. The clause will then read:

To maintain at the city of St. Louis, Mo., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian service, $10,000.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the proposition of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. To add $2,000 more for the Indian warehouse at St. Louis, so as to make the amount $10,000.

Mr. HALE. It is only $2,000 more for St. Louis.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the same as the amendment which has been allowed at Omaha, Nebr.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to changing the amount to $10,000? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is made.

Mr. QUARLES. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 20, page 8, insert:

Provided, That $5,000 of this sum, or so much thereof as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior may be deemed necessary, shall be used for the introduction of the willow industry among Indian tribes and on Indian reservations where it may be deemed feasible.

Mr. QUARLES. I will modify the amendment by changing the word "shall" to "may."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the phrase is changed to "may be used," I will not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE A. K. MORRIS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States: which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with copies of the correspondence called for by the Senate resolution of March 26, 1902, in regard to the claim of George A. K. Morris against the Government of Nicaragua for injuries done to his property by Nicaraguan troops in 1863.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, April 5, 1902.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, the pending measure is to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States and to any territory under its jurisdiction. The prohibition, however, does not apply to the return to the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent therein, or property of the value of $1,000, or debts of a like amount due him therein and pending settlement.

The bill does not prohibit the admission of Chinese officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure.

Since the comprehensive, luminous, and able argument of the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], with respect to the numerous specific provisions of the bill, I shall not dwell at length upon them, but shall deal with the subject in a somewhat general way, and as briefly as I may.

It can not be doubted that we have an absolute right to enact such laws as will safeguard our citizenship against contaminating influences from any quarter of the globe. More than this, the duty to preserve the purity of the currents which vitally affect the standard of our citizenship is plain and imperative. Our national policy has always been a broad and generous one. We have been hospitable to all of those born beneath alien skies who desire to come and make their homes with us, and for many years we imposed upon those seeking admission no conditions or restrictions whatsoever. Millions from abroad have been added to our citizenship and have participated in the development and upbuilding of our nation. In comparatively recent years Congress has deemed it a wise policy to discriminate and to exclude from all quarters those vicious, immoral, and undesirable elements which would not add to the well-being of our society. The restricted classes have been few, indeed. We have denied admission to idiots, insane persons, paupers, or persons liable to become a public charge, persons with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, persons who have been convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, polygamists, assisted immigrants, contract, and Chinese laborers.

There were no restrictive laws prior to 1875. In that year Chinese Coolie trade was interdicted.

No one who gives serious thought to the question will insist that our present immigration laws are unduly restrictive. The exclusion of the elements indicated would seem to be dictated only by a wholesome regard for our own welfare.

During the last decade the total immigration to the United States was 3,615,163. During the year 1901, 487,918 were added to our population from abroad, or enough to found a city nearly two and a half times larger than the city of Indianapolis. Enough are annually coming to our shores to make a city larger than the city of Cincinnati, and nearly as large as the combined cities of San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle.

At the rate of our immigration for last year there will be added to our population in six years enough to found a State as large and populous as the State of Indiana.

This immigration does not include any appreciable number of Chinese, and the query naturally arises, What would be the total annual immigration with no restrictive laws safeguarding the Pacific coast against the admission of the Chinese?

For the most part the immigrants who have come to us have been intelligent, well-disposed people, desirous of building homes among us, and of uniting their fortunes with ours in the fullest degree. They come mainly of their own volition. No others are desirable.

For some years it has been the policy of the Government to exclude Chinese laborers from admission. This policy has found its expression in treaties and in the statutes of the United States.

Our treaty relations with the Chinese Empire cover a period of less than sixty years. The first treaty was in 1844. This was superseded by the treaty of 1858. Later came the treaty of 1868, known as the Burlingame treaty, by which was recognized the mutual right of citizens and subjects of the two powers to migrate from one country to the other for purposes of curiosity, trade, or permanent residence. It was agreed that each Government should by law make it a penal offense for anyone to take the subjects or citizens of either into the country of the other without their free and voluntary consent, respectively.

President Hayes on March 1, 1879, in a message to the Congress, called attention to the desirability of some modification of the Burlingame treaty:

The lapse of ten years—

Said he—

since the negotiation of the Burlingame treaty has exhibited to the notice of the Chinese Government, as well as to our own people, the working of this experiment of immigration in great numbers of Chinese laborers to this country, and their maintenance here of all the traits of race, religion, manners and customs, habitations, mode of life, segregation here, and the keeping up of the ties of their original home which stamp them as strangers and sojourners, and not as incorporated elements of our national life and growth. This experience may naturally suggest the reconsideration of the subject as dealt with by the Burlingame treaty, and may properly become the occasion of more direct and circumspect recognition in renewed negotiations of the difficulties surrounding this political and social problem. It may well be that to the apprehension of the Chinese Government no less than our own, the simple provisions of the Burlingame treaty may need to be replaced by more careful methods, securing the Chinese and ourselves against a larger and more rapid infusion of this foreign race than our system of industry and society can take up and assimilate with ease and safety.

It became obvious in 1880 that the Pacific coast was in danger of invasion from the densely populated Empire of China, and our Government was obliged to deal with the subject of exclusion, and the treaty of 1880 was agreed to, restricting the admission of Chinese laborers. This change in policy was dictated purely in the interest of American labor and American citizenship. The Chinese were so unlike our own people in tradition, in religion, in habits and customs, that they would not assimilate with us, and their admission in such vast and increasing numbers became a great menace, and was deemed unwise.

It was perfectly evident that the unrestricted admission of Chinese labor would inevitably result in a serious inundation of the labor markets, and the inevitable tendency would be to depress unduly the wages of American labor.

The necessity for the treaty of 1880 was declared in the preamble:

Whereas the Government of the United States, because of the constantly increasing immigration of Chinese laborers to the territory of the United States, and the embarrassments consequent upon such immigration, now desires to negotiate a modification of the existing treaties which shall not be in direct contravention of their spirit.

The first article of the treaty was as follows:

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it.

On April 4, 1882, President Arthur, in returning to Congress a bill with respect to Chinese exclusion with his veto, because he believed the measure to be violative of the national faith, among other things said:

Our intercourse with China is of recent date. Our first treaty with that power is not yet forty years old. It is only since we acquired California and established a great seat of commerce on the Pacific that we may be said to have broken down the barriers which fenced in that ancient monarchy. The Burlingame treaty naturally followed.

This treaty, it will be remembered, was concluded July 28, 1868, and proclaimed February 5, 1870.

Under the spirit which inspired it many thousand Chinese laborers came to the United States. No one can say that the country has not profited by their work. They were largely instrumental in constructing the railways which connect the Atlantic with the Pacific. The States of the Pacific slope are full of evidences of their industry. Enterprises profitable alike to the capitalist and to the laborer of Caucasian origin would have lain dormant but for them. A time has now come when it is supposed that they are not needed, and when it is thought by Congress and by those most acquainted with the subject that it is best to try and get along without them. There may, however, be other sections of the country where this species of labor may be advantageously employed without interfering with the laborers of our own race. In making the proposed experiment it may be the part of wisdom as well as of good faith to fix the length of the experimental period with reference to this fact.

In 1894 the friction between our own citizens and Chinese laborers became so acute that a further modification of our treaty relations was deemed essential. The Chinese Government expressed a desire, in view of the "antagonism and much deprecated disorders to which the presence of Chinese laborers has given rise in certain parts of the United States, * * * to prohibit the emigration of such laborers from China to the United States."

The provisions of the treaty for the exclusion of Chinese laborers are as follows:

ARTICLE I. The high contracting parties agree that for a period of ten years, beginning with the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers to the United States shall be absolutely prohibited.

ARTICLE II. The preceding article shall not apply to the return to the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States, or property therein of the value of $1,000, or debts of like amount due him and pending settlement. Nevertheless every such Chinese laborer shall, before leaving the United States, deposit, as a condition of his return, with the collector of customs of the district from which he departs, a full description in writing of his family, or property, or debts, as aforesaid, and shall be furnished by said collector with such certificate of his right to return under this treaty as the laws of the United States may now or hereafter prescribe and not inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty; and should the written description aforesaid be proved to be false, the right of return thereunder, or of continued residence after return, shall in each case be forfeited. And such right of return to the United States shall be exercised within one year from the date of leaving the United States; but such right of return to the United States may be extended for an additional period, not to exceed one year, in cases where by reason of sickness or other cause of disability beyond his control, such Chinese laborer shall be rendered unable sooner to return, which facts shall be fully reported to the Chinese consul at the port of departure, and by him certified, to the satisfaction of the collector of the port at which such Chinese subject shall land in the United States. And no such Chinese laborer shall be permitted to enter the United States by land or sea without producing to the proper officer of the customs the return certificate herein required.

It was further provided that—

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, of coming to the United States and residing therein.

The pending measure is in effect a codification of existing laws and the rules and regulations which have been promulgated by the Treasury Department to carry such laws into effect. The rules and regulations have been suggested by experience in the enforcement of the exclusion laws. They have been found necessary to give the laws effect, and to prevent the success of the ingenious and systematic efforts which have been made continually to evade them. The executive department has experienced great difficulty in circumventing the earnest efforts which have been made to secure the admission of prohibited classes. Organizations have been and are now maintained in China and the United States for the purpose of securing the admission of Chinese through our ports contrary to the letter and spirit of the law. Fraud and bribery have been employed in every conceivable form to evade the law and the rules and regulations issued by the Treasury Department, and the vigilance of our officials have failed to exclude all that should have been debarred. The vast extent of our boundary line along the Canadian and Mexican borders, and the large profit to be made by the successful admission of the excluded classes, make it exceedingly difficult for our officers to exclude all who should be denied admission.

It was made apparent to the committee that agencies are now established which undertake for a consideration of from $50 to $400 per capita to secure entrance into the United States of Chinese who are within the prohibitions of the law. These rich inducements make it necessary, in order that the policy of the United States with respect to Chinese exclusion may be made effective, that the laws should be carefully framed and made to meet the requirements of the department charged with their enforcement.

Some of the provisions of the bill may seem to be unduly drastic, yet they are such only as experience has suggested. They are such in the main as are now found necessary to enforce existing law and to prevent its evasion. To those who respect and obey the law they will not seem burdensome; they will seem severe only to those who wish to nullify it and to secure the wrongful admission of Chinese for the large profit which the nefarious traffic offers.

It may seem to some that existing rules and regulations were adequate and that it was unnecessary to enact them into the form of a statute. But experience has shown that they are not regarded by some officials with that respect which they have for the written law, and that they are too readily and easily set aside by those who are appointed to administer them.

The bill before us is not a departure from the well-settled and well-known policy of the Government. It is a policy the full purpose and scope of which is as well known in the Chinese Empire as it is known in the United States.

It is with especial pride that we point to the fact that our labor is better paid than the labor of any other country. Our effort has been to maintain a high wage scale, upon the generally accepted theory and belief that well-paid labor means better citizens and a better country than we could possibly enjoy if wages were forced to a low standard. A low wage market is most undesirable. It is not in the interest of either capital or labor, and we shall fail in our duty if we shall open the way to the free admission of oriental cheap labor, which will inevitably result in lower wages to our laborers.

The Chinese Empire is teeming with a population of some four hundred millions of human beings. With many it is a struggle for the bare necessities of life. It is a notorious fact that many of the people there live upon that which no decent American would wish one of his own countrymen to be obliged to subsist upon.

The great Chinese ports are but twenty days from San Francisco, Portland, and Puget Sound. Transportation facilities are ample, and the cost is moderate.

The opportunities in this country are so much greater and more inviting than in China, that countless thousands would seek our shores were restrictions removed.

The opportunities which this country affords are very well known in China, and the agencies which are now so fruitful in devising means to evade existing laws would soon send here vast numbers to invade our labor markets.

There is nothing immoral in our exclusion of those who do not tend to elevate our civilization. On the contrary, we would be recreant to the high trust committed to us if we should enter upon a policy of admission of vast numbers who must surely tend to bear it down. Our course is not dictated by any ill will toward the Chinese Empire. We have but to recur to the events of the past few years to find the amplest assurance of American friendship for that great and venerable Empire. When other nations sought her dismemberment and the distribution of her provinces among the powers of the earth, the United States stood first and foremost in favor of the preservation of her solidarity. We wish for China the most enlightened progress and prosperity, but our first duty is to our own country. We wish to see our country grow in strength and power; not in numbers only, for we do not find in mere numbers our greatest national strength and chief glory. We find our chief pride in the character and quality of those who constitute the 80,000,000 of American citizens.

If numbers alone constituted the real strength of a nation, China would, indeed, be one of the strongest, one of the most puissant upon the face of the globe.

We value our broad fields, our great cities. They stimulate our pride, but above and beyond all that, as great and splendid as they are, we value our citizenship. It is, indeed, our chief glory. It means more to us, more to our children and to their children, more to the future strength and majesty of the Republic than all of the myriad material things which surround us.

A high order of citizenship is the chief end and aim of the Republic. We establish schools and found universities that they may elevate our people to a higher and broader and better plane. We have a care for the humblest among us. We want men and women who are in love with our institutions, and who will support and defend them, and transmit them unimpaired to posterity. It has been a part of our national policy to greet at our ports those from every land who are assimilable with us. We have been actuated by no nativistic spirit. We have made them joint sharers with us in the blessings and opportunities with which a beneficent Providence has favored us; but we should not invite those who will pull down and degrade our high standard.

We have heard much recently of the necessity for more land and for more territory. The vast plains of a few years ago have been largely occupied. Homes have been built and cities have been founded there. We read in the decennial census of our tremendous progress, and the eye of prophecy can already see how soon the unoccupied places, comparatively small, will be required to accommodate our rapidly increasing numbers.

We must not be too prodigal of our opportunities, or of our resources. We may well husband them for the future. Not for those of us who stand here to-day, but for those who shall follow us, and to whom we owe a surperme duty.

Our first care is to our own country and its citizenship, native born and foreign born alike. Our policy toward those of foreign birth, as I have hitherto said, is a broad and generous one. So soon as an alien sets foot upon our soil, every avenue, save one, is open to him, as it is open to the native born. The ways of trade and commerce, the professions and politics, are as free and open to him as to those who are born beneath our own benignant skies.

Being thus liberal, have we no rightful concern as to who is admitted? Is it of no concern to us whether or not he shall have in him the elements of good citizenship? What were our country without its citizenship? Destroy it or corrupt it and our chief glory is gone.

The admission of cheap labor may for the time being stimulate enterprise upon the Pacific coast and elsewhere. It may quicken the wheels of commerce, already turning with greater rapidity than at any period in our history. It may for the time being promote the interests of capital, but I do not believe that in the long run it will do so. I do not believe that there is a right-minded and intelligent citizen of the Republic who views the multiplied agencies for cheap production—production with decreased labor—who does not put the query to himself, "What will be the result when we shall have a surplus of labor?" A surplus of labor is in the nature of a calamity. We can conceive of no worse misfortune than a great country with labor unemployed. A surplus in the labor market is one of the serious probabilities that often faces us.

That American labor is displaced by the admission of Chinese labor, and that the opportunity of American labor is curtailed to the extent that Chinese labor is introduced, is obvious. It may be said that the same is true with respect to the admission of European labor, but in the latter case we admit those from whose ancestors we are descended, and who, speaking largely, are readily and fully incorporated into our American citizenship, while in the other case we have no racial elements in common. They do not harmonize with us. Upon their admission they become an undigested and undigestible mass.

The pending bill is intended to carry into the public law as the policy of the United States, recognized in the Gresham treaty and sanctioned by the almost universal judgment of the people, the absolute exclusion of Chinese laborers. It recognizes as entitled to admission Chinese officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, excepted by the terms of the Gresham treaty. It has been found in the administration of the law that Chinese laborers have been smuggled into the country as belonging to the excepted classes, and it has become necessary to carefully define in the law such classes so as to prevent a gross abuse of the privilege.

A most serious objection to the admission of Chinese laborers is the general disregard of the home relation, with all of its humanizing and ennobling influences. The American home is indeed the unit of the Republic. In the final analysis, great issues which engage our attention from time to time, in fact the destiny of the Republic, are determined at the American fireside. Abolish the American home, and the days of the Republic are numbered.

Immigration which ignores this great potential fact is a serious menace, and is not to be desired.

The immigrants who have so materially added to our national strength have come mainly from those countries where the home and family relations are sacred, and they have built among us frugal and virtuous homes whence wholesome influences have permeated the entire community. The home is, indeed, the nation's supreme defense. Can you conceive that the Chinese who are excluded by the terms of the bill before the Senate would erect homes throughout the country, as has been done by the immigrants from the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Scandinavia, and other European countries?

Competition between American labor and Chinese labor is unequal. The two start in the contest upon an entirely different plane. The American laborer must have better clothes, better houses, better food. His wants are more—thank God for that!—and they must be supplied. He is to live and labor, educate his children, and his ashes are to repose here among his kindred. What he earns is to be spent here among his own countrymen and not in some foreign land. The Chinese laborers are not without points of merit. They are docile, patient, and have remarkable power of endurance, but their necessities are few and easily satisfied. They are but human machines of the lowest order. They may, if need be, subsist upon what the American laborer throws away—upon what we would be ashamed to see him obliged to live upon.

The Republican party adheres to the wholesome doctrine of protection against unfair competition with alien cheap labor, and the country itself is the amplest testimony as to the wisdom of this policy. The admission of Chinese laborers whose condition is so far below ours is in flagrant violation of the very principle and purpose of protection. If the Chinese would speedily rise to our standard the case would be different. But experience unfortunately demonstrates that they continue upon a lower plane, and the inevitable tendency is to bring American labor to their undesirable level. Can it be possible that American labor and Chinese labor can work side by side, the one receiving less than the other in wages and subsisting upon much less than the other? It follows as night the day that the lower paid and lower fed will cause his higher paid and better fed competitor to come down to his unfortunate condition. Against this we enter our protest. We do it from no ungenerous motive toward the Chinese Empire; we do it out of national self-respect and in our national self-interest, and no one can justly challenge the wisdom of our policy.

We enter upon no denunciation of the Chinese Empire or upon any wholesale arraignment of her subjects. There are Chinese scholars of renown, statesmen of ability, merchants of honor and sagacity, but they are not of the classes which are so unattractive to us.

We exclude contract laborers from all countries. No contract laborer, whether from the United Kingdom or any country in continental Europe or elsewhere, is permitted to enter the gates at Ellis Island. The exclusion of Chinese laborers, whether under contract or not, is dictated solely by the same motives and in the interest of American labor and of American civilization.

Some question has arisen as to whether the law should operate beyond the term of the Gresham treaty of 1894, it being suggested that the proposed act should terminate with the expiration of that treaty.

The sixth article of the treaty provides that—

This convention shall remain in force for a period of ten years beginning with the date of the exchange of ratifications, and if, six months before the expiration of said period of ten years, neither Government shall have formally given notice of its final termination to the other, it shall remain in full force for another like period of ten years.

It thus will be seen that unless one or the other of the high contracting parties shall elect to terminate the treaty and notify the other to that effect six months before the expiration of the period of ten years, the treaty will continue in full virtue and effect an additional decade.

So, whether the treaty shall terminate in 1904 will depend upon the fact as to whether either of the powers parties thereto shall denounce it at the end of the first ten years.

The pending measure is not in contravention of the terms of the treaty, and it is not necessary that a time limit should now be fixed. If enacted into law it will be in force so long as Congress wills and no longer. The Congress may repeal it whenever it deems that the public welfare shall so require. It may allow it to stand upon the statute books until December 7, 1904 (when the treaty may be terminated in the discretion of either power), or for an additional period of ten years, the extreme limit of the treaty, or longer as it shall deem best in the national interest. During the continuance of the Gresham treaty it can not be said to contravene any of our international obligations for it but gives force and effect to the provisions of the treaty.

Our policy of the exclusion of Chinese laborers has been maintained so long, and the reasons for its maintenance are so well known to the Chinese Empire, and are as cogent now as ever, that it is entirely probable that that great power will desire that the treaty shall continue for the maximum term of twenty years. If it shall be thought that after the expiration of the treaty our exclusion policy should not rest alone upon an act of the Congress, then, in advance of the expiration of the treaty, a supplemental or additional treaty may be negotiated by the two Governments, which shall fully acknowledge the right of the United States to maintain in full force the policy embodied in existing treaties and laws.

If there be any just apprehension that the Gresham treaty will be denounced by the Chinese Empire in 1904, and that in consequence the measure before the Senate thereafter may be in derogation of any treaty obligations, we may assume that the Executive Department, upon which the duty of negotiating treaties devolves under the Constitution, will take all necessary and timely steps to negotiate a treaty which shall sanction the right of the Congress of the United States, without breach of the national faith, to deal in its wisdom with the subject of the exclusion of Chinese laborers from the United States and all territory within its jurisdiction.

The necessity of an early enactment of the pending measure is urgent. On May 5 next the act approved May 5, 1892, known as the Geary law, and which continued in force the then existing laws prohibiting and regulating the coming into this country of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent, will expire, and the Executive Department will be without the requisite authority and power to debar from admission the Chinese whose exclusion is so essential in the interest of the laborers of the United States upon the Pacific coast and elsewhere.

Mr. President, that the Congress has the most plenary power to enact into law the bill before us there can be no doubt, for the power to exclude undesirable aliens is an inherent attribute of national sovereignty. Our laws with respect to the exclusion of Chinese laborers should be stringent, and they should be so administered that they will be effective. This is in the mutual interest of the United States and the Chinese Empire, for it will avoid inevitable friction and discontent and the disturbance of those friendly relations which always have subsisted and which now happily exist between the two great powers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator from Indiana takes his seat, I wish to ask him a question on one point which he has discussed interestingly, and that is the contention on his part that the proposed statute does not in any way violate the provisions of the so-called Gresham treaty.

I recently read a very interesting article from the pen of Hon. John W. Foster, ex-Secretary of State, I think a citizen of the Senator's own State, a very distinguished statesman and diplomatist, who takes the ground that the proposed legislation is in contravention of many of the terms of that treaty. I of course speak modestly about it myself, but I should like the Senator perhaps to restate the ground upon which he holds that it is in conformity to the terms of the so-called Gresham treaty.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is a pretty broad question. It would be necessary, in fully and satisfactorily answering it, to again consider the details of the bill as they relate to the excepted classes, and which were referred to at length by my distinguished friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] yesterday.

The article to which the Senator alludes, from the pen of General Foster, an able statesman and accomplished diplomat of the State of Indiana, but restates, I presume, the arguments he submitted to the committee during the hearings upon this bill. The Senator will observe by a study of the existing laws and the rules and regulations promulgated by the Treasury Department from time to time that the definitions to which General Foster takes exception are in terms and effect embodied in existing laws and regulations and have been recognized for some years.

The definitions have been found absolutely necessary to give force and practical effect to existing treaty provisions and to prevent their absolute annulment by fraud and evasion.

Answering the Senator somewhat generally and without pausing to analyze the bill critically or at length, I think he will find that the provisions of the proposed law said to be in contravention of our treaty obligations with China neither enlarge nor restrict the rights, the powers, and the duties of the United States under existing treaties with respect to Chinese exclusion, nor will they serve to exclude the bona fide excepted classes.

The definitions which the executive department has so long given the classes entitled to admission would seem to be the reasonable definitions to be placed upon the statute books. The Chinese Empire seems to have fully acquiesced in them for many years. The executive department has at all times had plenary power to modify its interpretation of the meaning of the words "teachers," "students," "merchants," etc., if its construction of them was in contravention of the Gresham treaty and unacceptable to the Chinese Empire, but this has not been done.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have read the article to which he refers from General Foster. I have also read his statement before the committee. One of the objections that he urged strongly before the committee was that the ninth section of the bill, in reference to merchants, is a violation of the most-favored-nation clause. I think the Senator from Indiana will bear me out that he urged that perhaps more strongly than any other suggestion he made, as being in violation of the treaty or in violation of the principles of international law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, if the Senator—

Mr. MITCHELL. One moment. I will read the provision of the treaty which he said this section violates. It reads as follows:

It is hereby understood and agreed that Chinese laborers or Chinese of any other class, either permanently or temporarily residing in the United States, shall have for the protection of their persons and property all rights that are given by the laws of the United States to citizens of the most favored nation, excepting the right to become naturalized citizens.

It is only necessary for the Senator from New Hampshire to read that provision to be convinced that it has no reference at all to Chinese coming to this country. It has no reference at all to the entry of Chinese laborers into this country. It applies solely and exclusively to Chinese, whether laborers or belonging to the other class, who have come into this country, who have really entered this country under the provisions of law, and even then it does not apply to them until they have actually become residents of this country, either temporarily or permanently.

It is perfectly obvious that Mr. Foster is absolutely wrong in insisting that the ninth section of this bill, relating to the merchants, is a violation of that provision of our treaty with China; and I think if the Senator from New Hampshire will point out any other single provision in the pending measure which Mr. Foster says is in violation of any provision of the treaty of 1894 with China, an equally good answer can be made to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will permit me just here. It has been a long time since I have read the Gresham treaty, and I am not at this moment familiar with its terms. I think General Foster made a point in the article to which I alluded, and which is not now before me, that in the treaty certain excepted classes were to be admitted—if I mistake not, teachers belong to that class—and that in contravention of that clause in the treaty we have hedged those classes around with so many conditions that they are practically excluded; that is, so many conditions which are found in the old statute possibly and reenacted in a still more offensive form, if I may use that term, in the proposed statute.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me to interrupt him, if there is one feature of this bill which is identical with existing law and regulations, it is in reference to the excepted classes. There is little or no new matter introduced on that subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think General Foster may have suggested that very thing, that the Geary law was equally faulty in that regard and at least gave a false interpretation, if I may use the term, to the treaty rights that were guaranteed to the Chinese Empire.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will say in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire in reference to that point that he must bear in mind that China herself in entering into the treaty of December 8, 1894, adopted not only one, but a great many of the provisions of the act of 1892 and 1893.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to state here, and it is nothing in derogation of General Foster, for whom I have the highest esteem, that it must be borne in mind that in these statements and in these articles he is writing and acting as the representative of the Chinese Empire and not as a disinterested witness or writer upon a general topic of international law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I confess that it is news to me that General Foster is an attorney merely in this matter.

I will say, furthermore, that what I am seeking is light. I am not a lawyer. I do not undertake to interpret constitutional or other law, but I shall cast a vote on this bill when it comes to a vote, and I desire to cast an intelligent vote. If I could be persuaded that the proposed law is in contravention of a solemn treaty made with the Empire of China, I never would vote for it, no matter what the people of my State, labor people, or other people might say as to my conduct, and for that reason I made the interrogatory, understanding that these distinguished lawyers could give me valuable information on that point. That was the only purpose I had in view.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did not intend to discuss this part of the bill in relation to our existing treaties with China until the bill had been read and the committee amendments disposed of, but as the subject has come up I should like to say a few words now in regard to it. I think no one can have a greater respect for treaty provisions or the solemnity and importance of treaty engagements than I. I should be very unwilling to support anything which could be shown to be a violation of a treaty entered into by the United States. I do not believe it can be shown that the provisions of this bill violate the existing treaty with China.

Now, in the first place, it must be remembered—the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has already called attention to this point—that the treaty of 1894, which is the treaty superseding all others and the treaty under which we are now living and acting, is two years later than any of the existing Chinese legislation. It was conditioned upon that legislation. It was made with that legislation in view. Nothing in the existing law can be said to be in violation of the treaty, because the treaty was made subsequent to all those acts, and therefore recognized those acts, except of course if there should be any case where it distinctly overrode them.

I wish to call attention to the statement of its intention, found in the beginning of the treaty of 1894:

And whereas the Government of China, in view of the antagonism and much deprecated and serious disorders to which the presence of Chinese laborers has given rise in certain parts of the United States, desires to prohibit the emigration of such laborers from China to the United States;

And whereas the two Governments desire to cooperate in prohibiting such emigration.

In other words, the Chinese Government binds itself as the intent of that treaty to prohibit and to cooperate with us in prohibiting the entrance of Chinese laborers into this country. They express that intention and desire in view of the legislation of the United States then existing on the statute book.

Mr. President, that is a clear recognition not only of our right but of the intention of the two Governments to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into this country, and of course it contemplates that we shall make such regulations as may be necessary and proper to attain that end. It does not bind us to the laws in existence. It gives us the right to adopt proper and suitable measures to carry out the purposes of the treaty.

There are certain excepted classes—classes mentioned as entitled to come into this country—the merchants, the travelers, the teachers, and the students. There is no intention in this bill or in any part of it to interfere with the coming of any member of those classes who is genuinely such. But it is obvious that in order to carry out the main purpose of the treaty—in order to carry out the purpose of the legislation which was in existence when that treaty was made—it is necessary to distinguish the excepted classes from the class against whom the treaty as well as the laws were aimed. In other words, it is absolutely necessary, as anyone can see, to determine whether a person purporting to belong to one of the excepted classes is really of that class. That is the entire object and purpose of these clauses. It is not to interfere with the coming of a genuine merchant, or a genuine traveler, or a genuine teacher, or a genuine student. The purpose is to enable us to distinguish those persons from the Chinese laborers, whose coming it is designed to prohibit.

Anyone who has followed the testimony as the committee has followed it, anyone who has looked into this subject with the aid of the officers of the Treasury who have been called upon to enforce the laws, must have become convinced, as I have become convinced, that there is a constant and unceasing attempt to bring into this country as merchants or teachers or students or travelers members of the prohibited class of laborers or coolies. It is to prevent that fraud that the clauses in the bill exist. If it can be shown that those clauses in any way violate the treaty, in any way tend to keep out a genuine merchant, traveler, teacher, or student, then they ought to be modified, and I should be the first to vote for such modification.

Mr. MITCHELL. So would I.

Mr. LODGE. But it is perfectly clear under that treaty, whereby China proposes to cooperate with us in prohibiting the introduction of laborers, that the only way in which we can carry out the intent of the treaty, to go no further, is to be enabled by proper tests to distinguish between those who are entitled to come in and those who are not. I say here on the strength of the testimony which I have heard and read that there is no difficulty in any genuine member of those classes coming in here, but when our officers are met by frauds constructed with all the ingenuity of the Oriental mind to bring coolies and laborers in here under the guise of the excepted classes, it is necessary to have stringent provisions for reaching the distinction which it is our duty to make.

There is no desire certainly on the part of anyone to subject members of the excepted classes to any undue or any improper restrictions or difficulties, but there is absolute necessity that we should have the means of distinguishing the classes entitled to enter from the class which it is intended to prohibit.

On the point of frauds I do not propose, Mr. President, to speak at this time with any elaboration, but I wish to say for myself that, coming as I did to this subject with a belief that the existing law was entirely sufficient, my mind was changed by the testimony of the frauds that were in process to bring in the cool laborer. These cool laborers are brought into this country by the Consolidated Six Companies. They are trying all the time to force them into this country in large numbers or in small. They are entirely familiar with the law; they know exactly what it is necessary to do, and these men come here with forged certificates. We had two before the committee, brought in simply as an illustration, who were here, who had gotten into the country on forged certificates as merchants; certificates which they admitted were forged. That is going on at different points all the time. There is apparently a great deal of profit to the Six Companies in the introduction of cool labor into this country, and they spare no effort to get that cool labor in.

Mr. CULLOM. Will it interrupt the Senator if I should inquire who the Six Companies are? I really do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is one company, really.

Mr. LODGE. They are really consolidated. It is practically one great company known as the Consolidated Six Companies.

Mr. CULLOM. American companies?

Mr. LODGE. Chinese companies, I think of considerable antiquity, and they are nominally trading companies, I understand. They have a very powerful organization, great resources, and, if I am not misinformed, all the laborers who are brought here are brought here through the Six Companies. They agree to pay a certain amount of their earnings to the company and reserve a certain amount to themselves. Therefore with this important organized body, the Six Companies, engaged in pushing these men into the country through various pretenses or disguises, it is absolutely necessary that we should be able to distinguish the true from the false; and when it is remembered—

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question? It is strictly for information.

Mr. LODGE. With great pleasure.

Mr. PETTUS. What use do the Six Companies make of the persons whom they import into the United States? How do they make their money, or what disposition do the companies make of the individuals?

Mr. LODGE. They take a certain amount of the earnings of the individual cool brought in here. They pay his expenses, as I understand it, and they bring him here, and he pays them a certain amount of his earnings and the balance he keeps for himself or he spends on himself. They keep most of it. He is continually under their hands.

Mr. PENROSE. If I may make the matter a little more definite, it was distinctly testified to before the committee that the Chinese coolies paid from four to five hundred dollars for admission into this country, for their coaching papers, for the various fees to corrupt the administrative officers of the Government, to the lawyers who had charge of their case at the various ports of entry, and finally to the Six Companies who advanced the capital and superintended the whole business. These coaching papers are to be found in the testimony, and evidence was produced to show how they were smuggled into the detention houses, concealed in soups and pies and other forms of food, reciting at length how a Chinaman could be induced to commit perjury. There is supposed to be a profit of some $200 on every male Chinaman smuggled into the country, and two or three thousand dollars upon every female Chinese smuggled into the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. Whom they sell for immoral purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. Whom they sell for immoral purposes. Therefore, if the Six Companies can during the year smuggle into the United States three or four thousand Chinamen, at a profit of two or three hundred dollars per head, it is easy to see what a very large and profitable business it is to them.

Mr. LODGE. In this connection (I was looking for it while the Senator from Pennsylvania was making the explanation, which I am very glad to have had made at this point), to show the power of the Six Companies, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the circular which they sent out, which is printed on page 441 of the hearings. It was translated by Dr. Gardner, of the Chinese Bureau:

To whom it may concern:

In the matter of amending the treaty and repealing the law funds are urgently needed.

It has been publicly decided at a meeting of the officers and representatives of the merchants that all Chinese residing in the United States shall each contribute the sum of $1, and that well-to-do merchants and wealthy people shall contribute extra in order to lead off and set an example, and that the matter shall be proceeded with this very day.

We trust that all will respond promptly. The time for taking up these contributions is limited within the year, and receipts will be given as evidence.

In the event of anyone failing to pay one month after the time set, $2 additional will be collected from him, and $4 after two months.

If on the day of departure for China anyone fails to produce a receipt, an additional sum of $10 will be collected from him. Certainty of execution is what constitutes a rule. On the twenty-fourth day the steamer Gaelic will leave for China. On the present trip each person will contribute the regulation amount of $1, just as if people had not appeared to pay the amount. Those passengers going home as old men and holding exempt tickets will, out of pity, be exempted from the payment of this fund.

This is a special notice, and that all will comply is our earnest desire.

Issued by the Chinese Consolidated Companies (Six Companies) Kwang Suey 27th year, 10th month, 21st day (November 29, 1901).

That was to make a levy of money for the purpose of opposing this legislation, and I read it in order to illustrate the power of the Six Companies. They touch every one of these Chinamen all over the country, all the cool laborers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not seem to be very different from what the postal clerks are doing in reference to legislation. They assess each one of their members and they put up money to promote legislation here. I believe the President has recently issued an order against it, but it has been going on during the entire term of my incumbency in this body.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The same thing is done by what is called "organized labor."

Mr. GALLINGER. Organized labor does the same thing. They have their walking delegates here.

Mr. LODGE. I did not introduce this in order to find fault with the Six Companies because they levied any tax on the people they brought here. I introduced it to show that the Six Companies have control of the cool laborers, and that it is this great organized body that is engaged in putting it into this country. They are not individual immigrants coming here in the hope of getting in and making money, but they come here under a systematic conduct. That is the point I desire to make.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I do not think they exercise any greater power than the leaders of the labor organizations in this country exercise in getting funds and in controlling legislation. They command their men to do certain things, and they do those things.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not finding fault with the Six Companies because they command the Chinese. That is not my criticism on them at all. I was trying to state how these coolies came here and who was responsible for their coming, and I endeavored to show that the Six Companies were responsible. Whether they have a power like the power of our labor organizations is to my mind nothing to the purpose. The fact is that it is through them these Chinese come; that it is an organized movement, under the control of extremely clever, able men, to induce them to come, and they are engaged in a systematic attempt to introduce this prohibited labor, labor that China has agreed to prohibit just as much as the United States; and if the Chinese Government lives up to that treaty which we are asked to live up to it is the business of the Chinese Government to prevent the Six Companies from forcing cool labor into this country. I have not heard that they have attempted to do anything of the kind.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FOSTER of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. The Chinese Six Companies is an organization which has absolute control of all the Chinamen in this country.

Mr. LODGE. That is it.

Mr. TELLER. That is an undeniable fact. It is a government of the Chinese, absolute in its control. Undoubtedly they order at times (they have done it at least in the past) the assassination of certain Chinamen who are in their way. It is an arbitrary, absolute government. It is a money-making government, of course. It is here to make money. They bring them all here and they keep their hand on them all the time they are here, and when they go away they protect them to the last.

I have had some little experience in this matter in the last forty years. If I wanted to hire some Chinamen I would go to the Six Companies at once, and so would everybody else if they wanted to hire more than one or two, and even in that case a person would go to some prominent Chinaman in the town; he would not go to the mass there. They are under the control, absolutely, of the Six Companies; and there is nothing like it in the labor system of this country.

Mr. LODGE. I did not bring the point out with a view of criticising the system of the Six Companies, but with a view of showing what the nature of the effort was that is being made to introduce this cool labor, and why it is necessary to take reasonable and proper precautions to distinguish the excepted classes from the prohibited class.

Mr. President, I think it is plain to demonstration that we have under the treaty an absolute right to take any reasonable and proper measures that we choose to exclude the classes whose coming the two Governments agreed to prohibit.

Now, one other point, Mr. President. I have heard it said that, as the treaty expires in two years, we ought to limit this legislation. That arises from carelessness, I think, in looking at the provision of the treaty. The treaty provides that it shall expire at the end of ten years—that is, in 1904—on the denunciation of either of the parties; and if neither party withdraws, then it is to extend for another period of ten years. Therefore we have no right to assume that the treaty will expire in two years. It may last twelve years longer. There is nothing in it to necessitate a limit.

I do not think that is an important point, but the important point is our living within the provisions of the treaty. The particular points I desire to insist on are that the treaty was made and conditioned on the legislation then in existence. Almost all the provisions of this bill are repetitions of existing law or of existing Treasury regulations, which were all made before the treaty of 1894 was entered into. That treaty was entered into by both Governments, with an entire knowledge not only of the policy of the United States, but of the means which had been adopted to carry that policy into effect. If in any clause in the bill it can be shown that we have violated treaty rights, after the points that I have made have been considered, then that ought to be modified, and I have no doubt it will be; but I doubt very much indeed if it can be shown that we have violated the treaty of 1894 in any single particular.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, a brief examination into the history of smuggling Chinese into the United States will convince anyone that the proposed law is not unduly restrictive. As I have said, there are no laws of the United States that are evaded so ingeniously, systematically, and persistently as the Chinese-exclusion laws.

I wish to call attention to some testimony before the committee bearing upon this subject. It shows the necessity of defining in the most careful way what was intended by the two powers when they wrote into the Gresham treaty the excepted classes. If the definitions in the bill before the Senate seem to be unduly restrictive, that appearance will be dispelled when you go into the history to which I have adverted.

I read from the statement of Mr. Dunn before the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On what page?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Page 316. Mr. Dunn said:

I am informed upon absolutely credible authority (here I will state that I will give to the chairman of this committee, if desired, the name of my informant, which, however, I will not divulge in this public meeting) that a prominent San Franciscan, personally favorable to the admission of Chinese, called the attention of the general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to the possibility of "bringing over" large numbers of Chinese laborers—

As laborers? No. How?—

in the guise of merchants, students, teachers, and travelers. It appears that until then this generous provision of the law had been virtually ignored by the promoters of Chinese immigration. After very careful consideration by the representatives of the steamship company the scheme was put in operation and agents were sent to China for the purpose of working up the business.

What business, Mr. President? The business of evading the law, of evading the treaty entered into solemnly by the Chinese Government and the Government of the United States.

Chinese laborers were provided with certificates as merchants, students, etc., and the Chinese passenger traffic grew to immense proportions. For some two or three years the business thrived.

This illegitimate business; this evasion and circumvention of the Gresham treaty.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator information as to what years those were Mr. Dunn alludes to in which this traffic grew to such an extent?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I could ascertain by going through his testimony. He was located at San Francisco. He has been there some three years, so that it could not have been many years ago. The fact can be easily determined by the testimony. If the Senator wishes, I will stop and refer to it, otherwise I will leave it to him to investigate.

Mr. GALLINGER. The reason why I inquired is that the census reports show that in 1890 there were 107,488 Chinese in this country, and in 1900, 89,863, or about 18,000 less in 1900 than in 1890, notwithstanding this business thrived to such an extent as Mr. Dunn represents. It puzzles me.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. A great many of them have returned to China. A great many of those who secured admission surreptitiously in violation of the law have been apprehended by the authority of the Government and deported to China.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But, on the whole, the number is decreasing.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is nearly 18,000 less. I wish just at this point, inasmuch as this is a Pacific-coast measure, to say that the census reports show that in 1890 there were 72,472 Chinese in California, and the census reports in 1900 show that there were then 45,753, or a decrease of over 27,000 in the State of California.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, my good friend will not allow those statistics to override the positive testimony of a sworn officer of the Government, I suppose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President—

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Does he understand that this—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The census reports were made by sworn officers of the Government.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; but they have nothing to do with Mr. Dunn's statement. Do statistics show the number who have left the country voluntarily? Do they show the number who have been apprehended and deported to China?

Mr. GALLINGER. It simply shows, Mr. President, that there was a decrease of about 40 per cent in the Chinese population in the State of California in 1900, as compared with 1890. Now, I have no comment to make upon that beyond stating the fact.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I understand, but I take it that Mr. Dunn is stating nothing but the truth. Of course if he is not, he should be summarily discharged.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No statements have been prepared by him to show how many have been intercepted or how many have come in or how many have gone back.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. No; not at all. I suppose his general statement may be believed. The Senator does not know that it is untrue except as he infers it from the statistics read by my honorable friend from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all I know about it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator from Indiana will permit me, I should like to say right here that it seems to be impossible to conclude that any considerable number of laborers from China are being smuggled into this country. There may be some, but that there are any great number of them must be proved not to be so, I think, from the fact that the number in this country is constantly diminishing.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he has an idea there would not be a vast horde of Chinese laborers here in a short time if we had no prohibition?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have no doubt if we had no law on the subject, no Treasury regulations, there would be an increase; but I think that under the law as it exists to-day and under the Treasury regulations it is practically impossible that there should be any considerable increase of Chinese laborers in this country.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I read further from Mr. Dunn, that we may be as accurately advised about this matter as possible. It should be borne in mind that Mr. Dunn is chief of the Chinese bureau in San Francisco.

The collectors of customs looked upon these certificates as absolute evidence of the right of the applicants to admission, and they were admitted after little or no investigation.

This was one of the most flagrant of the frauds which I was instructed to prevent, and after many months of study and research, investigation, and inquiry we were able to secure the rejection by collectors of customs of those whose certificates were fraudulent.

This has been done by strict investigation of the applicants and such inquiry as is possible on this side of the water. But in a majority of cases the poor deluded coolies, who have frequently mortgaged their possessions as well as their future earnings for the costs of the certificate and travel, admit that the statements contained in their certificates are untrue, that they have never been anything but laborers, and that they are not entitled to the status claimed.

The representatives of the steamship and railroad companies engaged in carrying the Chinese frankly declare that they are "selling transportation," and that it is not their duty to inquire whether or not their passengers may land upon arrival. Their agents work up the Chinese passenger traffic in China as a matter of business. Prominent Chinese firms, recognized as mercantile establishments in the United States, are heavily engaged in the business of supplying these certificates and bringing the coolies here upon these fraudulent papers.

And further:

These Chinese coolies, masquerading as merchants, students, et al., are very carefully coached, being furnished with verbal, printed, or written instructions, copies of which I shall be pleased to lay before you, if desired. Vast profits have been made by the alleged Chinese merchants located in this country in the promotion of this illicit traffic, and the so-called Chinese merchants, students, etc., imported in this manner are said to be held in virtual bondage for some years, until they have, by their earnings, repaid the sums agreed upon, with interest and extra charges.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Of course; with pleasure.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Did it appear before the committee who the gentleman was Mr. Dunn referred to as giving him that information about the arrangement with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company? If so, I should like to have the name stated.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will read again what he said about that:

I am informed upon absolutely credible authority (here I will state that I will give to the chairman of this committee, if desired, the name of my informant, which, however, I will not divulge in this public meeting).

Whether his name was given or not I am not able to advise the honorable Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think the name should be given. I have just been called from the Chamber by the vice-president of that company, who denounces the statement as an absolute falsehood, and he demands to know who Mr. Dunn's informant was.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think my distinguished friend the Senator sat with me at the hearing of Mr. Dunn's testimony.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I did, and I never heard the name.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Nor did I. Did the Senator ask for it then?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I did not, because it was said that it would be given to the chairman, and I supposed that the committee would be placed in the possession of the name when it was so given.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think it ought to have been. I can not advise the Senator on that point. I read further from the statement of Mr. Dunn:

Reverting to the class of Chinese bearing certificates from foreign countries, I desire to make this declaration:

In an experience of nearly three years, during which I have prepared reports of thousands of these cases, I have never known of an applicant seeking admission as an agent or buyer for any mercantile house in China or elsewhere, and never has a bona fide merchant been denied admission.

No applicant for admission as a student has ever been denied if he possessed proper papers and could prove that he was not a laborer. Every applicant who possessed the status of a scholar has been admitted.

No applicant certified as a traveler has been denied if possessed of required qualifications. No one certified as a traveler has been rejected if he were other than a cooly.

Mr. Dunn gives this specific case, which is certainly a most flagrant one, and would suggest to the Congress some carefully guarded legislation:

After the work of my bureau at San Francisco had resulted in reducing this line of fraud, efforts were made to land these classes at other ports. In March, 1901, I was ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate at San Diego a shipload of Chinese "coming with fraudulent certificates."

I will call the attention of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the fact that this was only a little over a year ago.

I found the ship Belgian King had arrived with 45 Chinese, bearing certificates as merchants, students, etc., issued at Canton and Hongkong.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will ask him if the law does not require that the United States consuls shall visé all those certificates?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that they have passed the scrutiny of the consuls of the United States.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And it was shown before the committee that the consuls almost uniformly were indifferent or negligent in the performance of that duty imposed by law.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If that be so, would it not be better for this Government to look after its officials abroad than to make these very stringent regulations for the admission of Chinese, so that they may have a hearing at the port of departure and not take the risk of coming a long distance and then be turned back?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I agree with the Senator that it would be well for the Government to deal with the matter there, but not exclusively so. I would deal with it both here and there.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will say to the Senator, in addition, that the Chinese impose on our consular officers in China in just the same way they impose on the customs officers here. Hundreds of Chinese, I have no doubt, come in wrongfully where the consular officers have acted in perfect good faith. They are very ready with means of deceit and deception.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I did not understand from the statement of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] that the difficulty was with the deceit practiced by the Chinese emigrants, but that the fault was in the inattention of the consular officers.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. From the testimony before the committee, which the Senator heard as well as myself, I drew the conclusion that those officers were not as careful in the discharge of their duty as they should have been. I was endeavoring just as the Senator rose to find some testimony in the record before us, which I read this morning, to the effect that the consuls were confused and misled, and that they finally gave up undertaking to ascertain and certify to the facts, which they are required to do under the law. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is quite correct. Deception is practiced upon our consular officers there as well as our customs officers here.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I will inquire of the Senator whether, in his judgment, our Government ought to ignore the inefficiency of our officials, and whether, in his judgment, it is fair for us in doing so to allow these men to come this long distance for another examination, for instance, in San Francisco, and then be sent back across the Pacific?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Well, Mr. President, I have more sympathy for the people of this country than I have for the Chinese seeking admission to the United States unlawfully. They know what the laws are when they go to the consuls of the United States to perpetrate fraud upon them; they have no equity which justifies us in abandoning here all effort to exclude them when they reach our shores. What equity have they, coming here with a fraudulent certificate viséed by the officials of the United States in China? A certificate, when it is presented to our officers in San Francisco, if found to have been fraudulently secured, should be torn to pieces, and the fraudulent bearer of it sent back to China, no matter what the cost or the annoyance to him might be.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have here a San Francisco newspaper—the News Letter—the entire front page of which is devoted to a discussion of the examinations that are made of these men on this side, and this newspaper from the Pacific coast claims that the examination is exceedingly unfair and unjust to the Chinese, and that they are deported without proper authority.

I think I shall take occasion to read that article on Monday, when I may ask the attention of the Senate for a few minutes in the discussion of this question.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. What is the paper?

Mr. GALLINGER. The News Letter.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, there may be cases of harsh administration of the law. I do not say that there are not. I regret the fact if it is so. We have got to enforce these laws through human agencies. There can not be an absolutely just and perfect administration of any law.

I am not going to absolutely condemn our officers, Mr. President, if sometimes they become a little impatient because of the continual effort to circumvent them, because of the persistent effort of the Chinese to evade the law. If I have read aright the testimony taken by the committee, there has been found nowhere more subtle and ingenious attempts to evade the distinct and clearly written law of the United States than there has been in connection with this entire Chinese business.

I do not know what is the statement contained in the letter to which the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire adverts.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is an editorial.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I have no doubt, as I have said, that there may be cases in which there has been wrong done, injustice done, but, on the whole, largely speaking, I believe the law has been faithfully and humanely and wisely administered.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to say a word to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. There is a very strong party in the extreme West who are in favor of admitting all the Chinese into this country who may wish to come. There are people who think it is to their interest to secure the cheapest possible labor, and they do not care whether those laborers be white men or black men or yellow men, provided they will work very cheaply, and especially if they will be obedient to all the demands that are put upon them. That is the case, probably, with all Chinamen. I have no doubt that there are newspapers over there that will decry every effort that may be made on the part of the Government to keep this immigration within the lines of the treaty and the statutes, because they will be glad to see them both wiped off the statute book and to see the ports of the United States open to all the Chinamen who may wish to come.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, of course I can not detain the Senate at this hour of the afternoon, but before this discussion closes I wish to call attention to a matter which we seem to be continually drifting away from—the matter alluded to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

We have treaties with China, and we ought to keep those treaties not only in their letter, but in their spirit. This country can not afford to disregard its treaties with any foreign country, and least of all can it afford to disregard its treaties with a power that is not able to defend itself if those treaties are disregarded. We not only must not disregard our treaties, but we must keep them scrupulously; we must not "keep the word of promise to the ear and break it to the hope."

All this is outside the question of whether Chinese laborers are desirable in this country. The suggestion which I wish to make is whether this bill in its definitions of the exempted classes is keeping the treaty with China either in its letter or its spirit, and the question I want to ask is this: Whether the Senators who have reported this bill believe that China thinks that these definitions of teachers, scholars, and students are within the fair meaning, scope, and interpretation of that treaty? That is a pretty significant question, and it ought to be answered here.

We do not consult China as to these definitions; we fix them in this bill arbitrarily, and, in my judgment, in a way that entitles China to seriously complain that we are not attempting in a fair spirit to observe the provisions of that treaty.

Now, let us turn to the treaty for a moment, and I am not going to detain the Senate long. Article III of the treaty in force says:

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the rights at present enjoyed—

Which was in 1894—

of Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, of coming to the United States and residing therein.

Observe the language—residing therein.

The rights which they at present enjoy were those stated in Article II of the treaty of 1880:

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

Here we have, then, the treaty of 1880, which specifically recognized the right of teachers and students—I am speaking now only of those two classes—not only to “come of their own free will and accord,” but to “be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.”

The treaty of 1894 said that they should have “the right at present enjoyed * * * of coming to the United States and residing therein.” Now, let us see what this bill says:

SEC. 6. That the term “teacher” used in this act shall be construed to mean only one who, for not less than two years next preceding his application for entry into the United States, has been continuously engaged in giving instruction in the higher branches of education, and who proves to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that he is qualified to teach such higher branches and has completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States and intends to pursue no other occupation than teaching while in the United States.

Does the Senator who reported this bill suppose that that is the definition which the Chinese Government had in its mind when it obtained from us the privilege that teachers should be permitted to come to the United States and “to enjoy all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation”—to reside here? Is there anything in that treaty which limits it to teachers who have been two years engaged in teaching “the higher branches of education”?

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator permit me there?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not just at this moment—and have completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States?

I can not think so. Now, I will yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Connecticut will agree, I presume, that the United States has, under the provisions of that treaty, a right to provide some kind of test as to whether a person is a teacher or not. I suppose the Senator will agree to that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; I think they ought to do it.

Mr. MITCHELL. And I will agree with the Senator further, that the test should be a reasonable one.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, is it an unreasonable test to provide that a man should be able to show that he had been engaged for some time in teaching? How else will you arrive at the conclusion that he is a teacher?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Are there no teachers except teachers of the “higher branches of education” for two years?

Mr. MITCHELL. In answer to that I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that when the treaty of December 8, 1894, was promulgated the rule of which he complains had already been announced by the Treasury Department, and the construction which this bill places on the terms “students” and “teachers” had been placed on those terms by the Treasury Department; and yet China proceeded to enter into the treaty of 1894 without one word of complaint in regard to the construction which had been placed upon the terms “teachers” and “students.”

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not, of course, for a moment dispute the accuracy of the Senator’s statement that the precise definition incorporated in this bill of a teacher had been established by Treasury regulations prior to 1894, but I hope the Senator will point it out to me before this discussion is concluded.

What is the teacher to do? He must not only have been teaching “the higher branches of education” in China or elsewhere, but he must have “completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States.” That is something more than a primary school, or a common school, or a high school in this country. Why, Mr. President, can the Senator not see that that is an absolute exclusion of all teachers?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will read precisely what the Treasury regulations were at the time this treaty was ratified:

Chinese person not entitled to admission as a teacher, if, in addition to presenting proper certificate, etc., the facts claimed in his certificate are disproved; or if any of the contents thereof are controverted; or if evidence does not show that he has actually been following the avocation of teacher in China—

A teacher in China of the higher branches—or if upon examination in various branches of education it is found that he is not qualified to become a teacher; or if it is not shown to the satisfaction of the collector that plans and arrangements have been effected for him to conduct a school in the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This proposed statute has been made very much more drastic than that Treasury ruling, which the Senator from New Hampshire has read, so much so that I want to repeat here that under it it is practically impossible that any of the exempted class known as teachers can be admitted into the United States. There is no call for them, perhaps, in the higher institutions of learning in the United States, or, if there is a call for them, they will not have made their arrangements for teaching. Suppose that possibly there is one scholarship in Yale or in Harvard, not more than three or four Chinese teachers could possibly be admitted into the United States under this statute. Now, will Senators tell me what China understood when it said that its teachers should be admitted into the United States with their household goods and their servants, and accorded all the rights, privileges, and immunities of the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and might reside here?

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator to lay down the proposition that the United States has not the right to protect itself against an undesirable class of immigrants?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has exercised the right.

Mr. LODGE. But as a general proposition—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think, Mr. President, that in the spirit of comity, which we desire to have prevail between this country and China, the United States should at least ask China what she understood by the treaty. We can abrogate the treaty, so far as the right to do so is concerned.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, in order to get at a fair meaning of it, whether or not he is advised that the Chinese Government ever complained of this definition?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know. I am complaining of it right here and now.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I understand. But is it not fair to assume that if the Chinese Government had acquiesced in our definition for a number of years she waives the right to complain?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It was not this definition, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is a matter of opinion. I think it is this definition.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not as read by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; as read by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps we had better refer to Webster or Worcester or the Standard Dictionary to see what the definition of “teacher” is. It certainly is not the people engaged in the higher branches of education, and who, under this bill, must teach continuously for two years.

Mr. LODGE. That Treasury regulation demands in so many words that there must be a test of the higher branches.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not say so.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It does not say so as read by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. President, I hope that I may be permitted to conclude the few remarks which I was about to make.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will permit me to ask him just one question, I ask if he does not think that is the meaning of that treaty, and does he think that it was the intention either on the part of China or of this country that persons should come here under that designation to teach in the ordinary common schools?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know. I have been taught that the common school was the foundation of all the education and the glory of this country.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator anticipate that we are going to have Chinamen teach in our common schools?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I can scarcely understand the state of mind which prompts that question.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Senator to object that we were shutting out persons eligible to teach in our common schools, and I asked him as a practical matter if we were going to import Chinamen to teach in our common schools. That does not seem to me to be an unreasonable question.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We have some Chinese children in this country. I go to the term “student,” which is even worse, and I venture to say that this definition of this section entirely changes the understanding of the parties when this treaty was made, and fixes a definition for the word "student" that nobody ever heard of or thought of until it was defined either by Treasury regulation or by this bill, a definition which, if notice were taken of it, would make us, as it seems to me, absolutely ridiculous.

I want to say right here that I do not know what could better preserve or increase the friendly relations, which we hope to have with China as a foreign power, or be better adapted to carry the ideas of our civilization into China, which we are all hoping for and which we are all praying may enter that dark country, than to have boys brought here and educated here in the American language and with American ideas, as has been done in the case of Japan, and as we are doing now in the case of Porto Rico. How else can we so well disseminate the ideas of our institutions as by that process? Something of that sort was done here a few years ago—perhaps thirty or forty years ago; I do not remember just how long ago—but some of the brightest of the young Chinese boys were brought here and put into families for education and received an education in American ideas. Some of them went through our colleges, and then went back to China, and, if I am not mistaken, the symptoms of a new civilization in China, based in some respects upon what they call Western civilization, are attributable to the influence which those boys, educated in our families here in the United States, exerted when they went back to China. I know the history of some of them and the influence they have exerted there.

Now, just look at what this bill says "a student" is in the meaning of this treaty:

SEC. 7. That the term "student," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation for which adequate facilities for study are not afforded in the foreign country or the territory of the United States whence he comes, and for whose support while studying sufficient provision has been made, and who intends to depart from the territory of the United States immediately on the completion of his studies.

The treaty says that he shall have the privilege of residing here.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me, he certainly does not mean to tell the Senate it is his judgment that if a man ceases to be a teacher—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am talking about students.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, if a man ceases to be a student, that he has any right under that treaty to reside in this country?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let us see.

Mr. MITCHELL. Clearly he has not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The convention with China reads:

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, of coming to the United States and residing therein.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly; students.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That means residing here during the period he is a student.

Mr. TELLER. And not after he ceases to be a student.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. He becomes a teacher then.

Mr. TELLER. Then he resides here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. He might get an opportunity to teach.

Mr. TELLER. Then he resides here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No; then he has got to depart. The student who comes here, who is instructed in the American language, in American ideas and ideals, and who seeks to become a teacher in a common school, a high school, a college, or any of the higher institutions of learning, can not stay as a teacher, but has got to depart.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator is aware, I presume, that the Federal courts have decided in more than one instance that where one belonging to an exempted class comes here and ceases to belong to that class, then he has no right to remain here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very likely. I am not familiar with all the decisions, but I want to know how a student, or how any person claiming to be a student—and students under the treaty are permitted to come and reside here—I want to know how any such person is going to get into the United States? A person will never come to the United States as a student—

Mr. TELLER. I hope not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And the Senator from Colorado says he hopes not. That is very significant.

Mr. GALLINGER. And yet we are talking about Christianizing China and the Philippines.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, no person will ever come, or can ever come, to the United States as a student.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Just one moment, if you please.

The term "student," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation for which adequate facilities for study are not afforded in the foreign country or the territory of the United States whence he comes.

They have at Tientsin a university where the facilities for higher education are afforded. That will shut them out, if nothing else. It is not necessary, in my judgment, Mr. President, to so strain the provisions of this treaty and to so arbitrarily force them in order to prevent the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States.

I will not speak of the travelers and the merchants, because this matter relating to the education of the Chinamen touches me very much more closely than the question of their engaging in trade here or traveling about here. It seems to me we ought not only not to shut up all the doors against the coming of persons as teachers and students into this country, but that we might construe the treaty even to open a little wider the doors for Chinamen to come here to teach or to be taught in our institutions of learning, and not absolutely to exclude every teacher and every student, practically, from coming among us. That was not the way the treaty was understood, Mr. President. I do not believe that there is any ruling of the Treasury Department, it not having been called to my attention, which proposes to exclude every child, boy, or young man from coming to this country and honestly desiring to be taught our language, our institutions, and our laws. I shall not believe that the Treasury Department has made any such regulation until it is shown to me.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator kindly look at the bill and then compare it with what I am about to read? I wish him to look at the bill from which he has been reading—the clause about students.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have read it.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I want the Senator to read. I am going to read the opinion of the Solicitor of the Treasury, and I want the Senator to compare it with the terms of the bill. I am going to give the Senator an opinion, because the Senator said he did not believe the Treasury Department had ever made such a ruling.

Mr. GALLINGER. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. TELLER. He refers to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say the Senator from New Hampshire. I refer to the Senator from Connecticut. He said he does not believe the Treasury has ever given such an opinion. Now, I am going to read the opinion.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I ask his pardon for misinterpreting what he said. The Senator approached in a very threatening manner, and I thought he must have meant me. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. Nothing was further from my thoughts:

A Chinese student is "a person who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or one who seeks to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation for which facilities of study are not afforded in his own country; one for whose support and maintenance in this country, as a student, provision has been made, and who, upon completion of his studies, expects to return to China."

That is the opinion of the Solicitor of the Treasury of June 15, 1900, in interpretation of the treaty and the present laws. Then this follows:

A Chinese person coming to the United States, applying for admission upon the ground that he intends to study the English language, is not a student within the meaning of the Chinese-exclusion laws—

Those are the old laws under which we have been living, not the proposed law—which have been decided to exempt as students only those who intend to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or who seek to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation, facilities for the study of which are not afforded in their own country. (Treasury decision 23107.)

The language of the act which the Senator has been criticising so severely is taken, word for word, from the interpretations of the Treasury on the existing law, except that the present bill does not make the restriction in regard to the English language. We do not narrow it as much as the existing Treasury decisions. Now, whether it is right or wrong I am not concerned to argue at this late hour on Saturday afternoon, but I do desire to point out that this bill has not been made hastily out of some one's casual thought. It is based on Treasury decisions, and in that clause we have followed the interpretation of the law officers of the Government and the Treasury Department of the United States as to what the existing laws and treaties mean.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts fairly shows that the proposed statute does not very much extend the rulings of the Treasury Department and the Treasury officials, and that being so, I want every word I have said about this proposed statute to apply to those decisions and those rulings.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word before the week's work is done. I was interested in the discussion of what could fairly be meant by "teacher." The Senator from Massachusetts, a graduate of one of the distinguished universities of the country, gave an interpretation to it, and I, as a graduate of a little log schoolhouse at a four-corners that is very vivid in my mind, thought I knew something of what the term "teacher" meant. I wish now to refer to the Standard Dictionary, which is supposed to be a pretty accurate authority in this country, and read what it says about "teacher:"

Teacher. One who teaches or instructs; especially, one whose business or occupation is to teach others; an instructor; preceptor; in an eminent sense, one who has special aptitude for arousing in the minds of pupils those intellectual activities by which knowledge is acquired, and special skill in imparting that knowledge in a clear, thorough, and systematic manner, etc.

That is what "teacher" means, and no man is adroit enough to contort it into meaning what the proposed law says it shall mean.

A single other word. Men in public life are very apt to be misrepresented when they make statements, and especially in a debate such as this. I took exception to what the Senator from Massachusetts said in regard to the Six Companies, but not on the point that I think he particularly meant to emphasize, and that was that they were engaged in fraudulent practices. I do not know whether that is true or not; very likely it is; but what I wanted to take exception to was that the Senator read a circular that the Six Companies, or the consolidated company—because, as a matter of fact, I understand it is but one company—sent out intending to collect money from the Chinese to defend their rights in the matter of legislation in the Congress of the United States.

I said it was not different from what the post-office clerks and the postal clerks and labor organizations were doing, and I simply rose to say that in the observation I made I did not mean to impute any wrong to either the labor organizations or the organizations of postal clerks or post-office clerks. They have a right, as I interpret the matter, to do that very thing, and they would be negligent of their duty if they did not take care of their rights before even the Senate of the United States. I simply wish to make this explanation so as to show that I did not intend by any observation I made to reflect upon anybody. I think the Chinese Six Companies have a right to protect themselves by raising money from the Chinamen in this country, because they have no other means of securing a fund for this purpose.

Mr. President, in the discussion this afternoon the stereotyped suggestion has been made that Chinese women are imported and sold for immoral purposes in the city of San Francisco. That may be true. I venture to say that diligent search will reveal quite as bad a condition in the city of San Francisco among other peoples than the Chinese. It certainly can be revealed in darker New York, according to the statement of Ballington Booth. It can be revealed in the Puritan city of Boston; and we need not go very far from the Dome of this Capitol to discover it in the city of Washington. I do not think that that ought to influence any vote on this very important question.

But I want further to add that I am not opposed to the restriction of Chinese immigration, but I believe that the present statute is drastic enough, thorough enough, comprehensive enough, and that during the pendency of the existing treaty with China, when we are talking about Christianizing that people and extending our trade to the Orient, we ought not by any additional legislation to slap that great Empire in the face. If the advocates of Chinese restriction will agree to allow the stringent law which is on the statute book to-day, known as the Geary law, I believe, to remain there, there will be no protracted discussion on the part of those who take an exception to the proposed law; but if that is not admitted, we shall have something further to say on this question.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I have not risen to make a speech. I merely desire to say that on Monday morning, after the morning business, if agreeable to the Senate, I will submit some remarks on the pending bill.

In addition, if no other Senator desires to proceed further at this time, I wish to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to say a word on one single point before the motion is made to go into executive session.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] referred to the case of the importation of women for immoral purposes. We all know that what he refers to is quite true; that that unfortunate class exists everywhere. But the way the Chinese women are brought in is illustrated by the testimony, and it is by relaxation of the law. The law was relaxed to allow the introduction of some Chinese for the Omaha Exposition, and it illustrates the manner in which a relaxation of the law is taken advantage of by certain Chinamen. I read from page 484 of the testimony:

[Translation of intercepted letter to Kam Tong, referring to importation of two prostitutes and sale of one for $1,850.]

TO KAM TONG.

DEAR NEPHEW: All your highly esteemed favors have come duly to hand. The two prostitutes imported by Tsuey Ng as fair [Omaha Exposition] people have arrived at San Francisco and one already sold for $1,850. A deposit has already been received; but why is it you have not sent on men for a little time now, such as you get hold of? Tell them they must act immediately.

There is an illustration; and I wish to say to the Senator that the committee is not acting or speaking or intending to act or speak without some knowledge and some testimony as to the evils of a relaxation of the law.

Mr. CULLOM. May I inquire whether the Chinese were invited to that exposition?

Mr. LODGE. There was a relaxation of the law to allow them to come in in connection with Chinese exhibits.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what I supposed.

Mr. LODGE. That was it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not for a moment controvert the statement that these two Chinese women were brought here for improper purposes. No Chinese women can get into this country without running a gantlet of sworn Government officials in this country, and it is very probable that occasionally one is smuggled in under some pretense, but that that should be made the foundation of an assault upon the Chinese nation and the Chinese character I do not for a moment admit ought to be allowed. We have some serious problems in that direction confronting us as a nation. We have a serious problem in that connection confronting us to-day in the Philippine Islands, and we would better make clean our own house before we in wholesale manner assault the people of another nation in reference to this regrettable condition.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] desires to submit some remarks, and I will yield to him.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I do not intend to protract the debate at this late hour, but before adjournment I desire to direct attention to Mr. Dunn's statement with respect to the difficulty experienced in having proper certificates viséed by consuls in China. I would invite the attention of my friend, the junior Senator from Vermont, to this:

I have personal knowledge—

Says Mr. Dunn—

I have personal knowledge that, until the past year at least, American consuls would visé any certificate presented to them for that purpose, and that they repeatedly stated that it was impossible for them to know the facts and circumstances which they attested. Minister Conger, when in San Francisco, urgently requested me to visit, assist, and advise his consular force, and the new American consul at Hongkong has made similar requests.

All, however, urge that the Government will assign to them a sufficient number of Chinese inspectors and interpreters to investigate in a more thorough manner the certificates presented for their visé, and it is only by this means that their authentication can be made more than perfunctory.

I have always urged that it was a manifest injustice to Chinese—

In this he agrees with the junior Senator from Vermont and myself—whether or not entitled to admission, that they should be provided with these certificates without adequate preinvestigation and pay the additional expense of passage to the United States, there to be rejected, in many cases, upon the discovery of the fraudulent character of their claims.

The foregoing was the foundation of my observation a moment ago—that certificates of consuls in China were not, under the circumstances under which they were issued, worthy of the most absolute confidence.

SARAH H. H. LOWE.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10117) granting a pension to Sarah H. H. Lowe.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Sarah H. H. Lowe, widow of William W. Lowe, late colonel Fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 7, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 5, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2062) to authorize the Western Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Ohio River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill was read. It provides that the Western Bridge Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River from a point on Preble avenue, in the city of Allegheny, to a point on Shingiss street, in the borough of McKees Rocks, Allegheny County, Pa.; provided, that such location is suitable to the interests of navigation and receives the approval of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MANUAL OF SURVEYING.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12536) to further amend section 2399 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2399 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by act of Congress of October 1, 1890 (Statutes at Large, volume 23, page 650), and act of Congress of August 15, 1894 (Stat. L., vol. 28, p. 285), be further amended so as to read as follows, namely:

"Sec. 2399. The printed manual of surveying instructions for the survey of the public lands of the United States and private land claims, prepared at the General Land Office, and bearing date January 1, 1902, the instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the special instructions of the surveyor-general, when not in conflict with said printed manual or the instructions of said Commissioner, shall be taken and deemed to be a part of every contract for surveying the public lands of the United States and private land claims."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman state what committee of the House has considered this.

Mr. KLEBERG. It is a unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands. It simply legalizes the manual of surveying instructions to the surveyors-general. It is the usual act that passes from time to time when a new manual is made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KLEBERG, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT PARKVILLE, MO.

Mr. BOWERSOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3513) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Parkville, Mo.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOWERSOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CORPORATIONS AS SURETY ON BONDS, ETC.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10517.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10517) to amend an act entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon," approved August 13, 1894, be amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That every company before transacting any business under this act shall deposit with the Attorney-General of the United States a copy of its charter or articles of incorporation, and a statement signed and sworn to by its president and secretary showing its assets and liabilities. If the said Attorney-General shall be satisfied that such company has authority under its charter to do the business provided for in this act, and that it has a paid-up capital of not less than $100,000, in cash or its equivalent, and is able to keep and perform its contracts, he shall grant authority in writing to such company to do business under this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CONFIRMING TITLE OF CERTAIN LAND TO NEBRASKA.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2442) confirming title to the State of Nebraska of certain selected indemnity school lands.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2442) confirming title to the State of Nebraska of certain selected indemnity school lands.

Be it enacted, etc., That title be, and is hereby, confirmed to the State of Nebraska to all those certain tracts of land in the O'Neill (Nebr.) land district, aggregating 2,228.09 acres, heretofore selected by the State as indemnity for granted school lands, which selections were approved by the Secretary of the Interior May 22, 1897, in list No. 1, and duly certified to the State of Nebraska by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but which certification was on May 5, 1899, declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be null and void and ineffectual to convey to the State any right or title: Provided, That the State of Nebraska shall not hereafter be entitled to further indemnity for the specific losses accruing to said State in lieu of which said selections were made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have an understanding of what this bill does. I could not gather from the expressions of the bill on its face what it does, and I would be glad if the gentleman would explain to us the object and purposes of the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. This bill is to straighten out the title—

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman please state what committee has reported the bill?

Mr. BURKETT. The Committee on Public Lands, in a unanimous report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Has the bill been passed upon by the Land Office?

Mr. BURKETT. The Secretary of the Interior has recommended it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to have a full explanation of what it does.

Mr. BURKETT. The bill is to confirm title to the State of Nebraska in certain lands indemnifying the State for sections 16 and 36 that the State did not get in accordance with the law admitting the State into the Union. According to a former decision, made several years ago by the Secretary of the Interior—

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell why it was that the State did not get the lands?

Mr. BURKETT. I can briefly go over it. In 1882 the boundary in the State of Nebraska was pushed north to the forty-third parallel of latitude, between the Missouri River and the Keyapaha River, which included a portion of an Indian reservation. Afterwards this Indian reservation was opened up for distribution and settlement and entry by the act of March 2, 1889. This law contained the following provision:

And when the Indian title to the lands thus described shall be extinguished the jurisdiction over said lands shall be, and hereby is, ceded to the State of Nebraska and subject to all the conditions and limitations provided for in the act of Congress admitting Nebraska into the Union, and the northern boundary of the State shall be extended to said forty-third parallel as fully and effectually as if said land had been included in the boundaries of said State at the time of its admission into the Union?

By the law the State of Nebraska was to have these sections, 16 and 36, just the same as they did in the other territory that originally constituted Nebraska. Section 24 of the 1889 act provided that sections 16 and 36 should be reserved for school purposes. But there was a provision made putting the proceeds of the sale of this land into a trust fund for the Ponca Indians. It was construed in that way, or rather that there was no grant of these lands to the State until the Indian title had been extinguished. A few years later it was held otherwise, that by virtue of the law itself and its acceptance by the Indians they had surrendered it to the United States. Some of these sections 16 and 36 were lost to the State on account of allotment to Indians and other deficiencies. On August 21, 1891, the State of Nebraska filed a list of indemnity lands for these sections thus otherwise taken. On August 29, 1892, the selection was denied by the Commissioner of Public Lands, and the lands were held for cancellation.

The State appealed. On February 24, 1894, the Attorney-General overruled that decision of the Land Department, and held that the State of Nebraska under the law was entitled to the school-land grant subject to the right of occupancy by the Indians, and also held that she had a right to indemnity lands. The list was approved, and on June 7, 1897, the approval was certified to the State. Nebraska took these indemnity sections and afterwards leased and sold them and disposed of them as they did the other public lands.

In 1897, as I have said, this matter was all certified out to the State in the regular way, but in 1899 there were found to be some land inadvertently omitted in list No. 1, formerly filed, and a second list of indemnity land was sent in to the Department. Different Department officers being there, I presume, at the time of the second list being submitted, the Department ruled that Nebraska was not entitled to indemnity land. But all but 101.32 acres had been sold out and leased and was in the hands of innocent purchasers, under the decision of the former ruling that Nebraska had a right to indemnity lands.

Therefore, Nebraska at this time a year ago, or June 5, 1901, when she made her showing, only had 101.32 acres of the 2,200 acres, and the rest was in the hands of innocent holders. When the Department made the last ruling they said that "in view of the fact that the State may have disposed of some of the tracts since certification an opportunity should be afforded the State or its grantees to obtain relief by legislation, * * * and to this end you will withhold from entry all lands so certified." On the 20th day of January, 1902, the Secretary of the Interior wrote to the Senate committee, setting out the whole matter and recommending that this bill be passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have in my hand the letter from the Secretary, and if the gentleman will have it published with his remarks I will make no objection.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Interior, and also that of the Land Commissioner, be published with my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the letters referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, January 20, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by recent reference from your committee, with a request for views thereon, of a copy of S. 2442, entitled "A bill confirming title to the State of Nebraska of certain selected indemnity school lands."

In answer to the reference I inclose a copy of the report on the bill by the Commissioner of the General Land Office under date of the 18th instant.

He has stated therein that the bill strongly commends itself to favorable consideration, and he has recommended its enactment.

I concur in this recommendation.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK,

Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1902.

SIR: I am in receipt, by departmental reference for report in duplicate and return of papers, of Senate bill 2442, confirming title to the State of Nebraska of certain selected indemnity school lands.

The lands are described as aggregating 2,228.09 acres in the O'Neill, Nebr., land district, the selection of which was approved May 22, 1897, but the certification thereof declared void May 5, 1899.

I have the honor to report that on August 21, 1891, the State of Nebraska filed its list No. 1 of indemnity school land selections in the O'Neill land district. Said list, so far as it related to selections in that part of the Great Sioux Indian Reservation, added to the State of Nebraska by act of March 28, 1882 (22 Stats., 35), was held for cancellation by this office August 29, 1892, "K," for the reason that the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stats., 888), providing for the disposition of said lands created a trust fund for the benefit of the Ponca Indians derived from the proceeds of the sale of said lands.

Upon appeal, the Department, February 12, 1894, after mature deliberation, held that the grant of school lands to the State of Nebraska included those lands within the Great Sioux Reservation added to the State by act of March 2, 1882, subject to the Indian right of occupancy, and such right having been extinguished under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889, the State was entitled to select indemnity within the limits of such reservation in said State for losses sustained therein, and this office was instructed to take such steps as were necessary to carry into effect the views expressed in the adjustment of losses to the State under its school grant (18 L. D., 124).

Accordingly there was submitted to the Department clear list No. 1 of selections aggregating 2,228.09 acres of lands in said reservation, based upon losses occurring in said reservation by reason of allotments to Indians of granted school lands in place or of the appropriation of such lands for military purposes, and for deficiencies occasioned by reason of fractional townships for natural causes.

This list was approved May 22, 1897, and was duly certified to the State under section 2449, United States Revised Statutes, June 7, 1897. July 5, 1898, this office submitted to the Department for approval list No. 2, embracing selections in said list of August 21, 1891, but called attention to the case of South Dakota, reported in volume 26 of Land Decisions, page 347, wherein it was held that lands in the Great Sioux Reservation were subject to disposal under the homestead law only, and that there was no authority vested in the Department to dispose of them except in the manner and for the purpose contemplated by the act of March 2, 1889.

May 5, 1899, the said list No. 2 was returned without approval, the decision of February 12, 1894, was overruled, and it was held that the certification of list No. 1, being contrary to the terms of the statute, and the agreement with the Indians was null and void and ineffectual to convey to the State any right or title; but it was directed that, in view of the fact that the State may have disposed of some of the lands since certification, an opportunity should be afforded the State or its grantees to obtain legislative relief, and directed that said lands be withheld from entry (23 L. D., 358).

From a statement filed by the State authorities June 5, 1901, it appears that with the exception of 101.32 acres all of the lands certified to the State have been sold or leased by the State and that no lease expires before 1919; that said lands have been sold or leased in many instances to persons who have exhausted their homestead rights; that homes have been established on said lands and valuable and lasting improvements placed thereon in the belief that the State had acquired title.

Section 21 of the act of March 2, 1899, supra, provides:

"That each settler under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead acts shall pay the United States, for the lands so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $1.25 per acre for all lands disposed of within the first three years after the taking effect of this act and the sum of 75 cents per acre for all lands disposed of within the next two years following thereafter, and 50 cents per acre for the residue of the lands then undisposed of: * * * Provided, That all lands herein opened to settlement under this act remaining undisposed of at the end of ten years from the taking effect of this act shall be taken and accepted by the United States and paid for by said United States at 50 cents per acre, which amount shall be added to and credited to said Indians as part of their permanent fund, and said lands shall thereafter be part of the public domain of the United States, to be disposed of under the homestead laws of the United States and the provisions of this act."

The ten-year period expired February 10, 1900, and an account stated of the disposition of lands at the prices of $1.25, 75 and 50 cents. There is, therefore, now no question affecting the Indian fund, and as the rights of innocent third parties are affected by the failure of the State's title growing out of the erroneous approval and certification of the State's selection the bill strongly recommends itself to favorable consideration as an equitable adjustment, and I recommend its enactment.

The said bill is returned herewith.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN,

Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—HORTON AGAINST BUTLER.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I present the privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the contested-election case of Horton against Butler. I will call up the resolution at a later day, and I desire now to make some arrangement with the minority for filing their views. How long does the other side want?

Mr. FOX. I think three weeks would be satisfactory.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I have no objection to that. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the other side have three weeks in which to present the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the Elections Committee No. 1, presents the privileged report in the contested-election case of Horton against Butler, which will be printed and referred to the House Calendar; and he asks unanimous consent that the minority may have three weeks in which to file their views. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13031, the Chinese-exclusion bill, and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that leave to print be given for five days.

Mr. MANN. Make it ten days.

Mr. HITT. Ten days, it is suggested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for general leave to print upon this bill for ten days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. HITT was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair, for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, before resuming general debate, I would like to make some arrangement with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in regard to the time requisite for general debate. How much time is desired on the other side?

Mr. CLARK. We would like to have two hours and a quarter on this side.

Mr. HITT. Then I propose that we close debate with two hours to a side.

Mr. CLARK. All right; let it go at that.

Mr. HITT. Two hours on a side, to be divided equally, the time to be controlled on this side by myself and on the other side by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent of the committee that general debate cease at the end of four hours, two hours of which is to be controlled by himself and two hours by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, intimately connected with the subject-matter of this bill is the consideration of the proposition involved in a pending amendment to compel the ships of our merchant marine trading to the ports of the United States and with foreign countries to employ none but American seamen, or, in other words, to keep out of employment all Chinese. For my own part, with some knowledge of the situation of our shipping interests upon the Pacific Ocean side of the country, I shall oppose that amendment, if present when it shall be offered, and upon a cognate question I shall at once extend my remarks, under the order of the House, so that members will have the opportunity to see the direction in which my remarks are pointing.

[London Daily Mail, January 23, 1902.]

SHIPPING SUBSIDIES.

In British commercial circles interest in trans-Atlantic development is centered for the moment in the question whether the shipping subsidies bill will pass into law or not. Americans frankly recognize that, unaided, their shipping has little chance against our own. The American sailor is more expensive, and American ships cost more to build. Up to now all the strenuous efforts to galvanize American shipping into new life have had but little result. But with the passage of the shipping bill all this will be changed.

Leading shippers in the port of London say that with the passing of the American subsidies bill much trade will pass from under the British flag unless special legislation is framed to meet the new situation. The only legislation that could do this would be the imposition of a special tax on subsidized steamers using our ports; and there is no prospect of such a law being even seriously discussed. Yet we may before long find the story of our bounty-killed sugar trade repeated with our shipping.

[London Daily Mail, February 26, 1902.]

SHIPPING SUBSIDIES.

The question of shipping subsidies, now brought to the front by the American bill, continues to excite much interest. Some of the best-known shipowners, whose views were requested, have submitted them, although withholding their names. The head of a prominent house in the North writes: "The effects of the United States bill will be (1) to stimulate American shipowners engaged in the liner trades of the North Atlantic, and thereby to hit hard the British lines in that trade; (2) British lines in other trades will feel its effects remotely; (3) British tramps are not likely to suffer to any appreciable extent. Their existence as payable property under our flag depends on such economic building and working as is at present impossible in the States. It has been estimated (with some degree of care) that three-quarters of British tonnage are tramps."

A London house of shipowners is frankly pessimistic. "In our opinion," it writes, "if this bill passes into law as it stands at present, there will be an end to our freight trade. The one thing, then, left for us to do will be to sell our ships to the triumphant Yankees as soon as possible. The action of some who sold out to Mr. Pierpont Morgan and others some time ago was severely criticised. They certainly knew what they were about and made an excellent bargain."

"It is too late to talk vaguely of remedies," the shippers continue. "If our Government had the slightest perception of the supreme importance of commercial matters, there might still be some hope of some thorough and immediate action to meet the threatening state of affairs. But no real man of business would now look in that direction for any help whatever. A bounty to English ships, subsidizing them as much as their rivals are now subsidized, is the only rational answer to America's move."

Any endeavor to learn from British shippers the result the American bill will have on us meets with most contradictory opinions. All are agreed that our trade will suffer, but it is by no means clear if the loss will come on our passenger or cargo boats. Yet it may be remembered that when the French and German subsidies were enacted men then prophesied that the fleets of other nations would sweep the seas. This has not come to pass; and in our coastwise trade at least we are impregnable.

[London Daily Mail, February 19, 1902.]

IS BRITISH SHIPPING IN DANGER?

Will the new American shipping subsidy bill seriously affect British commerce? Our steamship trade is one great national industry which American competition has not up to now been able seriously to injure. The strenuous endeavors of the Americans to build a great mercantile marine have so far failed. The figures on this point are conclusive. The latest American statistics, giving full returns for last year, show that during that time more than one-half of the imports to the United States brought there on steamships came under the British flag, and two-thirds of the exports were taken out by British ships. Of 1,255,000,000 tons of exports, 846,000,000 were conveyed out on British vessels, as against 65,000,000 on American. Of 794,000,000 tons of imports, 82,000,000 were carried in American steamships as against 428,000,000 in British ships.

The reason England has held the shipping trade is because this country can build ships cheaper and better than any other, and our shipping is cheap to manage. The figures given by Mr. B. J. Baker, of the Atlantic Transport Company, some little time ago settled all controversy about the cheapness of British shipbuilders, the British vessels being about 25 per cent below American in price. The cost of operation is also less, and the difference based on the wages of the crews alone leaves an average of about 6 shillings a ton per ship per annum in favor of English. Taking the capitalized cost of the vessels and the price of running, the lessened expense in favor of English ships works out at about a sovereign a ton per year.

THE AMERICAN SUBSIDIES.

Senator FRYE, who is responsible for the new American shipping subsidy bill, proposes a rate which will largely counteract this difference. He proposes to give a bounty of a halfpenny per gross ton per 100 nautical miles sailed to American-built and American-run ships. In the case of first-class vessels, this will completely counterbalance the present British advantage.

Senator FRYE himself expects certain definite and immediate results from his bill if, as seems likely, it passes into law. He believes it will lead to the construction of vessels of large carrying capacity. By this means it is hoped the Americans will be enabled to undersell the British. He expects that the chief triumphs at first will be in the Pacific rather than in the Atlantic Ocean, and calculates that there the Americans will be able to appropriate the long sea markets. Mail steamers will receive special consideration.

BRITISH HOPES AND FEARS.

Some of our great English shipowners express confident anticipation that the bill will not pass through Congress in its present form, but the mass of our shipping trade appears indifferent to the matter. Yet it is plain, on the face of it, that this bill, if it passes through Congress, will affect not only the direct American trade, but many others. Our shipping to-day is nearing its hour of crisis. The only remedy shipowners at the present moment have to propose is that American ships should be fined the amount of their subsidy when entering the British ports. This remedy is impracticable, and even if it could be carried out would not meet the situation.

British shipowners are by no means united in considering subsidies a blessing. This country has had its experience of subsidies. All the mail steamers receive special grants from the Government, but in consequence they are bound down by very strict rules. A vessel must sail on a certain date and must arrive on a certain date, no allowance being made for storms. No delay through drunken stokers can excuse delays in sailing. If only 3 or 4 hundredweight of cargo arrives in the period the ship has to spare, the owner dare not wait, though tons may be coming a day or two later. This has led to the evolution of fast boats, carrying only a picked cargo, at much higher rates, and this may be taken as indicating what subsidies will do for our rivals. All the British shipowners as a body ask for is fair play, equal treatment, and freedom from governmental restrictions, whether British or foreign.

THE BOARD OF TRADE AND SHIPPING.

One large British shipowner writes that the one thing necessary to be done is to remove from our ships what he calls the "hampering ineptness of the board of trade." He gives several instances. He complains of the system of sending surveyors down to report for licenses to carry passengers. He says that these surveyors are ex-trade-union men, unfavorable to shipowners, and the fees are very high in the case of a ship of moderate size, running from 15 to 20.

The shipowner complains, secondly, of the Plimsoll line, which he describes as an anomaly. "Plimsoll's sole experience was a voyage from London to Dundee. Every practical shipowner knows how far he can load his ship with safety. In many cases this is far deeper than the Plimsoll line allows. In other cases the line gives him more than is consistent with security. Obeying the law, the owner has to make up his loss in the one case by loading the other ships lower than he otherwise would. The line takes only the depth of hold into consideration, while there are several other things more important, such as the shape of the ship and her sea-going capacity."

Then come hampering regulations about provisions and stores. "Their effect is to tempt owners to send out ships with a minimum load by law. This does not apply to large ships with the refrigerator appliances, where men are fed on fresh meat all through the voyage. The board of trade requirements as to ventilation have, as all shippers have agreed, caused the loss of many vessels. The ventilators are easily snapped off by heavy seas, leaving holes in the deck which, when further seas are shipped, make the vessel less able to recover. On the grain-trade ship these ventilators do much harm, and the necessity of having them has lost a great portion of the American grain trade to English vessels."

[Mr. JETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, there was a unanimous opinion in the Committee on Foreign Affairs in favor of a law which shall effectively exclude all Chinese laborers from entrance to the United States, and I think the same opinion is held almost as unanimously by this Congress and is general throughout the country. So the only question before us is how to best express in law this opinion. The majority of the committee has reported a bill which represents long labor and much investigation, and which had as its basis the bill which the minority now presents as a substitute. If the opinion of the minority is correct, then all the labor expended in perfecting and improving and amending their bill has been wasted.

The minority report states as the main reason for preferring their bill that it is the one presented and desired by the people on the Pacific coast and the labor organizations. But that argument proves too much, for if it is valid the minority ought to have reported the original bill which those organizations presented instead of the form amended and corrected in committee which they present. The truth is the bill first presented was so crude and had so many uncounted expressions and contradictions and uncertainties that it was necessary to introduce many changes, and the only question is whether the few changes which the minority allow make as perfect a bill as the many changes recommended by the majority.

I do not mean to reflect on the original framers of the bill, for I suppose the fact is, as the bill itself indicates, that it was not framed by any one person, but was a composite production in which the suggestions of many minds were mingled and combined, with the result that it lacked uniformity and exactness. This the committee has endeavored to remedy, and while it has very much improved the bill in language and legal exactness, I do not think it has at all lessened its stringency in excluding Chinese laborers. I do not think, however, that the history of our past legislation confirms the statement of the minority that those who had most experience with Chinese are the best fitted to frame legislation, for I think the chapter of Chinese-exclusion laws passed under the compulsion of Pacific politics is one which is not creditable to the American nation. The purpose to be accomplished, which was to exclude laborers, I believe, was wise and necessary, but the methods pursued were injudicious and improper. It is curious, in looking back over the last thirty years, to see what changes in public opinion time has made on this question.

It was only in 1868 that the United States took great pride in seeing a Chinese embassy come here under the leadership of an American citizen, Anson Burlingame, and take its place among the other great nations of the world with a treaty of mutual concessions. It was felt then that this young Republic was acting as the sponsor of this oldest empire in the commencement of a new era which should bring to it the civilization and progress of the century, and we felt that we should be their teachers in the path of honor and progress. In that treaty it was stated that both the United States and China—

Cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and religion, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and immigration of their citizens and subjects, respectively, from the one country to the other for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents.

That was in 1868. In a few years, however, the threatened swarm of cheap Chinese labor frightened us, and we were anxious to avoid this mutual privilege of migration agreed upon in the treaty, and asked China to frame another treaty limiting this right, which she reluctantly agreed to, and in 1880 a treaty was framed yielding to us the right to regulate, limit, or suspend the immigration of Chinese laborers, but forbidding us to prohibit it.

As years went on, however, this was found to be inadequate for our protection, and we endeavored to secure a treaty from China allowing us absolutely to prohibit the immigration, which, however, she refused, whereupon Congress passed an act in open and flagrant violation of the treaty with this power to whom we expected to be a teacher in ethics and morality, and although our treaty with them expressly said that we should not prohibit Chinese laborers, a statute was passed whose title used the very forbidden word, and stated its object "to prohibit the immigration of Chinese laborers."

It has always seemed to me that such an act, framed in intentional violation of the treaty, was unworthy of Congress, and especially so when dealing with a nation which we had undertaken to lead into the path of a higher civilization. I do not think that when treaties become unendurable they must forever be observed, but I think the manly and honorable way is to abrogate them with due notice and not insultingly disregard them; and I think China has ever since had a just grievance against the United States. She yielded, however, and in 1894 agreed upon a treaty which gives us the right to prohibit the entrance of Chinese laborers; and it is by virtue of that treaty that the present act is drawn.

It is intended to absolutely prohibit the entrance of Chinese laborers. To effect that would seem easy, but experience has shown that there are organizations which find it worth while to pay hundreds of dollars for the successful smuggling in of a single laborer, and devices have been resorted to and frauds invented to circumvent the law which make elaborate precautions necessary. This causes difficulty in framing an effective law and explains many provisions which seem unreasonable and hard. I think in the minority bill there still remains some unreasonable provisions. While we wish to keep out all laborers, it is not only a wise policy for us to allow Chinese merchants free access to this country, but that right is specially guaranteed by treaty, so it would be both unwise and illegal for us to interfere with it, and I think that the provisions for admitting the exempt classes are too severe in both bills and ought to be moderated.

I think we can safely detect the fraudulent merchant without frightening away the genuine merchant. We are all looking to the East as a profitable market. We hope in the coming years to find there a large outlet for our surplus products, and also a field for our inventions, and that we may take a large part in the development there of the materials of the new civilization. To do this our mutual intercourse, particularly mercantile, should be as free and unhampered as possible; and yet under either bill, as it is now framed, no agent of a China commercial house could enter the United States at all for the purpose of either buying or selling goods. Such an exclusion seems to me not only of doubtful validity under the treaty, but also clearly unwise and impolitic, and tending to restrict at the outset our trade with China, to excite against us unfriendly feelings which will throw trade to our competitors, and to make it difficult for even those who wish to trade with us to do so.

I think that all classes except laborers ought to be admitted here freely, and with only such regulations as will insure against a laborer fraudulently personating them. It seems to me we should be abundantly protected by simply extending the provisions of the existing laws, including the law of 1888, whose present validity is doubtful, until the expiration of the treaty. At present the Chinese here are steadily diminishing in number. Their immigration under the present law is not a menace, and its extension would create no new antagonism in China, would not interfere with our trade relations there, and would satisfactorily accomplish all that anyone openly aims at—the thorough exclusion of Chinese laborers. To-day, under existing laws, the Chinese problem is not the one most dangerous to our labor or to our population.

There is a vast immigration to our Atlantic ports much more dangerous to us, in my opinion, than the small number of Chinamen who are smuggled in. The vicious and degraded and ignorant immigration from Southern Europe, which has been increasing recently so largely, seems to me much more deserving of attention and legislation than the handful of Chinese. Under our recent prosperity it has largely increased, and although we are now so large that it is absorbed without attracting immediate attention, yet it is surely lowering the average of our citizenship, lowering the value of our labor, and lowering the standard of our living and of our intelligence. A stricter immigration law, which will apply not only to Chinese, but to all other peoples whose coming degenerates us, is to my mind one of the most urgent and imperative duties of this Congress. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PARKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by

Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10363. An act to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station on Ocracoke Island, on the coast of North Carolina; and

H. R. 13360. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, this bill now under consideration by the House, and which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, is intended to continue in force the laws excluding Chinese laborers from coming to this country and also to apply those laws to our insular possessions. It has been the aim of the Committee on Foreign Affairs not alone to reenact the present exclusion laws, but also to strengthen them in all essential provisions for the purpose of securing a more certain and efficient enforcement of the same.

This bill should be so framed that it will absolutely prohibit the coming to our shores of Chinese laborers, yet we should not place unnecessary burdens or humiliating conditions upon those classes desiring admission, who, by the treaty made between this country and China, are expressly permitted to come here. China is entitled to the same fair deal and honorable treatment as is accorded to any other nation. We should endeavor to establish friendly relations and encourage the growth of trade and commerce with that country. Such growth in trade and commerce will be mutually beneficial to both nations. China in the near future, it seems to me, presents great commercial possibilities, at least until she has developed her home resources. Not only should a due regard for our growing trade and commerce with this great nation inspire friendly relations and fair dealing, but national honor requires it. Any other course would be a violation of that comity which exists between all nations and should exist between this country and China, and it would be a violation of our solemn treaty obligations.

Labor leaders and all other persons who appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs in behalf of this bill agree that unnecessary restrictions should not be placed upon the exempted classes desiring admission to the United States. No one advocates the placing of annoying or harsh conditions upon the exempted classes seeking admission to our shores, but such provisions and safeguards must be placed around their admission as experience has shown to be necessary to prevent Chinese laborers from gaining admission under the pretense of belonging to the exempted classes. Our right to absolutely prohibit the coming here of Chinese laborers can not be questioned. By treaty made between the United States and China, proclaimed by the President of the United States on December 8, 1894, China expresses a "desire to prohibit the emigration of such laborers from China to the United States."

Article I of said treaty reads:

The high contracting parties agree that for a period of ten years, beginning with the date of the exchange of the ratification of this convention, the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers to the United States shall be absolutely prohibited.

This treaty therefore gives us a clear right to exclude this class of Chinese. The immigration of Chinese to this country commenced about fifty years ago. A book entitled "Chinese in California" states:

On the 1st of January, 1850, having been attracted by the gold, there were in California of Chinese 789 men and 2 women. In January, 1851, there were 4,018 men and 7 women; in May, 1852, 11,780 men and 7 women. At this time the State tried to stay the current of immigration by imposing a tax as a license to mine. In 1868, when the Burlingame treaty was ratified, there had arrived in California about 80,000 Chinese.

In 1880 the United States census gives the number of Chinese within our borders as 105,465. The census of 1890 gives the number in the United States proper, Alaska, and Hawaii at 126,778; 31,663 of these were in Alaska and Hawaii, and 12,360 of this number were Japanese in Hawaii.

According to the census of 1900 there were 119,050 Chinese in the United States proper, Alaska, and Hawaii.

Of the 119,050 Chinese returned at the Twelfth Census, 25,767 were enumerated in Hawaii, 3,116 in Alaska, 304 at military and naval stations abroad, and 89,863 in the United States proper. As to the number of Chinese in the Philippine Islands, Governor Taft states in his testimony before the Committee on Immigration of the Senate that—

There are 50,000 in the city of Manila. That would be one-sixth of the population of Manila. That proportion to the population is not maintained through the islands. Indeed, I should be very much surprised if any proper census showed more than 250,000 Chinese in the whole archipelago, and my judgment is there are not more than 150,000.

The landing upon the Pacific coast of an ever-increasing number of Chinese laborers, the great bulk of whom located in California, and who by their cheap methods of living supplanted our own laboring people, creating a hatred against them, finally resulted in disorder and riots. The ever-increasing stream of Asiatic hordes landing upon the Pacific coast seriously alarmed the people of California, they believing that unless this tide was checked they were threatened with a serious menace, and in response to their earnest appeal Congress enacted the first Chinese-exclusion law, dated May 6, 1882, suspending the coming to the United States of Chinese laborers for a period of ten years.

This character of legislation is unusual; it is not directed against any nation in the world excepting China. It is, therefore, proper that this House should offer some reasons for this unusual action, some reasons for its justification.

To permit the coming here of an alien race, and to place them side by side with our own people, a race whose social plane is so radically different, whose standard of living is so much lower than our own, a race which can never be assimilated, can not but bring deplorable and disastrous results.

Along this line it may be interesting to note the statement of the imperial Chinese consul-general in San Francisco. He says:

They work more cheaply than whites; they live more cheaply; they send their money out of the country to China; they have no intention of remaining in the United States, and they do not adopt American manners, but live in colonies and not after the American fashion.

I doubt if anyone will seriously contend that this alien race can be assimilated with our own. That they can not, it seems to me, may reasonably be taken as a conceded fact. The great Chinese Empire, with its 400,000,000 of people, can pour into our country 10,000,000 of her laboring people, and not know that a single person has left its shores. If we permit the vast hordes of China to come here we will, by their cheap living and low standard of wages, supplant our laboring people; yes, will do worse than that, will reduce them to degradation and want. Will anyone doubt this?

Let me read you a few extracts from opinions by experts and students of this Chinese question. England's expert agent, Mr. Bourne, after a careful and extensive inquiry in China, says the truth is:

That a man of good physical and intellectual qualities, regarded merely as an economic, is turned out cheaper by the Chinese than by any other race. He is deficient in the higher moral qualities, individual trustworthiness, public spirit, sense of duty, and active courage—a group of qualities, perhaps, best represented in our language by the word "manliness"—but in the humble moral qualities of patience, mental and physical, and perseverance in labor he is unrivaled.

Mr. Wildman, our late consul-general at Hongkong, says:

No occidental can comprehend the full measure of Chinese economy. It is an art and a science that has been perfected through the centuries. * * * Two cents a day is a fair estimate per head of what it costs to feed 300,000,000 of China's 400,000,000. * * * Absence of nerves and ability to suffer is a God-given gift, and makes the Chinese equal to an existence that would blot out European civilization in two generations. One can not but wonder if in the struggle for the possession of the earth that is now taking place, the white man of "nerves" may not in the end go down before the yellow man without "nerves."

Mr. Kipling, after a close study of the Chinese people, says that they are "a people without nerves as without digestion, and, if reports speak truly, without morals."

He further says:

There are three races who can work, but there is only one that can swarm.

These people work and spread. They pack close and eat everything, and they can live on nothing.

And again he says:

They will overwhelm the world.

He also says that when they come in competition with the Hindoo and the Japanese, even these people with their low standard of living are compelled to give way and can not compete with the Chinese, who stand upon a still lower social plane.

Similar views are entertained by innumerable other experts on this question. The two races can not live side by side; one or the other must go under. Can anyone fail to see that there would spring up strife and hatred between the two races, resulting in disorders, riots, and bloodshed? This being so, are we not justified in preventing such a state of affairs, not alone for the best interests of our people but also for the best interests of the Chinese people?

There is, however, a greater reason why Chinese laborers should be absolutely prohibited from coming here, and that is that by their low social standard and cheap living they become a serious menace to the welfare of our laboring people, supplanting them in their employment, and unless their admission is prohibited will reduce them to degradation and want. I hope the day will never come when our laboring people will be reduced to a social plane that will compel them to compete with the degraded hordes of China. It has been the principal glory of our country that the masses of our people—the laboring people—have been reasonably prosperous and have enjoyed some of the comforts of life common to our times and country, and have also been enabled to educate their children and to properly fit them for American citizenship. The moment that you reduce the laboring people of this country to poverty and want by the policy of permitting the degraded hordes of China to come here and to supplant them, or by any other policy, then, when that day comes, the chief glory of our country will have gone.

I am aware that there are some people who have no sympathy for these exclusion laws, who condemn all labor organizations and labor leaders. We hear them apply to labor representatives epithets such as "agitator" and "demagogue." It may be true that some labor leaders have not been wise in the discharge of the sacred trust committed to them by their fellow-men; but, Mr. Chairman, the labor leader who works honestly and faithfully for the best interests of the people he represents is not an agitator, is not a demagogue, but is a public benefactor.

It is not enmity toward the Chinese race as such that induces the enactment of these laws; these restrictive laws spring from the highest motives of self-preservation, a God-given law. They are necessary for the preservation of the masses of the American people; for our civilization itself. The moment you reduce the high and intelligent standard of the laboring people of our country that moment you reduce the standard of our nation as a whole.

The working people of this country unanimously demand this legislation. Their representatives have appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and have earnestly pleaded for the enactment of these laws. Thousands of petitions have been received by this House from labor organizations located in all parts of the country praying for the passage of this bill, and that Congress express in unmistakable terms its determination to protect them from this threatened and most serious menace to their welfare.

Mr. Chairman, I ask this legislation in the name of the laboring people of this country, that class of our people whose welfare in the past has made us one of the greatest and most progressive nations in the world. [Loud applause.]

CONVENTION OF DECEMBER 8, 1894.

[Signed at Washington March 17, 1894. Ratification advised by the Senate August 13, 1894. Ratified by the President August 22, 1894. Ratified by the Emperor of China in due form. Ratifications exchanged at Washington December 7, 1894. Proclaimed December 8, 1894.]

Whereas on the 17th day of November, A. D. 1880, and of Kwanghsü, the sixth year, tenth moon, fifteenth day, a treaty was concluded between the United States and China for the purpose of regulating, limiting, or suspending the coming of Chinese laborers to, and their residence in, the United States;

And whereas the Government of China, in view of the antagonism and much deprecated and serious disorders to which the presence of Chinese laborers has given rise in certain parts of the United States, desires to prohibit the emigration of such laborers from China to the United States;

And whereas the two Governments desire to cooperate in prohibiting such emigration and to strengthen in other ways the bonds of friendship between the two countries;

And whereas the two Governments are desirous of adopting reciprocal measures for the better protection of the citizens or subjects of each within the jurisdiction of the other;

Now, therefore, the President of the United States has appointed Walter Q. Gresham, Secretary of State of the United States, as his plenipotentiary, and His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China has appointed Yang Yü, officer of the second rank, subdirector of the court of sacrificial worship, and envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States of America, as his plenipotentiary; and the said plenipotentiaries having exhibited their respective full powers, found to be in due and good form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The high contracting parties agree that for a period of ten years, beginning with the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers to the United States shall be absolutely prohibited.

ARTICLE II.

The preceding article shall not apply to the return to the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States, or property therein of the value of $1,000, or debts of like amount due him and pending settlement. Nevertheless, every such Chinese laborer shall, before leaving the United States, deposit, as a condition of his return, with the collector of customs of the district from which he departs, a full description in writing of his family, or property, or debts, as aforesaid, and shall be furnished by said collector with such certificate of his right to return under this treaty as the laws of the United States may now or hereafter prescribe and not inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty; and should the written description aforesaid be proved to be false, the right of return thereunder, or of continued residence after return, shall in each case be forfeited. And such right of return to the United States shall be exercised within one year from the date of leaving the United States; but such right of return to the United States may be extended for an additional period, not to exceed one year, in cases where by reason of sickness or other cause of disability beyond his control, such Chinese laborer shall be rendered unable sooner to return, which facts shall be fully reported to the Chinese consul at the port of departure and by him certified to the satisfaction of the collector of the port at which such Chinese subject shall land in the United States. And no such Chinese laborer shall be permitted to enter the United States by land or sea without producing to the proper officer of the customs the return certificate herein required.

ARTICLE III.

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, of coming to the United States and residing therein. To entitle such Chinese subjects as are above described to admission into the United States, they may produce a certificate from their Government or the government where they last resided, viséed by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence they depart.

It is also agreed that Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries, subject to such regulations by the Government of the United States as may be necessary to prevent said privilege of transit from being abused.

ARTICLE IV.

In pursuance of Article III of the Immigration Treaty between the United States and China, signed at Peking on the 17th day of November, 1880 (the 15th day of the tenth month of Kwanghsü, sixth year), it is hereby understood and agreed that Chinese laborers or Chinese of any other class, either permanently or temporarily residing in the United States, shall have for the protection of their persons and property all rights that are given by the laws of the United States to citizens of the most favored nation, excepting the right to become naturalized citizens. And the Government of the United States reaffirms its obligation, as stated in said Article III, to exert all its power to secure protection to the persons and property of all Chinese subjects in the United States.

ARTICLE V.

The Government of the United States, having by an act of Congress approved May 5, 1892, as amended by an act approved November 3, 1893, required all Chinese laborers lawfully within the limits of the United States before the passage of the first-named act to be registered, as in said acts provided, with a view of affording them better protection, the Chinese Government will not object to the enforcement of such acts, and reciprocally the Government of the United States recognizes the right of the Government of China to enact and enforce similar laws or regulations for the registration, free of charge, of all laborers, skilled or unskilled (not merchants as defined by said acts of Congress), citizens of the United States in China, whether residing within or without the treaty ports.

And the Government of the United States agrees that within twelve months from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, and annually thereafter, it will furnish to the Government of China registers or reports showing the full name, age, occupation, and number or place of residence of all other citizens of the United States, including missionaries, residing both within and without the treaty ports of China, not including, however, diplomatic and other officers of the United States residing or traveling in China upon official business, together with their body and household servants.

ARTICLE VI.

This convention shall remain in force for a period of ten years, beginning with the date of the exchange of ratifications, and if six months before the expiration of the said period of ten years neither Government shall have formally given notice of its final termination to the other, it shall remain in full force for another like period of ten years.

In faith whereof we, the respective plenipotentiaries, have signed this convention and have hereunto affixed our seals.

Done, in duplicate, at Washington, the 17th day of March, A. D. 1894.

WALTER Q. GRESHAM. [SEAL.]
(Chinese signature.) [SEAL.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, as a member of the committee, a few words upon the question embodied in the majority report and the minority report.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, that history often repeats itself. In this case, as between the United States and China, we must reverse the adage and declare that history often reverses itself. A brief recital of the treaty formed and the provisions contained therein will show it. I say that history is now reversing itself; and while we are holding out our hands and begging for the trade of the Orient, we are at the same time saying to the people of this great Empire, "We do not want you to come to our country."

That is the English of the position now taken; and that is the reverse of what the position was when we first sent out commissioners to China to beg for a treaty with them. That was in 1868, Mr. Chairman, when we sent Burlingame and Stanton, two distinguished diplomats of our country, to negotiate a treaty with the Chinese. They accomplished it. They broke down the Chinese wall, so that the commerce of this country was permitted to go to China and the commerce of China permitted to come back to this country.

The greatness of the work thus accomplished was recognized throughout the country in general, but especially in California, where these gentlemen received on their return from China probably the greatest ovation that was ever paid to any two men in America. They had accomplished the great feat which had been thought impossible—the breaking down of the Chinese wall and the opening up of commerce between our country and China. They were taken off the cars at Pittsburg, Pa., and given an ovation. They were complimented everywhere for their wonderful feat. They received the same sort of greeting when they landed at the capital—in the city of Washington.

We were the supplicants for the treaty. We asked to have it framed, and China consented. Mr. Chairman, let us look at some of the provisions of this treaty. As I am suffering from a severe cold, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read section 1 of that treaty.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION 1. That whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interest of that country or to endanger the good order of said country, or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, that is the first clause of this treaty. I will refer to subsequent clauses and show what the character of the treaty was and what its provisions were. I might as well have read now the fourth and fifth clauses of this same treaty, commonly known as the Burlingame treaty.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. IV. The twenty-ninth article of the treaty of the 18th of June, 1858, having stipulated for the exemption of Christian citizens of the United States and Chinese converts from persecution in China on account of their faith, it is further agreed that citizens of the United States in China of every religious persuasion, and Chinese subjects in the United States shall enjoy entire liberty of conscience and shall be exempt from all disability or persecution on account of their religious faith or worship in either country.

ART. V. The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects, respectively, from the one country to the other for the purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as a permanent residence. The high contracting parties therefore join in reprobating any other than an entirely voluntary emigration for these purposes. They consequently agree to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subjects to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or to any other foreign country, or for a Chinese subject or citizen of the United States to take citizens of the United States to China or to any other foreign country without their free and voluntary consent, respectively.

Mr. HOOKER. Those are the provisions of the fourth and fifth sections of this treaty. It will be seen, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that we were the supplicants for the treaty. We applied for the privilege of making this treaty with the Chinese. Subsequently, when it was found by the citizens of the Pacific coast that the Chinese were a nonhomogeneous population that would not and could not mix with ours, that such intermingling was not desired by us nor by China, and when China had said at all times, "We have no desire that our people shall leave our country and go to the United States"—when the people of California found that this Chinese population was not suitable to be assimilated with our own, the objection was made to their further immigration, and what was the result?

When we applied to China to change the treaty so as to exclude her criminals, China, with a liberality and spirit of civilization that we may well envy, said: "All right; we agree to such an amendment to the treaty." And in any instance where application was made to change these treaties have they objected? A gentleman from California stood here as a representative of that region of the country—Mr. Page, an old Representative from California—and introduced a clause in the succeeding treaty which restricted the limitation for twenty years. I chanced to be a member of the House then and I suggested to the gentleman from California, who sat on the other side of the Chamber, "If you put this restriction to twenty years, though you are a Republican and though you have a Republican President—the accomplished President Arthur—he will construe it as defeating the purposes of the treaty and as violating the obligations of the treaty, and he will veto your bill."

Mr. Page would not accept my admonition or my amendment to put it to ten years, but insisted upon having it twenty years. He put in the period of twenty years, and the result was as I had predicted: The President of the United States, then a Republican President, vetoed the treaty. It came back to the House and was amended subsequently so as to put it at ten years, and at ten years was passed, and it received the approbation of the President.

Now, sir, these are the facts with regard to the history of this treaty. The original treaty was made at our instance, and all the amendments have been made at our instance, and when the people of California and the laboring interests of this country insisted upon it that the Chinese cooly should not come, we had another treaty with the Chinese and we limited the restriction for a certain period. We sent a commission, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not these regulations were unfavorable to the Chinese. At the head of that commission stood Senator Morton, of Indiana, the then leader of the Senate on the Republican side in that Chamber. He was sent there with a commission to investigate that question as to how far the importation of Chinese labor affected the labor of California and the labor of the people of the United States, and he made a report to the Senate; and I shall ask the Clerk to read from the report of this Republican Senator as to what he reported when he came back to the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

At a time when those countries have adopted a liberal policy and in that respect have yielded to Western civilization, and have especially recognized the force of the example and policy of the United States, it is proposed that we shall take a step backward by the adoption of their cast-off policy of exclusion. The argument set up here in favor of this is precisely that which was so long used to excuse or justify the same policy in China and Japan, namely, that the admission of foreigners tended to interfere with their trade and the labor of their people and corrupt their morals and degrade their religion.

Mr. HOOKER. Now, that was the report written by Senator Morton and presented by him to the Senate, and it becomes a part of the record history of this country upon that subject. From the earliest days of the Chinese Empire, from the days of Confucius, their great lawgiver, they had lived as an exclusive people, they had built a wall around their country, so to speak, and lived within themselves. It was a country that had existed for a great many years. It had grown to have, as it now has, over 400,000,000 of people. It is true that they are copper-complexioned and almond-eyed, but the gentlemen who want to exclude all classes in contravention of the treaty certainly do not intend to get up an indictment against the Almighty because He created from the same origin people of different colors.

My honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], to whose oratory I always listen with great pleasure, and by whom I am always instructed, seems to think that because there is a Caucasian race to which he belongs, that therefore there are no other races. I am sure my honorable and amiable and Christian friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NAPHEN], who comes from the same State that Burlingame did, would not want to write an indictment against the Almighty because he made people of different color.

I am sure that they have hearts too large, patriotism too great, intelligence too widespread, to wish to do this; for if it were a mere question of color, Mr. Chairman, my honorable friend from Missouri, and my honorable friend from Massachusetts, when they look to their own origin, might have some question as to whether or not they should be embraced in the very category of objectors which they make the Chinese to be [laughter]; for, Mr. Chairman, it is said by the scientific anthropologists of the world, by the men who have studied the history of the human race, that our great progenitor, our great forefounder who, according to the tenets of the Christian religion, is the beginning and author of all the races of the world—Adam himself—was a red man.

I do not know how true it is, but that is what has been reported, that he was a red man. Whether he was like the Indian of America, from whom you have taken all the great possessions which the great Creator gave him, or whether he was another sort of color, I do not know, but that is what the scientists and the experts say, and therefore we can not object to people on account of their color. I remember, Mr. Chairman—and I am old enough to remember—that when there grew up in this country what was known as the Know Nothing party I heard the same tirade against that splendid race, that magnificent people, the Irish.

An appeal of the same sort was made to exclude the Irishman from emigrating to this country, and the same sort of appeal was made against that magnificent race, the German, who in the midst of their great primeval forests uttered the first great sentiments of liberty founded upon community, independence, and home rule. [Applause.] And so we must not set ourselves up as judges against all the balance of the world because we happen to be Caucasian and white. These Chinese have lived in their own country, claiming no relation with the balance of the world, asking no relation with the balance of the world, and their history goes back to the time of Confucius, the great primal lawgiver, and far beyond the time of Confucius the august Empire extends, until its origin is lost in the twilight of fable.

They are probably the oldest race on the globe that we know of. They have sprung into wonderful importance by their great numbers, and while we are seeking their trade we certainly do not want to exclude what are called the favored classes. We do not want to exclude the merchant, the scholar, the teacher, the scientist, the statesman, the diplomat. By the bill which the majority report, and which I shall support, we say that we want these classes admitted. We say by the bill that we want the cool laborer excluded to suit the taste and disposition of the people of California and the laboring people of this country. We ought to do the Chinese at least the justice to say that when, under the Burlingame treaty, they came to this country they rendered a wonderful service to the coast of California.

It was a narrow strip of land stretching along the borders of the Pacific slope. It was isolated from the East. It had what they call their tule or swamp lands, and by this very report of Senator Morton the Chinese are stated to have been greatly instrumental in reclaiming these lands, and they were the actual laborers who built the railroads that connected California with the East. They stand, therefore, in that attitude, that though unsuited for citizens we all agree, and the majority of the committee have reported the bill to exclude the coolies, but we say that all the persons that are embraced in what are called the exempt classes ought to be allowed access to this country whenever and wherever they wish.

Now, my honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said that the Chinese who came to this country soon became teachers; that the Chinese were very thrifty; that they were exceedingly desirous of bettering their condition. In that respect they do not differ from the Anglo-Saxon race.

But China herself has never desired that her subjects should come here, and when they have come they have come against the will of the Chinese Government, and not with its approbation. Every restriction has been thrown around the admission of the cool laborer. We do not propose to extend these restrictions to the scholar, scientist, the diplomat, or to any other class except the cool laborer.

Now, my honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] says they become teachers. Well, what if they do? Do you object to that? I am not at all sure but Massachusetts borrowed her idea of an enforced public-school system from the Chinese. They have that enforced school system there, according to my friend from Missouri, and when the parents do not send the children the parents are chastised instead of the child, to use the elegant phraseology of my friend from Missouri. Now, I say it is not at all certain but Massachusetts, great as she is, wonderful as she is, learned as she is, borrowed from the Chinese the idea of the enforced school system which we have adopted now all over this country so far as public schools are concerned.

Surely we can not object to those people protecting their own interests. We can not object to their having their treaties made as best they may have them made, and having them observed. It is the duty of every government when it makes a treaty such as we have made with the Chinese to observe it. It is one of the first rules applying to the morals of nations that when you make a treaty you must observe it. I will now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read Article XXIX of the treaty.

The Clerk read as follows:

Article XXIX of the treaty provides as follows:

"The principles of the Christian religion as professed by the Protestant and Roman Catholic churches are recognized as teaching men to do good and to do to others as they would have others do to them. Hereafter those who quietly profess and teach these doctrines shall not be harassed or persecuted on account of their faith. Any person, whether citizen of the United States or Chinese convert, who, according to these tenets, peaceably teaches and practices the principles of Christianity shall in no case be interfered with or molested."

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, that is a pretty liberal treaty so far as religion is concerned. We were sending our missionaries from the Catholic, the Presbyterian, the Episcopalian, the Methodist, and the Baptist churches to teach these people Christianity. They received us and by treaty agreed that our missionaries should be treated with respect, that they should be allowed to be sent there. They are sent there. Recent disturbances have occurred which led to the occupancy of China by numerous countries, our own among the number, but that has passed away.

So far as the treaty stipulations are concerned, the Chinese have always been liberal in making them. They have never sought to enforce the presence of their people here; but now, when the majority of the committee propose that they shall allow their teachers, their professors, their students, their statesmen, their diplomats, and those who travel for pleasure to come to this country, why should we want to exclude them? There is no reason for it. It is unjust, it is harsh, it is violative of the treaty, it is inhuman. I am in favor of excluding those who would make a population that could not mix with our own; but for the purposes for which the exempted classes come here why should we want to exclude them?

Now, there is a provision in the old treaty that even the coolies are entitled to transit through the country, and I am not certain but what there is one clause of the report of the majority of the committee, or of the bill reported by the majority of the committee, that ought to be amended. They are entitled to transportation across the country but not to occupancy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we ought to observe these treaty stipulations with the Chinese, which stipulations were originally made at our request. We regarded ourselves as effecting a very wonderful revolution in the history of these people, and she may be destined to perform a very important part in the future history of the countries of the world.

My honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and so did my friend from California [Mr. KAHN] say that all the great countries of Europe—England, Germany, France, Italy—and all the other great countries of the world had no exclusion laws. Why? Probably because they were not so contiguous to the Orient as America; but they have none whatever, and if we have an exclusion law which was adopted primarily to meet the wishes of the people of the coast of California, for which I voted and which I intend to vote for now—if that is the case, why should we seek to exclude the intelligent men of the Chinese nation, who come here not to become citizens, but merely as temporary teachers, professors, diplomats, or visitors for pleasure or curiosity?

I can see no reason for it. Now, that portion of the bill which the committee struck out provided that vessels going from San Francisco and sailing to the Orient, in the original bill as introduced by the gentleman from California, provided that they should be sailed by American sailors. That provision of the bill, however, was stricken out, and they, like all other vessels of all other countries which ply on the Pacific coast, can be manned largely by Chinese sailors. They say that the vessel owners make it pay. Very true. They naturally go where they can get labor the cheapest, if equally efficient, of equal endurance, equally suited to the climate into which the vessels have to go.

Therefore that provision of the bill was stricken out, and I hope it will not be inserted by a substitute or otherwise. We must act in this matter as a nation of people composed of many sovereign States. I probably ought to correct myself in the use of that expression. We are a Government composed, gentlemen, of many representatives of sovereign States; of Senators, each elected by the States, and Representatives by districts. We all admit, both in the Senate and here and throughout the country, that there is one great code of morals which all nations ought to adopt, and that is the code of morals which was preached by the humble Disciple from Galilee, the carpenter's Son, the Great Author of the truths of the religion which have existed from the time He spoke with simplicity and power, because He spoke the truth without any soldier at His back, without any company at His command, without any army to aid Him.

We all admit that, under the Christian religion, we are all descended from one ancestor—all the nations of the earth—and that we ought to be governed by the great cardinal principles of right and justice between governments as we are governed in our conduct in the observance of the laws toward our neighbor. The great cardinal principles embodied in the law written upon the tablets by that great man of the Israelitish nation, and which has existed from that day to this, in all denominations, whether they be Catholic, Methodist, Baptist, or Presbyterian, or whatever they are, all founded upon the great principles of truth taught by the simple Master of Galilee, who taught as man never taught, who spoke as man never spoke.

So that practically our obligation and duty as citizens and as a government is to be governed by these great cardinal principles which should rule the action of nations as it does that of individuals. Give to the people of California the exclusion of the cooly. Give to the laborer of this Government freedom from competition with cooly labor, but do not deny the intelligent classes admission to this country.

I am not aware, Mr. Chairman, that there has ever been an effort, either by representatives of China or by the Chinese Government itself, to send a single citizen of that country to this. I am not aware that in any treaty they have stipulated, or in the original treaty negotiated by Burlingame and Stanton in 1868, that there should be free intercourse between the citizens of China and America. That was the first exclusion of cooly labor, and that, I agree, is right. That is what we expect to see; but when we extend it to other classes, in my opinion, we are acting unwisely with the people, we are acting unjustly to the treaties which we have ourselves formed, and which are equally binding upon us as they are upon the Chinese.

Now, in California, when these Chinese came there, they passed laws requiring, in the city of San Francisco, that the Chinese should live in quarters to themselves. I believe that law is still in existence. They submitted to that. They never objected to it. Some years ago I chanced, Mr. Chairman, to go to our Pacific coast, and I saw at one point 2,000 Chinamen working upon a railroad. They were of large stature, strong, muscular men, very unlike the Chinese that I had been accustomed to see here in the city of Washington or in the State of my home.

I talked with the gentleman who was conducting the work on the railroad, and I said to him, "What is the character of his labor?" He said, "They are the most docile, bidable labor I have ever had control of from any quarter. They are exceedingly efficient; they are exceedingly obedient." But we went further on our way to California. I talked to the people of San Francisco. I talked to the people there who had been in intercourse with these people. They said that as domestic servants they made the finest they had ever seen. They are a remarkably imitative race. They adapt themselves to all conditions.

I recollect very well that the commission to which I belonged—we were looking into Indian matters—were invited to the navy-yard at Mare Island by the officers, whom I have since met in this city, and the lady of the house gave us our tea on the green grass in that beautiful country that nature has so much favored; that she has given them the sunlit valleys covered with the natural products, and she has at the same time given them the lofty mountains, sometimes clad in sunshine and sometimes covered with shade and sometimes the home of the storm king. She has given them the gentle zephyrs that blow the sunny and wondrously soft waves of the Pacific, until they have a climate where you men of Massachusetts have to go who are afflicted with diseases of the lung.

It is a country of wonderful salubrity, and the Chinese who came there, as said by my distinguished friend from Missouri, fell in love with it, and regarded it as heaven. I think they exhibited themselves as good judges when they said so. But his argument does not exactly agree with another one of his friends, who says that the Chinese accumulate a great deal of money because they can live upon little, and on my friend's own theory they niggardly hold it, and then he subsequently declares that when they die they want to go back to the Celestial Empire.

They may regard it as a hard life here, and they want to get back home to be buried in the Celestial Empire, which has been the name of China from the time it was known to the civilized world. We therefore can not assert that in any instance, at any time, or in any way, the Chinese people violated the treaties we have made with them. The Chinese Government has not violated them. There are coolies who come across the Canadian border and through the Mexican territory, but violations of the law by individuals against the consent of the Chinese Empire or the Chinese Government can not implicate that Government in those violations any more than the violation of law by a citizen of this country can make this Government responsible for his action. I say, therefore, it behooves us to treat these people with justice and deal with them fairly, because the God of nature, the God of power, has placed them there and given them the color they have. We ought not to undertake to violate the treaty because of that.

My honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] says that the exclusion of the Chinese cooly labor is very analogous to the condition which exists in the Southern States with reference to the negroes. I differ with my honorable friend. I see no analogy whatever. The slave labor came to us long years ago, and for three hundred years the slaves of the South lived in contact with and under subjugation of the white race of the South. After three hundred years of contact with the white race of the South, though they were brought in sloops by our industrious friends from the East, from the southern shores of Africa, and subsequently transmitted South, at the expiration of three hundred years, when they were manumitted as a result of the war and became free, they showed that the contact with the white race had made of them the most obedient, tractable laborers that ever lived.

They defended the homes and lives and children of the Confederate soldier when not a single man oftentimes was left at home to guard the family. They behaved with wonderful fidelity. They were manumitted as a result of the war. They are in our midst; we have to take care of them; but my honorable friend from Missouri very properly stated that is a local question. It is a local question belonging to each State where the colored man is. The history of the colored man during the Confederate war, and at all times, from the earliest occupancy of the Southern soil, has been that of fidelity to his master. There were some of them educated when they were slaves, and all of them now go to school, and the people of the South are treating them to-day with more justice, with more equity, with more uprightness than any laboring class of people on earth.

They are to-day—and I assert it from my own experience and observation—the best paid laborers on our continent. The general rule of employment in Mississippi, in Louisiana, in Alabama, in Georgia, in all the States where they are numerous, is that the owner of the land, the former master, furnishes the land, pays the taxes on it, furnishes the implements and keeps them in repair, furnishes the animals, the mules and horses, and feeds them, and the negro laborer draws one-half of the product—one-half of the corn, one-half of the cotton, one-half of the potatoes, one-half of every product. I assert to-day that neither in England, nor in France, nor in Germany, nor in any country on earth is there a set of laborers better cared for than the laboring free negroes of the South.

More than that, under our laws made by white men like you, made by men who understand the relations between the white man and the negro, we tax all our property—and in the main it is owned by white people—we tax all of the real estate and a large part of the personal property. We tax our property, real and personal, and raise a school fund for the education of the negro children, and that school fund is divided equally between the children of educable age, whether white or black. That is the condition of affairs in the South.

Now, what would be said if in the South we proposed to treat the negro as you propose to treat the cooly? Suppose we should say that the negro threatened our civilization and we wanted to kill him, to destroy him, to banish him or deprive him of his equal rights under the law? He is tried by a jury. He has the right of testimony in the courts. I recollect on one occasion, in the early practice of my profession, I was employed to go in the State of Louisiana by a friend to defend his nephew, a boy 21 years of age, who had killed a negro. I tried that boy before a jury, every one of whom was a black man. The district attorney and the Government, who had the right to so many challenges, challenged every white man who had not formed or expressed an opinion, and there were only three or four left.

So that the negro in the South bears no analogy to your cooly in California. Now, let us alone and we will settle this question. We will settle it to suit ourselves. Do not interfere with us in this. When you undertake to appoint a committee in the House of Representatives to go from this country, whether you send them to the grand and magnificent Empire State of New York, as you do not propose to do, or whether you send them alone to the Southern States, as you propose to do, to look into the question of how many colored men are deprived of the right to vote; when you undertake to do that by a committee appointed by a Speaker of this House, under a rule adopted by three men, you will illustrate, Mr. Chairman, the long ago oft repeated aphorism that "Power is always stealing from the many to the few."

You have it strikingly illustrated in the rules under which you sit here. This House of Representatives, where the great men of the past were heard on all great questions—this great debating school of the nation—under the rules which you now have, this body has its lips closed and sealed. You can not get five minutes on any bill or proposition except by permission of the Committee on Rules, the majority of whom consist of the Speaker and two men on the Republican side—a partisan body—and through this partisan body it is proposed by what is called the Crumpacker resolution to appoint this committee to go to the South to look into the condition of the negroes, who, it is claimed, are unconstitutionally denied the privilege of voting.

Mr. Chairman, with reference to the constitution of Mississippi I want to say that the great leader in the convention which framed that constitution, the man who put in the intelligence qualification and the poll-tax qualification, was the late Senator George, from our State. He was the leader in that convention; he was the master mind of that body. He was a great lawyer; he was a debater of tremendous power. He came back to the Senate of the United States after his labors in that convention.

Three of the greatest lawyers in that body—Edmunds, of Vermont, a brilliant, splendid, and well-equipped lawyer; HOAR, I thank God is yet in the prime of life, a magnificent and splendid lawyer, and ALDRICH, the father of the Senate—they all assailed the constitution of Mississippi. They said that it was violative of the Constitution of the United States. They said that it robbed citizens of the United States of their right to vote. They assailed it with gigantic power and strength and argument. In reply to the three speeches of those great lawyers, one from Vermont, one from Massachusetts, and one from Rhode Island, our late Senator, Senator George, spoke for two days. You can all find his speech in the RECORD. And when he had done not a voice was raised to reply to him. Those great lawyers grounded their arms and yielded to the powerful argument of Senator George maintaining the right of Mississippi to create the constitution which she did.

I hope, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the other side of the House will consider long and ponder well before they commit themselves to the effort to send a partisan committee, directed by a partisan House, to violate the great sovereign power of the States who alone under the Constitution are possessed of the power to determine who shall be electors. They possess it, and they only. When you undertake to rob the States of the South of this power, you are preparing a time to come when under other circumstances the great States of the North and the States of the East may find they have the poisoned chalice presented to their own lips.

I say, therefore, leave us alone; let us be as we are. We were all reduced to poverty by the results of the war. The lambent flames of the incendiary licked our housetops and the crackling rafters crumbled into ashes on our hearthstones. We bore it all; aye, and we bore the terrors of the fancied "reconstruction" that never reconstructed, until you left it to the sovereign States of the South to come back into the Union, into the household of their fathers, under conventions called by the States—to come back again and renew their allegiance to the Government.

Bayonet and sword could not force them. Unjust reconstruction measures could not compel them. But they came of their own accord, by their own volition. They said in the emphatic language of the great leader from the State of Georgia, Benjamin Hill: "We are here in the household of our fathers with as high an allegiance and as devoted an affection for the common flag as any man who comes from the North or the East, and, if you let us alone, we intend to stay here asserting our rights and infringing upon the rights of no one else." [Applause on Democratic side.] And so, I say, with regard to this particular bill relating to the Chinese, let us exclude the coolies, but I ask my honorable friend from Missouri not to say that the case of the Chinese is analogous to that of the negroes, for it is not.

Mr. Chairman, I could say much more on this and kindred subjects. I will ask the committee to pardon me if with my feeble voice I say one word more upon a topic cognate to the subject-matter under consideration, and that is the office and function of the American people.

You say you live in the midst of the blaze of the nineteenth century; you say you are going to carry the commerce of America to the Orient; you say you are going to welcome a new state of affairs; you say are going to open the gates of the Orient; you are going to hunt for all the people of the world who are distressed or oppressed and give them the message of freedom. Is that your function? Is that your object and purpose? When we closed the Spanish war we did it by a treaty between Spain and the United States, and from that treaty I will ask the Clerk to read just two clauses.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Government of the United States is unable to modify the proposals heretofore made for the cession of the entire archipelago of the Philippines; but the American commissioners are authorized to offer to Spain, in case the cession should be agreed to, the sum of $20,000,000, to be paid in accordance with the terms fixed in the treaty of peace.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, that proposition was made by the American commissioners, not by the representatives of the Government of Spain. The latter never asked any money for the cession of the Philippines. There is another clause of that treaty, further along in the book, which I have sent to the desk, which I will have read in a few moments.

At this point I simply wish to emphasize the point that it was we who proposed to pay the $20,000,000. Did we gain that territory by conquest? Was it ours by force of arms? Did it belong to us because we had conquered it in the fighting at Manila and in the West Indies? If that was the fact, then why take $20,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States to make good our title? What authority had this Government or its commissioners at Paris to put their hands in the tax box of the people to take out $20,000,000 for the purpose of making good our title to the Philippines? I say none whatever; that it was an assumed authority by the Government of the United States; that they had no power to do that, but they did it.

The Spanish commissioners, in reply to that proposition from the American commissioners, said: "We do not want to sell the islands of the archipelago." What was the reply of the American commissioners? "Yes; but you must. We want it, and we intend to have it; and we will terminate the treaty consideration right now and go back to a condition of war if we do not get it." The Spanish commissioners replied in an article which is marked in the book before quoted from, and which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Spain then having on her part exhausted all diplomatic recourses in the defense of what she considers her rights, and even for an equitable compromise, the Spanish commissioners are now asked to accept the American proposition in its entirety and without further discussion, or to reject it, in which latter case, as the American Commission understands, the peace negotiations will end and the protocol of Washington will consequently be broken.

The Government of Her Majesty, moved by lofty reasons of patriotism and humanity, will not assume the responsibility of again bringing upon Spain all the horrors of war. In order to avoid them it resigns itself to the painful strait of submitting to the law of the victor, however harsh it may be, and as Spain lacks material means to defend the rights she believes are hers, having recorded them, she accepts the only terms the United States offers her for the concluding of the treaty of peace.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, you will see by the paragraphs which I have had read, and which I take from the book published of the proceedings at Paris in the making of the treaty of peace between us and Spain, what our Commissioners did, and what the Government afterwards ratified; and then, in violation, as was well said by Senator HOAR in that magnificent speech which he made some eighteen months ago, and which he did me the honor to send, under his frank, to Mississippi—this is but the substance of what he said:

With Punic faith to your allies, you have armed American citizens and sent them around the globe to the other side for the purpose of making an attack on the allies who helped you to conquer the archipelago.

He said much more. The speech is full of learning on the subject. It has never been answered. Nobody has ever attempted to answer it, either in the Senate nor in the House. It constitutes an array of facts with regard to the conduct of this Philippine war in which we are now month after month and week after week and year after year, long after the treaty of peace, sending around the globe American soldiers to shoot into the little brown Malay—he is not a yellow man, but he is a brown man; God Almighty made them of many colors and we can not change them, Mr. Chairman, he is a brown man—you have sent your American Army at the cost of millions of dollars, equipped with American money and armed with American guns, around the globe to shoot your civilization into the little brown Malay. You are doing it to-day and you do not know when you are going to stop it. I say, therefore, that this is another case somewhat analogous to the one before this committee.

Mr. Chairman, how much more time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute remaining.

Mr. HOOKER. Well, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I beg the pardon of the committee for detaining it so long. It was my purpose to yield to my neighbor and friend here what time I might have left, but I have been betrayed into going further into the subject than I thought. I have been animated by a desire to do justice to those with whom we have treaties and to see our country keep its bright and unimpaired condition of honor; that is, just and honest and upright toward the weak as well as the strong. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. POWERS of Maine having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. CROOK, one of his secretaries, who informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 4, 1902:

- H. R. 11011. An act granting an increase of pension to Emily J. Tallman; and
- H. R. 11619. An act granting an increase of pension to David A. Frier.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRICK].

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Chairman, the importance of this measure and the interest I have in it impels me not only to support it with my vote but also to urge it with my voice. So important is this bill that if its general object should fail I believe it would be the most paralyzing blow ever aimed at American labor or leveled at American civilization.

I do not wish to talk of the proposed law in its infinite detail, but rather to the broad purpose of its inception. No matter what some persons may say within this House or out of it about our country being an eleemosynary institution and the asylum of liberty, the soul of this legislation is thoroughly American. Its basic principle is founded entirely upon self-preservation, unstained by a single ungenerous or ignoble impulse.

The old law relative to Chinese exclusion is about to expire by inherent limitation. Since its enactment material changes have taken place in the evolution of American greatness. Since that time we have seen the flag rise resplendent over Hawaii; and then we saw it sadly fall under Grover Cleveland, leaving those bright, warm isles, the lonely derelict of a summer sea. We saw it rise again under William McKinley, to float there forever in the sunshine of a happy people. Since that time we have seen the boys of America take that flag of ours away over yonder, beyond the rim of the earth, and raise it high up above the shadows of every setting sun.

To-day we have new and untried problems to solve. They are the problems of American supremacy and of the markets of the world. They are the problems of our ever-marching, ever-conquering civilization. They come to us as the legacy of a war waged for humanity's sake alone. They bring to us sacred duties and responsibilities that can not be basely deserted nor honorably abandoned. They bring burdens to bear, but when did our people ever encounter a burden they did not conquer? All the light-houses of the world have been kindled in the conflict of flint and steel. The splendor of our American manhood always meets its burdens and bears its burdens and turns them into glory.

We will govern all these new and strange peoples—many of them Chinese—with all the kindness and liberty that play around our institutions; but I insist that always and forever it shall be done in a just regard to our people here at home.

I vote for and support this bill because I believe it will effectually conserve the honor and dignity of the American worker from all competition with foreign or insular Chinese cool labor, because I believe it fully meets the new and delicate condition of affairs in Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. It prevents Chinese immigration of labor into any of these possessions of ours. It restricts all Chinese migration from one insular possession to the other. But more than this, it says, in emphatic terms, that not a single Chinese laborer shall set his foot upon American soil. It promises the men of America that they are not only protected in their employment here, but also against cheap labor and its every result, directly or indirectly, from our island territory.

It is a matter of pride and satisfaction to me that I have been of some service in fortifying our outlying territories against Chinese invasion since they have come under our control.

Ought we to exclude them? That is the question. Every patriotic sentiment in me answers, yes.

In round numbers we have about 80,000,000 of people. The best estimate I can command puts the Chinese cooly at about 400,000,000. Think of it! Give these countless myriads, these incalculable hordes, free access to the best and most prosperous land in the world and it will need no straining imagination to prophesy that in the years to come the burning question will be, Shall the Anglo-Saxon and kindred races possess this country or shall the Mongolian control it? That proposition will be absolutely settled in the passage of this bill.

This legislation is not directed against these persons because they come from China or from any other country. America has always been the refuge of the oppressed from everywhere. The torch of its liberty has shed a flood of light and life into the dreary homes of all the sons of men of all the world. But it is a political, social, economical, and self-preserving proposition.

They would not only supplant American workmen and degrade American labor, but they would come to us in multiplied thousands, devoid of all racial and political homogeneity, bringing with them social vices and national habits that would surely contaminate the clear stream of Christian civilization and American institutions, that must inevitably lower the standard of citizenship and eventually undermine the Republic.

Dangerous as are their peculiar vices, their very virtues are still more perilous. Intelligent in their own way, pertinacious, crafty, patient, diplomatic, they are painfully industrious, brutally frugal, and fanatically fatalistic; a people to be feared; as changeless and unrelenting as eternity; the immutable progeny of ages gone and civilizations passed away. They never think of what a real man needs, of what he ought to have in this world of smiles and tears, to uplift himself and glorify his race and nation; but to him the sole query is, How can I barely live in the lowest stratum of animal existence and save the excess to carry back to the crumbling home of the ancestral graveyard?

Ought we to exclude them? Why, Mr. Chairman, every sacred tie that binds an American to his home and to his country demands their exclusion.

A country is great, not so much in the extent of its territory nor in the number of its inhabitants, but it is great, and great only, in the character of its people.

A republic must endure, if it live at all, in the intelligence and patriotism of its sons and daughters. That intelligence and patriotism is conceived and born in the university of the American home, the grandest educational institution in the world. In that school is taught the virtue of our daughters, the valor of our sons, and round its hallowed walls cling all the vines and flowers of our country's hope and joy. Within its sacred precincts dwell the sons of liberty, every one of whom holds the scepter of a king.

I want him to look and feel like a king; I want him to know enough to be a king. And I will never consent, by any act of mine, to have that home degraded, polluted, and impoverished by a people in whose lexicon there is no such word as "home."

The emigrant that comes here from England, Ireland, Germany, Poland, Sweden, Norway, France, Denmark, and other parts of Europe all arrive with that blessed word burning in their breasts and graven on their bones. They have sadly left friends and native soil for the priceless heritage found in a land of the free-born home that has reared the only true Republic that ever existed and which is about all that makes life worth living. They came here to make this their country; to live and fight for the flag, and to die beneath its folds. They are loyal and patriotic citizens. They have enriched our blood, ennobled and perpetuated the stock, and built up the home. They are here to become true Americans and add luster to the Stars and Stripes. They love their home and wife and child and friend.

Mr. Chairman, shall we now, in the full realization of our duties and responsibilities, recklessly forsake and turn over to the coolly laborer the last, best hope of the Republic? Shall we pursue a policy—a Fabian, cowardly, procrastinating policy—that shall usher in the countless hosts of an alien people to degenerate our race and despoil our labor—a people who have no regard for family, whose language holds no name of "home," in whose breast there comes no redeeming rapture even in the consecrated presence of a noble woman, and whose heart yields no responsive, civilizing throb even in the sanctified light of the fires of the hearthstone or the eye of wife and child? Every instinct of God-given self-defense, that law higher than all human statutes, revolts against it.

I would not break a single household god that belongs to the American workman; rather would I augment the joys and comforts of his fireside. It is his home; it is the one bright, glorious spot that nerves his arm and brain to sturdy, self-forgetting toil; it is the home of his wife and child; it is the silken cord that binds him to life and happiness; and I want him to own it without any mortgage upon it. I want it surrounded by health and prosperity, and filled with sunshine and song. I want its windows to gleam and shine with intelligence and its roof to float and flow with the red, white, and blue.

I believe it is better to look after the folks at home, to stand by our own people, than it is to corrode the shrine of free and dignified labor and corrupt the morals of our race in the vain attempt to Christianize a vast throng of orientals that would bring to us nothing but political demoralization and social despair. I believe the time has arrived for charity to begin at home. I believe that no one ever lost anything by building up his own family. I believe in standing by our own people.

I wish it could be. I want our laboring men to have enough to eat and wear; enough for sickness and old age. I want them to have enough to educate their children, and to lay by something for a rainy day and for their loved ones when they are gone. I would like to see them have some leisure and the means to improve it. I want them to have enough to meet the demands of modern civilization. I would like to see the wife with a new dress, wearing a smile on her face and some ribbons in her hair, and the hope of the Republic guaranteed by the flags that glow in the cheeks of the little children.

The only hand that can light the lamp of progress and prosperity is the hand of toil—of intelligent and exultant labor—and I want that hand and arm upheld and protected by this law.

I have always believed in rational protection. We are to-day more prosperous than ever before in the history of this or any other country through the wonderful resources of the soil, the genius and industry of our people, and the protection of our political policies. But the hour has come when we must protect not only industry and those employed in it, we must also protect men and citizenship as such. This is one step in that direction. I am ready for every other reasonable proposition tending to elevate, ennoble, and make happy the labor of my country.

Why, Mr. Chairman, there is a place for every kind of honorable employment, and they all command my fealty and respect. But when you sum it up—when you read the life of every nation in the checkered history of the world—the toilers are about the only men who do anything. Labor enters into and supports everything. Labor, which includes the farmer, is the backbone of the nation. It is the strong arm and stalwart son of America that holds up the ridgepole of our national structure, and spikes, through enduring centuries, the rafters of the home. He supports the Government, he breeds our children, nourishes and rejuvenates the race, he holds aloft the flag; and I repeat again that human toil of heart and brain and hand is the only true manhood, the only real nobility of the Republic—the aristocracy of democracy—and I am for anything that can give him an advantage and make him glad and prosperous. Therefore I am for this bill, to protect the wage-earner in the eminence of his high estate.

They talk of Chinese trade. They say this act may circumscribe it. Yes; I would like to have that trade. We are getting more and more of it. It is the great trade of the future to America. I believe we will still increase it. With our new possessions as a stepping stone, I believe we will walk right into the open door of that great market, a market born in the womb of 800,000,000 people. But, whatever happens, nothing can be gained by sacrificing the labor that produces the surplus we sell, by destroying the happiness and prosperity of millions of our best people at home for a commercial dream.

This country is wonderfully interested in markets to-day. The foreign market, in a degree, represents the weal or woe of our future prosperity. We now manufacture more than we can consume. We have an overplus of everything. But this Government of ours has more to think of than markets. It has men and women, flesh and blood, God and morality, our home and country to think of.

I believe in men, in the genius of American manhood. We can not long survive upon cheap and enslaving labor; we can not hope long to endure the ravages of an Asiatic industrial onslaught.

The real heroes of a nation are not alone in the sounding titles of ensanguined war, but they dwell in the silent grandeur of a quiet name. They live in the vine-clad cottage beneath the hill, kissed by all the suns of joy and filled by love and kindness, where all the day is work; and when the shadows fall, the man, but not the master, by the side of her who sits and smiles and sews for him; and on his knee laugh the little children, with their arms about his neck. [Applause.]

Labor is the great conqueror. It enriches and builds up a nation more permanently than the proudest battles, and in its ranks are the real soldiers of the earth. [Applause.]

Then let this bill pass. Let us so act that we may go home in the consciousness of a duty well performed, and be able to continue to say with a prouder boast than did that old Roman, "I thank God that I, too, am an American citizen!"

I thank God that we have protected and preserved the men who have taught "the stars to look our way and honor us." [Loud applause.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, there are to-day about 100,000 Chinese in the United States proper, 25,000 in Hawaii, and at least 250,000 in the Philippine Islands, with which our Government must deal. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] in discussing this bill yesterday intimated that Congress should be very cautious in this matter; that it should remember that when this country was a wilderness and our ancestors were building up the civilization of Europe China was possessed of an erudition and achievement about which we would do well to learn. Mr. Chairman, that civilization still exists, hoary with age. It has stood like a statue for over 3,000 years, and he who beholds its attainments sees what might have been seen when the Cæsars were holding sway in Rome.

Gentlemen need not worry themselves about the antiquated lore of China before the Christian era, nor of its history and pagan mythology. They should concern themselves about that new civilization of this country, which means progress and leaps with bounds which astonish the world. The gentleman seems to be impressed with the idea that there is no analogy between the negro and the Chinaman, and that the statement of my colleague [Mr. CLARK] that, like the negro, so long as the Chinaman had a drop of his own racial blood he was one of the race. He said there were Irish, Germans, and French in this country who carried their nationality; but he seems to forget that these are of our race, and so soon as they have become naturalized they are Americans. There is no such thing, in fact, as an Irish-American or German-American. For if a man is an American at all he has no foreign prefix to his nationality. Whether a Chinaman is born here or elsewhere, he is a Chinaman still, and never becomes Americanized nor interested in our Government or its institutions.

It is commendable to see a man proud of his foreign ancestry; but if he does not rejoice that he is an American, and place the Stars and Stripes high over all, he should return to the country whence he came, whether he is English, German, or Chinese. This home of the free is not to be the abiding place of the traitor, or the man whose interest is to degrade American labor, prostrate from Christianity, and debauch the morals of citizens of this country; and this is the effect of Chinese influence in America. But gentlemen say that we must encourage the trade of China; that no provision should be enacted in this bill that would make less trade with the Orient. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] well explained in his instructive address that no such condition results from exclusion of the Chinese, that such has not been the effect either in Europe or in America.

But suppose trade may be injured. Which is nearer to the American heart, the foreign commerce of this country or the well-being of its laborers? Others may pursue such course as they may, but, sir, I shall cling to the cause of American labor and try to protect it from the cooly labor of China. Gentleman should be more concerned in the homes and firesides of the laborers of this country than in the extension of trade to China, if loss must occur; but I am confident there is no true American that is not in sympathy with the extension of our material interests and will not herald with delight that which builds up her trade with the world, but I am not a disciple of that school of political faith that puts wealth above the man that produced it, nor trade above the security and protection of the individual in the enjoyment of the blessings of this free country. There is not a labor organization in the land that does not demand legislation at the hands of Congress.

Around the table of the humble toiler's home it is discussed; the farmer, concerned for the honor and purity of his household, is alike solicitous for positive and decisive legislation. There are two reports here for our consideration, and two bills to be passed upon. Which shall receive our sanction? In this connection I desire to call attention to a circular sent out by the representatives of the labor organizations of the United States on yesterday, which insists that the minority substitute should be adopted because it will more effectually and certainly bring about the desired end—the exclusion of the objectionable classes of Chinese. It states:

We regard the bill reported by the majority of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs as weak, imprudent, and full of defects, indicating want of information of the difficulties encountered by the Treasury Department in dealing with immigrants from China.

The bill recommended by the minority of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs is quite to our satisfaction.

Both these bills are intended to accomplish the same purpose, but those who are most vitally interested in the relief sought, who are to be the beneficiaries of the trade of China, and cursed with its cheap labor without legislation, ought to have consideration at the hands of Congress, and since all these elements agree that the substitute more effectually accomplishes the true object, I am in favor of adopting its provisions. Who is it that desires less stringent legislation? To whom have the majority made concessions, if anyone? The bills introduced and hearings taken show something of the pressure. It is the commercial demands, or rather the requests of commercial organizations. Yet neither the majority nor the minority have yielded wholly to that demand.

Organized capital asks the reenactment of the present law until 1904, when the commercial treaty between this country and China shall expire, and insists that the whole matter may be adjudicated. Their bill, known as the Proctor bill, simply extends the present law until December, 1904, when the treaty with China may expire. That treaty was made in 1894 and had this provision:

This convention shall remain in force for a period of ten years beginning with the date of the exchange of ratifications, and if six months before the expiration of the said period of ten years neither Government shall have formally given notice of its final termination to the other, it shall remain in full force for another like period of ten years.

The treaty, as you observe, will remain in force until 1914 unless one party or the other gives six months' notice of its intention to terminate the treaty. A bill of the kind proposed would have the effect of giving notice to China that in 1904, unless a new arrangement is made, all barriers will be removed and the Chinese may enter at will. It appears from the provisions of the treaty that wisdom would dictate that this country should make its exclusion law permanent, and then, unless notice is given to the contrary, all relations with China would be settled until 1914, and the question of the restriction of Chinese immigration would be settled until such time as the United States, through its lawmaking power, saw proper to change it.

To my mind the most serious proposition that presents itself is the question of exclusion from the Philippines and of keeping from the United States those now in its insular possessions. Many times more Chinese are found in those islands than among the States. Manila alone has more than the State of California. If these can be turned loose upon the States, which may be the case, of course, if they are citizens of the United States, it will have serious effect upon American labor; but I shall not attempt in the few moments at my disposal to argue this question, except to impress the hope that no evil shall come from this source. A serious difference between the majority and minority is on the question of the employment of Chinese sailors upon American vessels. Again I wish to quote from the circular of the American Federation of Labor sent out by Messrs. Gompers, Fuller, Furuseth, Bird, and Livernash:

We unite in asking that the new law for the exclusion of Chinese laborers shall contain a provision that American ships shall not carry as seamen Chinese persons not entitled to enter the United States.

The provision we favor was in the bill introduced by the Senators and Representatives from the Pacific States and approved by the national labor organizations and the California commission. That provision has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Immigration.

We are especially devoted to the provision. The American seaman has a right to protection from competition with Chinese laborers, and the needs of the American Navy in time of war should be considered.

It is erroneous to claim that the prohibition favored would cause American ships in our China trade to change their flags. American registry gives our vessels a monopoly of our carrying and passenger trade with Hawaii and the Philippines, foreign ships being debarred from participation in coastwise trade.

It is not true that white men can not work in the heat of stokeholds of China liners. White men exclusively are employed as stokers on our transports plying to the Philippines from San Francisco and also from the Atlantic coast. White men exclusively are employed as stokers on ships plying between San Francisco and Australia. White men exclusively are employed as stokers on our ships plying between Atlantic ports and the West Indies, Central America, and South America. The marine firemen of Atlantic and Pacific cities have within the last ten days adopted resolutions declaring a willingness to do the work Chinamen are now doing aboard American ships.

The American flag should float over American seamen. Every laborer on the vessels should be in sympathy with the starry emblem which floats at the masthead. Let this be termed sentiment, if you will; it is American spirit, and finds hearty response with the liberty-loving people of our land. Gentlemen need not think that all men are in favor of exclusion because there is such unanimity here. Many an advocate of free locomotion as applied to them can be found, and some appeared before the committee at its hearings. This bill and the substitute both have enemies concerned for their failure.

One of the most beautiful addresses I have read on this subject was that made by Mrs. John B. Allen before the Century Club, of Seattle, Wash., in January last, and she concluded that speech with this attractive statement, in all of which I fully concur, except as it applies to the Chinese:

Can our statesmen not stand on this broad and liberal platform and enact restriction laws that will eliminate the illiterate and immoral, the vicious and helplessly indigent, and not discriminate against any country, but let the hand of welcome be extended to the Occident as to the Orient? Let the Pacific bear the immigrant as well as the Atlantic. Let the only requisites be intelligence, sobriety, morality, and industry, obedience to our laws, and loyalty to our Government. And if they can not, do not lay aside bias and prejudice and listen to reason and argument, and do reenact this one-country exclusion act, then may God give President Roosevelt the courage of his convictions and nerve his hand to veto the measure.

But beside this plea for the Chinese I wish to place the statement of Mrs. Charlotte Smith, president of the Woman's National Industrial League of America, who appeared before the Senate Committee on Immigration and stated what she knew of Chinese influence in this country. Amongst other things she said:

In my investigations as president of the Woman's Rescue League, which is a branch of the Woman's National Industrial League, I found 175 women who had been baptized in the Christian faith living with Chinamen in New York in 1892. These women bring young pagans into the world, who, with their so-called husbands, worship in joss-house temples and become disciples of Confucius as well as opium fiends.

During the year 1889, in Washington, D. C., 564 Chinese were arrested. The majority were members of the Metropolitan Church Sunday school. Men and women, pipes and opium-joint paraphernalia were brought into the police court. Furthermore, the worst gamblers and most immoral opium-joint keepers were so-called Sunday school Chinese pupils.
